I followed her silently, and she noiselessly opened the door of the bedroom where the mistress lay. I shall never forget the picture of that young woman as she lay in death like stillness on the white bed, her face as white as the pillow over which streamed the raven like masses of her silky hair.

The delicate brows, the long, curling lashes were jet black, and the only color about this face of mourning lay in the full, red lips. It was strikingly like the face of Titian's sleeping Venus, and I inhaled its strange, sad beauty with my soul, as my brain was busy with the question of this woman's strange condition and its cause. I saw in an instant that she was heavily drugged and turned to the nurse for an explanation.

"She been dat way five hours," said the old woman "fust I thought she was asleep, den when she look like she done dald I sen fur you, den I fine dis bottle by her."

She handed me an empty morphine phial. I went immediately to work giving restoratives. By dint of coffee and compelling her to walk two hours she finally came to herself, and the old nurse, fairly fagged out, begged for a few minutes' rest, as I laid her mistress on the bed, and so the girl and I were left together.

She opened her eyes, now clear and brilliant, with a look of recognition full upon me. "You have brought me back," she cried reproachfully, "oh, why did you do it?"

"Through duty and through humanity," I said calmly. She arose upon her elbow and her eyes flashed passionately.

"Through humanity," she cried. "Is it humanity to bring back to life an utterly wretched woman? Did you think to save me from hell by it? Why hell would be sweet to me, compared to this place. You are brutal, inhuman!"

"But think of your child," I protested. "The little girl's soul given into your keeping."

"My child," she cried. "Ah! that only makes me more wretched. You didn't know I took opium, too?"

A surprised stare was my answer, and she continued:

"Yes, I commenced taking it shortly after we were married. He gave it to me and I was coward enough to take it.

"Anything for oblivion; anything to make me forget his existence and my own. I didn't know the child was coming then. I didn't think God would be so merciless as to send me a child after that. Well, when the child came I longed for death more than ever. What sort of mother was I for the rearing of a girl—an innocent, clean souled girl? We have had terrible scenes here today. I think he is asleep now in the other room. Don't you hear him?"

I listened as the sound of that weird, stentorous breathing reached me, and an uncontrollable shudder crept over me.

"Ah, you shudder just to hear him," she laughed wildly. "Imagine living with him; imagine his alternate moods of snarling imbecility and passionate, ungovernable rage. Then think of my going on in this way and growing like him. Think of our being the parents of an innocent child. I shall never have that baby grow up to know me as her mother. I shall do her the one kind act of dying."

I tried to pacify the poor creature with all the arguments and kindly consolations I could think of, but to little avail. I spoke of reformation. I promised myself to take her to an asylum where she could be cured. She shook her head sadly.

"They are never cured," she said. "They lie and say they are, but it's always a lie. Before I married him he swore he was cured, and I believed him. I was a fool and he was a liar."

It was past midnight when I left her, apparently quiet. She had promised to go to sleep, and the old nurse lay on a cot at her feet.

The next morning she was dead, and the story of her death was kept a secret. The old nurse knew that it came from a hidden bottle of morphine, and so did I, but we kept the fact and she received a Christian burial.

A week later the husband left the city with his child, and his home and property were all advertised for sale. Where he went none knew, and he faded out of the life that had known him as a shadow passes away with the sun.

Fifteen years after that I entered an apartment in New York with three young physicians, who had persuaded me to go fortune telling with them that evening. The strange story I have just told had come vividly up to me by the fact that I discovered one of these young men to be the son of the woman's lover. The room we entered was the queerest I have ever seen. The walls were of polished panels of ebony, hung with bright pictures, and having a deep frieze of poppies on an ebony ground.

The carpet was crimson, strewn over with black fur rugs, and the furniture was ebony, upholstered in crimson Persian silk. There were crimson silk shaded lamps here and there, and beside one sat a strange figure, which arose to greet us as we entered.

"That's the sorceress," whispered Darley (the young man I mentioned; his real name I will not give).

The woman was a small, slender creature, all decked in red satin and black lace. Her high heeled red satin shoes were beaded in black, and in the black masses of her hair glittered a crescent of rubies.

Her face was very dark; she had immense black eyes and a crooked mouth, with little dimples at the corners, and teeth brilliantly white. She bowed and smiled to the whole of us, and then her keen, comprehensive glance fell upon Darley. Her face grew suddenly sad and clouded.

"You have an urgent destiny to fulfill," she said. "You have a life to save from present and future perdition. It comes to you as a recompense for two unhappy lives. The story of it all is a terrible one.

"I can but dimly see it, but what I see fills me with horror. I am sorry you came. I am always affected by the fortunes of the people I tell. I can't talk any more now. Leave me, and then all can come some other time for your fortunes. I am very tired."

She sank into her deep crimson chair, and closed her eyes. We left her silently, awed and impressed against our wills.

When we entered the cool air of the October night the young fellows commenced jesting over the scene.

"She's a queer one," said Valentine. "Has lots of believers among the fashionable people, and makes loads of money."

"Confound her," said Darley, with a nervous shrug. "I wish she'd singled out some one else for her uncanny predictions."

"Where shall we go next?" That was the question we stood and asked each other as we reached Twenty-third street.

"Perhaps you'd like to see some of the opium dives?" suggested Marlowe.

"As I'm in for anything uncanny you fellows propose, I think, perhaps, I should."

"Well, there's one here that I know of which is decidedly different from the usual run. You hear of their luxury and all that, but this is the only luxurious one in all New York. It's kept by an old man—a Chinaman, presumably—and a young girl about whom there is nothing Chinese. She's a beautiful creature, and people go there to see her, and she fills their pipes and sings them songs with a look of loathing and scorn upon her face, passionate enough to scare a man with delirium tremens into his senses. I have access to this place, having got the drop on the old man through professional knowledge of some of his proceedings."

To this place we went, reaching it through many ways too complicated for description. At last the queer, crooked little dwarf who met us at the entrance drew apart the rich curtains of the apartment. Along the walls were divans of rich material, upon which reposed forms in the abandonment of drugged sleep.

A dim, crimson glow pervaded the room, and about in this mystical light glided the wraith like figure of a girl clad in shimmering yellow satin, gold embroidered. The figure of the old Chinaman arose from its half reclining position on the richly carpeted floor and bowed with cringing politeness before Marlowe. The man was richly clad in a Chinese robe, gorgeously embroidered. I examined his face curiously. It was not a Chinese face. The complexion, despite the paint, was that of a Caucasian.

The eyebrows were painted into thin, slanting shape, and the full, sensual lips could have never belonged to any one save a Mixade Chinaman. The face recalled something familiar—something I have seen before and liked not the memory of it. As I was pondering over the strange figure the girl came up to us. She held a golden bowl, filled with pipes, in her hands.

"Will you have one?" she asked sullenly, and yet in a voice strangely soft and musical.

I looked up to closely examine the face of this strange young being. The black lashed lids were downcast, and the face, my God! it was the very face of the woman who lay lifeless before me fifteen years before. I felt myself grow weak, and young Darley lay his strong hand on my shoulder.

"Is anything the matter?" he asked.

"Perhaps he's had too much already," I heard the girl say contemptuously.

I saw Darley's gaze fixed like one spellbound upon her, and for the first time she lifted her eyes, and I saw them meet his. In hers lay an infinite, dogged sorrow, like the anguish of some dumb brute; in his lay an infinite tenderness and pity. I knew these two beings had met their destiny.

Two years after this I went to New York, and Darley brought his young wife to see me, and I told them my story and they told me theirs.

After their first meeting he went to the place ostensibly as a patron, but really to watch and study the horrible life of this young creature. He gained her confidence and learned the terrors and misery of her life. The story is too bad, too horrible, for repetition. The girl had kept her purity, but she said sadly to me, "I wonder if all the love and tenderness of my husband and all the deep repentance of a lifetime can wash from my hands the guilt of aiding my fellow mortals to that which is more horrible than death."

Her husband put his arms around her tenderly. "I think God has forgiven your unwilling sin," he said, "and at least he has been kind to bring light and happiness finally out of the darkness and disappointment of two lives now passed away."—Maude Andrews in Atlanta Constitution.

Immigrants in the United States.

Never has immigration from foreign countries to the United States been so great as during the decade just passed. It is stated that in 1878 the number of aliens arriving in this country was 138,469; in 1883, ten years later, it was 546,889; in 1889 the number was 444,427, of whom 432,819 came from Europe. Of these Europeans the Germans stand at the head of the list with 99,538, or a little more than one-fifth. The English are next, 68,508; the Irish, with 65,557; the Swedes, with 35,415; and the Italians, with 25,307. The total number of immigrants arriving from 1820 to 1855 was 4,212,614, a yearly average of 120,360; the number arriving during the nine years ending with 1889 was 5,565,848, a yearly average of 618,427.

Butter as an Oiler.

A French machinist has invented a new lubricant called dynamine and it is being introduced in France. It has the consistency of butter, which it also resembles in color, and it does not inflame at a temperature lower than about 420 degs., its melting point being 183 degs. It is free from resinous matter and drying oils, is not acid, and has no chemical action on metals.—New York Journal.

MATABELE DANCE.

A Gorgeous Spectacle Witnessed in the Interior of South Africa.

HARVEST FESTIVAL OF THE NATIVES

Ten Thousand Soldiers Take Part in the "Big Dance."—Everything Gives Way to the Fete.

The "Big Dance" of the Matabele army, held annually at Buluwayo, has been described as the sight of South Africa by those few travelers who have penetrated into these hitherto almost unknown parts of the interior.

The "Small Dance" takes place when the crops are two-thirds grown, on the last day of the moon, and is a parade and dance of the troops living in or near Buluwayo, there being generally about 1,500 to 2,000 men present. During the three weeks which follow the Small Dance Lobengula retires from public business, and government is conducted by the three "dance doctors."

Lobengula invited the party to visit his kraal and witness a private dance of the Imbizus. This regiment numbered some 600 men, in undress, namely, they carried no shields, assegais or ostrich feathers, but wore their usual aprons of leopard, gray monkey or tiger-cat skin, with a circle of jackal tails dangling from their waist belts. Round their legs were coils of brass and iron bangles, and most of them carried on their heads a jackal tail, so worn that it stood straight up on one side of the head.

The dance commenced by the warriors rushing into the "Sigadhlo," or chief's inner and private kraal, in three companies. They then went through some curious maneuvers, which can be compared only to certain figures in a monster ballet. One division rushed from one side upon the remainder, meeting in the centre of the ground and then breaking away again back to their own side, performing wild fantastic motions with extraordinary regularity.

They then formed one dense line with a front of 100 men and six deep, and chanted wild praises of their chief, stamping first one foot, and then, after facing round, the other, always in perfect time and waving their arms and hands in unison. After an hour of this incessant chanting and dancing their "dance sticks" (straight staves about three feet long) were given them by attendants in the rear, and then as one man they kept waving them, first to the right and then to the left, and from time to time thrusting them furiously at the ground in time with their tune, the leg bangles giving a loud crash as their feet came down. Hardly a man was under six feet in height, many being taller. All were in splendid condition and showed magnificent physique. Every now and again some would bound wildly into the air, always, however, maintaining time with the remainder.

They formed up in one large semicircle, and, by special order, chanted the "Upraised Shield," or war song, very seldom allowed to be sung, and very plaintive in its cadence. After this song was finished three large lumps of raw meat, the dismembered joints of three royal bullocks, were given to the men; in a minute all the beef was snatched up, but not without many a struggle over the prime pieces.

The next day Buzungwan, the head dance doctor, arrived and fixed the following day for the "Big Dance." Eight hundred bullocks were distributed among the troops and at once killed for use on the following day, as on the "Big Dance" day, or "Feast of Purification," no shedding of blood is allowed, and all the natives bathe in the river early in the morning. At noon the troops, who were divided into seven large divisions—Buluwayo, Ikapa, Inxobo, Amabuto, Amakuda, Manyama and Mahlope—marched on to the grounds, in round numbers 9,000 to 10,000 men. They looked extremely well with their large headdresses of ostrich feathers, which covered the backs of their heads like helmets and extended over both shoulders. All had the national kilts formed of skins and tails hanging from their waists, and above their calves were fringes of long white hair. In their left hands they carried the large elliptic shields of ox hide and their assegais, in their right the "dance sticks," with which about every third step they struck their shields, keeping time with their songs. After marching round the ground they formed one solid line, four deep and about 1,000 yards long, the flanks inclining like an arc. The Induna of each division had so told off his men that they appeared to be in companies, as distinguished by their shields; first came a company with black shields, followed by ones with black and white, all white, nearly all black, and red shields. The general effect produced was excellent.

Presently thirty-six of Lobengula's wives, gaudily arrayed in blue skirts and bright orange shawls worn over the shoulder, appeared. Each carried many pounds' weight of bright beads, and had the hair decked out with the royal feathers of the blue jay. They filed slowly from their own quarters on to the parade, and then breaking up into groups of four and five they slowly paced up and down before the troops with a peculiar gait, all the time chanting and waving supple wands. Lobengula was too gouty to leave his bath chair, and, covered with streaks of medicine paint, sat facing the center of the line. In the background were thousands of native spectators. Then the sacred black oxen were driven past, and, at a signal given by Buzungwan, the whole line charged furiously up to the chief and the line of spectators.

According to national custom, all the troops now moved to drive the sacred oxen into the veldt and back again. While this was being done the black clouds which had threatened thunder burst into quite a storm and the spectators all retired for shelter. But in an hour out came the sun again, and the troops, who had reformed line in the heavy rain, chanted and brandished their shields and sticks as before, and every now and then some old warrior would rush out of the ranks, and, feigning to kill a foe with his assegai, would shout out his former prowess in war. This went on for two hours, when the men were dismissed to their camps to feast and make merry.

The day after the dance is called the "slaughter day," when the chief selects 400 or 500 cattle from the national herds, to which all fines are paid in oxen. Then follows a wild scene, as the Induna of each regiment sets to work stabbing with his assegai the cattle given to the men under his command. All the black bullocks, when killed, are set apart that night for the spirits, but on the following or "eating day" their flesh is distributed to the troops. The next and last day of the dance is the "drinking day," when, after a couple of hours' dancing in the afternoon, the "sacred beer," of which there were 216 large calabashes in all, was given out to about 3,000 warriors, and they were regaled by the chief with steamed meat from 176 huge earthen jars, which had been cooking all the morning in the "sigadilo."—

ALPHABET ON TWINE.

How Facts and Ideas Have Been Recorded on Cord by Blind Men.

Many years ago two men in Edinburgh, Robert Milne and David Macbeath, who were both blind, invented an alphabet of knots tied upon a string, which was not only of a simple nature, but capable of expressing ideas of the most abstruse kind and of recording facts of any description. This invention was quite original; neither of the inventors had ever heard either of the Peruvian quipos or the Jewish cords. In their efforts they were only guided by a desire of producing something which might be useful to their brethren in the same unfortunate condition and of communicating at a distance with each other.

This string alphabet was a great deal more simple than those of the Peruvians. The twenty-six letters of the alphabet are divided into seven classes, proceeding straightforward from A to Z. Each class consists of four letters, with the exception of the first class, which comprehends but two. The first four letters, or A B C D, are each formed by a large round knot; the second four, or E F G H, by a knot projecting from the string; the third four, or I J K L, by a knot vulgarly called a drummer's plait; the fourth four, or M N O P, by a simple noose; the fifth four, or Q R S T, by a noose with a string drawn through it; the sixth four, or U V W X, by a noose with a net knot formed upon it; and the seventh class, or Y and Z, by a twisted noose. Thus, there are just seven different kinds of knots to indicate the whole letters of the alphabet.

But to distinguish each of the four letters in a class from the others, the expedient was adopted of adding a common small knot at a lesser or greater distance from the letter to which it belongs. By this the letter A is indicated only by the knot of the class to which it belongs; B is the same knot repeated, but close to it is a small common knot; C is the same knot repeated, with the small knot half an inch distant, and D is the same knot repeated, with the small knot an inch distant.

The same plan goes on throughout; so that, by first feeling the kind of knot, and then feeling whether it has a small knot attached, and at what distance, any letter can be instantly told. The length of this string alphabet is little more than three feet, and any blind individual with the ordinary sense of touch may learn the whole in an hour.—New York Ledger.

A Queer Occupation.

"Ant farmers," though only numbering a half dozen or so in Paris, are by no means to be overlooked in a study of odd trades. One, for instance, rejoices in the name of Mlle. Blanche. She is not prepossessing in appearance. Her skin looks like dried pippins, and is tanned like crocodile hide. She has leather guantlets and trousers, a regular coat of armor, but, notwithstanding this, she is gnawed and bitten by her ungrateful stock to such an extent that she is perfectly hideous. She sleeps in the middle of the sacks of ants, and her epidermis has become so insensible to the bites of those insects that she slumbers soundly and sweetly while hundreds of them are endeavoring to extract a meal from her thick skin.

She was some time ago compelled to remove her quarters to a spot just outside of Paris, because the neighbors not unreasonably objected to the stray members of her farm skirmishing on their own account in the pantries of the adjoining houses. Mlle. Blanche supplies breeders and keepers of pheasants, the zoological gardens, aquariums and large bird dealers with ants' eggs, and receives never less than ten large flour sacks of ants a day from Germany and elsewhere. By keeping them in a great heat and feeding them well they are induced to lay a vast quantity of eggs. It is interesting to record that Mlle. Blanche is by this time possessed of a handsome fortune.—Philadelphia Times.

Queer Happenings in Cemeteries.

It is the drawback of suburban cemeteries that they must be kept under lock and key. Whoever sees the uses they are put to could not think otherwise. One day in Mount Auburn a young woman was noticed making a careful toilet. She had a small hand glass propped against the sculpture of a marble monument. Her long hair was down and being elaborately combed before the mirror. That same day a youth read aloud, with oratorical gestures, from a manuscript, evidently some graduation paper, and a couple, evidently husband and wife, ventilated matrimonial grievances. Last autumn a newly wedded pair neglected the closing signal. When they reached the gates no guardian or official was to be found. All were gone for the night. Even the secretary's office was closed. The florist opposite fortunately heard the clamor they made. He brought a ladder, perhaps two, and passers by enjoyed the spectacle of bride and groom climbing over the high wall.—Cambridge Tribune.

A Popular Librarian.

I dropped into the congressional library and asked Mr. Spofford as to the condition of the great American brain. Mr. Spofford is the man who gives out all the copyrights in the United States, and every intellectual enterprise that starts must first come to him. He is a wiry little anatomy of skin, bone and brain, with a face as dark as that of a Spaniard, and with a body which is the personification of nervous activity. His forehead is broad, his eyes are as black as jet, and his thick hair and beard are now tinged with gray. During the past twenty-five years he has by proxy contributed more to The Congressional Record than any man in Washington. Congressmen go to him for all sorts of information, and get it. He has the title of every one of the half million odd books in this biggest library of the country on his tongue's end, and he knows where to find information on all topics from cooking to theology.—Frank G. Carpenter's Letter.

NEVER SATISFIED.

Discontent, the Power that Pushes People Upward and Onward.

THE GOAL WHICH IS NEVER REACHED

Striving for Happiness.—The Problem of Progress into Which the Thoughtful Man Sees Deeply.

Eager, enthusiastic and sanguine people always expect to feel unbounded satisfaction in the actual possession of that which they strive for. The boy longs to be a man; the youth craves independence; one looks forward to marriage as his ideal of bliss, another yearns for wealth, one covets position, another power; one hungers for knowledge, another for skill, one sighs for opportunity, another for ability. Whatever be the goal of their ambition, they believe that to be the one thing without a flaw, the one thing which is to insure their happiness and in the possession of which their enthusiasm is never to grow cold and their happiness never to fade.

When this goal is reached, and it often is, how are these sanguine expectations realized? Is the mind content and satisfied? Is the pleasure unsullied? Do the glowing colors continue as bright as before? Does their buoyancy receive no check? They have gained their point, they have secured what they desired, but have they realized what they anticipated? Has the success been so very successful after all?

Probably most of those who have had these experiences will have to confess that while in the first flush of possession all was joyful excitement, yet in a short time that feeling gave way to a calmer and more dispassionate view of its value. Certain flaws and defects that would have been utterly scouted became apparent; it grew to be a commonplace and ordinary possession, and however unwilling they might be to part with it, yet it was no longer upon that, but upon other things still out of reach that their interest and enthusiasm were centered.

Mr. Philip Hamerton, speaking of the present attitude of the French people toward a republican form of government, gives an apt illustration of this truth. He says: "The republican sentiment, though resolute as to the preservation of republican forms, has certainly become wonderfully cool. The coolness of the young men is especially remarkable and significant. They are mostly republicans, it is true, and have no belief in the possibility of a monarchical restoration, but the more intelligent of them see the difficulties and the defects of a republican government very plainly and they have a tendency to dwell upon those difficulties and defects in a manner that would astonish the militant republicans of the past. This composed and rational temper is the state of mind that comes upon all of us after the settled possession of an object, and it is a sign of possession." Most of us can cite instances to match this both in public and private affairs nearer home.

The chief point to be considered, however, is whether this result is or is not to be deplored. Some regard it among the bitter experiences of life, showing merely the transitory and shallow nature of all happiness and the futility of all hopes. "Of what use is it," they say, "to strive and labor for that which, when attained, loses its power of blessing and cheering us? Why encourage an enthusiasm that must fade away and hold up an ideal that is presently to be trodden under foot?" So they sink into pessimism and come to believe that all is vanity and vexation of spirit. But the thoughtful and intelligent man sees far deeper into the problem than this. He has discovered that in this very truth, held to be so mournful, lies the kernel of all progress.

All the rose colored hopes that we indulge, all the attractive future spread out in such fair proportions to our imagination, lure us on to energy and effort. What does it matter that we exaggerate its importance, that we expect impossible effects from it, that all its defects and disadvantages are entirely hidden from our sight? Were it not so, how much of our striving would come to an end! And when we attain these objects, what more natural than that, the excitement of pursuit being over and the tension of mind relaxed, a calmness of spirit should follow and an ability to judge of its excellences and its disadvantages more dispassionately and more correctly.

Suppose the enjoyment is less keen and the satisfaction less complete than we had anticipated. Should the mere pleasure felt in success be the main object of our striving? Satisfaction indeed can only be a transient emotion to an intelligent and advancing man or woman. Were it a permanent condition of mind there could be no further progress.

Take, for example, the youth who longs for a higher education and tries, through many obstacles, to obtain it. At length the opportunity comes, and his wishes are crowned with success. Yet his delight, at first very keen, gradually subsides into a calm serenity.

He comes by degrees to understand the meaning of his opportunity, its difficulties, its sacrifices, its labor and the new field of hope and aspiration which it opens up. He no longer rests satisfied with the opportunity for which he longed; his enthusiasm now takes another form; his hopes are raised to a higher level; his energies are engaged in taking advantage of the fortunate occasion, and he now looks with equal earnestness to the time when he shall have finished his course and begun the life work which he has planned.

And when that time comes he will go through the same experience. His glad enthusiasm will be transferred to a still higher altitude, and his new ideal will draw him still onward and upward. Is there anything sad or bitter in such an experience? Is there any loss of real happiness in this fading away of temporary pleasure? It is indeed the only road to happiness that is worthy of a noble man or woman—that happiness which follows the vigorous use of the faculties and the constant pressing upward to higher and higher attainments.

A NEEDLESS FAILURE IN A GARDEN.

Before I made my garden, O! I was a happy man,
I read the seed store catalogues and joyfully would plan
How lots of luscious veg'tables I easily could raise,
And figured up the profits that, they say, a garden pays

Of patent fertilizers, fancy garden tools and seeds
I bought about as many as a western farmer needs;
I hired men that wouldn't work, and, rising with the lark,
I dug till time for business and finished in the dark

After I made my garden, O! I was a woful man,
The chickens scratched my pretty beds, the dogs upon them ran
The cats pitched battles on them fought, the cows ate all my corn,
And a hog that tried to bite me always rooted there at morn.

Then came a drought that burned to dust my garden; then a flood
And pelting hail and hurricane turned everything to mud;
Then, like the plagues of Egypt, swarmed upon me flies and bugs,
Inch worms, moles, cut worms, locusts, caterpillars, crows and slugs

With paris green, tobacco, sulphur, soot and hellebore
I dosed that insect army, but they only cried for more;
I spoiled my clothes and patience in the blazing sun and rain,
And got myself so dirty that I always missed the train

All summer long I wrestled, while my perspiration drops,
I think, would fill the barrels I had ready for my crops,
And though I wasn't able to supply one dinner's needs,
I took the prize of champion for raising famous weeds

Before I made my garden, O! I was a happy man,
But afterwards my troubles and experience began
Now, if some city greenhorn like myself would care to reap
The profits of a garden, I will sell out very cheap

The Ruling Passion.

When I was traveling to New Haven on an accommodation I thought that the whole state of Connecticut had its attention fixed on the fact that I was to make a speech to the law school graduates at Yale. When a farmer got on at a way station, and after looking at me five minutes asked me if I wasn't Chauncey Depew, I said to myself, "Here is an intelligent son of an intelligent state. He is going on to hear my speech." He confirmed my impression by asking: "Are you going up to New Haven? But when I answered "Yes," he simply said: "Baseball game, I s'pose?"—Interview with Chauncey Depew.

No Use as a Lamp.

A stall keeper on the central market, who had been "stuck" with a number of green melons, plugged one yesterday, poured a pint of kerosene into the hole, and after waiting a quarter of an hour gave it to a colored man. The latter sat down on a box to eat it, but after removing the plug and taking a smell he arose and returned the melon to the stand.

"What's the matter?" asked the donor.

"Ize much obliged, but I couldn't use it onless you'd frow in a chimbly an' a wick, an' dat would be axin' too much of anybody."—Detroit Free Press.

Ornithology.

I was very, very tired, and I didn't care to eat,
But I felt I really ought to take a bite,
So I sought a quiet cafe on a quiet little street,
And I ordered there a supper very light.

"I only want a swallow," I remarked unto mine host,
"Because I'm very tired, and I have no appetite;
A reed bird you may bring me on a bit of gravied toast,
To sustain my sated stomach and to keep me through the night."

The bird was soon brought to me on a bit of gravied toast,
On a platter that was very large and narrow
But I really couldn't eat it; "For," I said unto mine host,
"This swallow's not a reed bird, but a sparrow."

Floy's Flowers.

Little Floy, 6 years old, has a flower garden of her own, of which she is wonderfully proud.

She and her father are great rivals, on this score—Mistress Floy stoutly maintaining that her posies are "ever so sweeter than papa's."

The other morning she gathered a little bunch of her own sweet pea blossoms, and then another of her father's, and with one in each hand skipped gayly into the house, calling triumphantly:

"O mamma, mamma, just smell the difference!"—Youth's Companion.

The Shaving Process.

He had a note he wanted to discount, and he went down to a broker's office. They had some haggling, and finally the broker shaved it pretty heavily and gave him the money. As he put it in his pocket the customer looked quietly at the broker and said:

"Do you cut hair, too?"—San Francisco Chronicle.

Older Than He Looked.

A very young man applied for the hand of a wealthy man's daughter.

"My dear boy, you are too young to marry. You are only a child," replied the parent.

Boy (proudly)—"I am, eh! Why, I have had two attacks of rheumatism in the last six months."—Texas Siftings.

Joseph's Pants.

My little two-year old has added something new to the story of Joseph and his brethren. I told him the Bible version of the story, and he seemed much interested in Joseph's coat of many colors. When I had finished he said: "Papa, tell me about his pants."—Home Maker.

Sweet Forgetfulness.

"What do you think of Miss Flyrte, Mr Smallcash?" asked the landlady innocently, and Mr Smallcash replied:

BUDDHISM.

A Statement About Some of its Mysterious Phases.

TEACHING OF REBIRTH EXPLAINED.

The Fundamental Rules Upon Which the Whole Religion of Buddha is Built.—The Nirvana.

A deep Buddhistical vein is now going through the modern world of western nations, having become especially forceful and penetrating since the period when Schopenhauer erected his philosophical system, more or less, on the very old teachings of Buddha Gautama.

There is no want of comprehensive scientific works in reference to Buddhism, and poets also have been unable to resist the great attraction of the doctrines of this Indian sage, as is shown in the works of Richard Wagner, which are largely influenced by the ground thoughts of Buddhism. The Samsara and Nirvana have become current expressions of many of our modern poets, not only in their descriptions of scenes relating to the world in which we live, but also in their pictures of salvation from this world of error, guilt, suffering, birth and death. The doctrine of Buddhism, of rebirth, that is, the continued reincorporation of our real spiritual being, forms the fundamental principle of the great Asiatic religions.

The doctrine of the rebirth is alone sufficient to explain to the Buddhists the mystery of existence; it explains why the righteous man is often so poor and despised, while the evildoer enjoys riches and honor, it replies to the despairing question, addressed constantly, but vainly, to heaven by millions of souls, "Why have we to suffer and endure so much?" It explains that indestructible as are the forces of nature and matter, so likewise is the innermost being of man. Death is no annihilation, but only the passing over from one feeble form into another; whosoever takes pleasures in this world, there is none to gainsay him, neither a god nor a devil can rob him of them, but he must abide by the consequences.

FOUR CARDINAL TRUTHS.

Man's real fate depends solely on his inward being, on his own will, and he has the prospect of countless rebirths, in which he will earn the fruits of both his good and his evil deeds. But to him who is weary of this unceasingly renewed existence, and will earnestly strive for freedom and release, is opened a way of redemption. The cause of suffering, death and rebirth is the will to live, which fills us all; the desire of individual existence in this or in some other world.

The will to live in Buddhistical sense is not only the conscious will, but that unconscious life force which dwells in all creatures and organisms, in animals and plants, as well as in man. Only by abandoning this will, and by totally suppressing the desire for an individual existence in this or in some future world, can man ever be freed and redeemed and reach eternal peace.

The road to this release, to Nirvana, we can find through the recognition of four healing truths, viz., the truth of suffering, the truth of the cause of suffering, the truth of the cessation of suffering and the truth of the way which will lead to cessation from suffering.

Buddha teaches that it is because of our nonrecognition of these four cardinal truths that we have to travel so long the mournful and dreary road of rebirths. But when the truths are once fully recognized and acted upon the will to live disappears, the longing which leads to renewed existence ceases, and the Samsara is a thing of the past. There are two roads of error, brethren, which he who is striving for freedom from earth-dominion may not travel.

The one, the longing to satisfy our passions and sense desires of whatever kind, is low, mean, dishonorable and destructive; it is the road on which travel the children of this world. The other, the asceticism and self torture, is somber, painful and utterly useless.

THE NIRVANA.

The middle road alone, which has been found by the one who has attained perfection, avoids these two error roads, opens the eyes, imparts self knowledge and leads to peace, to truth, to enlightenment, to Nirvana.

The Nirvana, according to the explanation of the Buddhist scholar, is a condition of holy peace, accompanied by the indestructible certainty of obtained freedom and release. Nirvana means, literally, to be extinguished. The will to live, the longing for earthly joys, here or somewhere else, is extinguished. The false idea that material goods can have any value or be lasting has evaporated. Gone is the flame of sensuality and selfishness.

Although it is possible to reach Nirvana already in this life, an extremely small number are able to accomplish it. Our mental and moral condition, through the effect of deeds in former births, is generally so deficient that many rebirths are needed before we can arrive at this haven of peace. But to obtain a rebirth under favorable conditions is within the power of every one who earnestly strives for it. It solely depends on the wish to live which dwells in all of us and forms the kernel of our existence.

The nature of our rebirth depends entirely on our deeds, and is regulated by merit and guilt as exhibited in our former lives. If our merit is greatest, we shall be born again in a higher state or world and under favorable conditions. If, however, we have subjected ourselves to heavy guilt through evil deeds, a rebirth in a lower place, and rich in sorrow and suffering, is the necessary and inevitable result. The consequences depend on our Karma, the moral law of the world, of which the physical law, as seen by us, is only the sensual and temporal appearance. Karma is that which other religions designate as divine purpose, providence or fate.—Arena.

Men Who Carry Money.

The rich never carry much money. There are millionaires who never carry more than one dollar to five dollars habitually. They have a theory that they are more likely to be "held up" than anybody else and are always afraid of being robbed. It is one of the penalties of wealth. The robber would be more apt to find money in greater quantity on the body of one of their clerks. The clerk has no bank account and carries his little surplus in his trousers pocket. The pocket check book is the safeguard of the millionaire.—New York Herald.

A street fakir in Boston deliberately broke some glass bottles of perfume upon the sidewalk, and the odor arising attracted the passing crowds to his wares, which he talked up earnestly and long with the result of satisfactory sales. For ways that are vain and tricks that are various the Chinee does not greatly surpass the American sidewalk merchant.

FRIDAY, JULY 29.....1892

With Benjamin and Jacob on the Republican ticket, Joseph in the corn lands, the Esaus in the mills and factories, ought to know who have usurped their patrimony.

"Quiet and harmony reigns in San Francisco," says the dispatch relative the recent Republican primaries in that city. How could it be otherwise when Kelly and Crimmins have everything the irown way and Col. Dan Burns is "up stumpum, in swampum, non est comeatibus," as the Missouri constable put it. There are occasions when "history repeats itself" and this is one of them. We have heard of the Dutch taking Holland.

'To Paris and back for £5" is the title of a clever one-act comedy written in England some years ago. It costs more to get there from this country, if you hear our solemn vow. Paris and its environs now contain the families of five thousand protected merchants and manufacturers. It is on the specious plea of "keeping the money in the country" that an American workman pays $5 for a pair of breeches which he could get in England for $3. It is this profit that enables the fast young men of New York and Philadelphia to spend their summers on the continent, you know.

Here is only one instance of how "protection to American industry" works under McKinleyism. One of the most profitable industries in the country is sugar growing, and the planters of Louisiana made vast fortunes out of it. Improvements in machinery during recent years made the business still more profitable. But the iron-kings of Pensylvania wanted more "protection," and in order to help them get it a bribe in the shape of a bounty was given to the sugar growers. For the final year ending on the last day of June there had been paid out of the United States Treasury sugar bounties to the amount of $7, 330,046. Every dollar of this vast sum except $264,761 was paid to the planters of Louisiana, and every citizen of the United States was taxed for the benefit of men who were already making great profits in their business. McKinleyism enables a few by "log rolling" to rob the many.

Nearly five hundred years ago a farm laborer raised himself to be one of the greatest potentates in Italy. He had undaunted courage; was utterly void of conscience; would poison an opponent or stab him in the back; was utterly ignorant of such learning as then existed; regarded religion and the church with contempt, but knew how to control men by appealing to their selfishness, their greed or their superstition. Carnegie appears to have most of the qualities of Sforza except courage. The Italian was always in the front of the fight with his hired ruffians; but Carnegie sent agents into the slums to gather up his cut-throats, and when it was time to fight placed himself far out of danger in a palace in Scotland. It looks as if an attempt is to be made to divide up the United States as Italy was divided into principalties in the middle ages. Duke of Homestead would sound as well as Duke of Milan, and Duke of Palo Alto would sound as grandly as Duke of Florence.

The Traffic Association of San Francisco has issued an address to the people of the State urging united action to obtain relief from railroad oppression. One of the first reforms needed is to abolish the Board of Railroad commissioners. This Board has now been in operation twelve years and in all that time has been the most useful tool owned by the corporation. It is clothed with absolute power under the law to regulate freights and fares. It does, and always has done nothing else than carry out the orders of the railroad magnates. The Board cannot be reached by law, and the only way to obtain relief from these bribed rascals is by amending the constitution so that the Board can be abolished. These are the views of the ablest and most respectable business men of San Francisco 'expressed' through the Traffic Association. The address urges that in the coming election no men be sent to the Legislature except such as have intelligence enough not to be blindly led, and integrity and firmness that they will not betray the people. It will be the fault of the people themselves if relief is not secured from robbery that reaches every nook and corner of the State, plunderers to whom every man pays tribute.

COMPARISON.

With a frown on her brow
And a pout on her lips,
She seems sweeter far
Than most women are Whose foreheads, I vow,
Are smooth all the while,
And who fairly eclipse
A saint with their smile;
With a frown on her brow
And a pout on her lips!

With cold tears in her voice
And deep woe on her face,
She fascinates more
Than a whole motley score
Of maids who rejoice
In the pleasures of earth,
Whose features show trace
But of laughter and mirth;
With cold tears in her voice,
And deep woe on her face!
—Yankee Blade.

Looks on the Bright Side of Things.

Devices for bringing this boy to a sense of the material disadvantages of wrongdoing have been tried, but his uniformly happy disposition is proof against the punitive influence of any of them. If he is sent to bed early because he has so torn and soiled his clothes as to be unpresentable in the drawing room, he turns up the next morning with a beaming smile and some remark about the delicious rest he has had. If his diet is reduced to plain bread and water for the violation of a rule of the table, he discovers—without the slightest hypocrisy, mind you—what uncommonly fine bread the cook bakes, and how much better water quenches the thirst than milk or cambric tea.

If he is kept indoors because he has abused a privilege of the yard or street, he sets cheerfully about amusing himself in the house, just as content apparently to lie on his back for hour after hour and indulge in day dreams as to do anything else, and the chances are that when it is all over his little voice will be raised in praise of the comforts of homes in general and of his own in particular. The only punishment he seems to dread is a whipping. That has been resorted to sparingly and always for some overt and aggressive act which was wholly without excuse; never for a mere matter of habit, however reprehensible.—Babyhood.

Laws Against Low Necked Dresses.

A correspondent who has been unfavorably impressed by the recent police raids suggests a new field for official activity in the protection of public morality, as follows:

I find in my scrapbook a newspaper clipping where, under the heading of "Old Pennsylvania Laws," appears the following:

"If any white female of ten years or upward shall appear in any public street, lane, highway, church, court house, tavern, ballroom, theater or any other place of public resort, with naked shoulders (i. e., low necked dresses), being able to purchase necessary clothing, she shall forfeit and pay a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $200."

If this be really Pennsylvania law, still in force, it seems to me that the police officials at a recent ball were derelict in their duty as conservators of the public morals in not immediately sending for officers and patrol wagons when so many flagrant violations of the law must have been visible to them.—Philadelphia Record.

A Spider Completes the Circuit.

A correspondent relates that his family were disturbed one evening by a mysterious ringing of the electric bells all over the house. Investigating the cause, he found that a large spider had established itself at a point where the bell and the electric light wires ran close to one another, with one leg on either wire, thus establishing a connection.—Geneva (Switzerland) Tribune.

Doctors' Writing Very Ancient.

Many of the chemical signs are derived from the alchemists, and are also to be found in works on magic. Some of them are very ancient, and may be traced to Roman stenography and to more ancient sources. The Comte de Gobineau has something on the history of the magic alphabets still used by orientals in his "Ecriture Cuneiforme."—Notes and Queries.

The Life of a Thunderstorm.

Mr. William Marriott asserts that thunderstorms, instead of traveling at a rapid rate over the country as one continuous storm, consists really of a series of storms following one another, and it is his opinion that the average life of each is not more than about twenty miles.—London Public Opinion.

Uses of Chinese Wax.

The white wax is a substance of great utility in China. It melts only at a high temperature, and is used chiefly to cover candles made of animal and vegetable tallow, to prevent too rapid combustion. It is used also as sizing for paper and cotton goods, a glaze for silk and a polish for furniture.—New York Sun.

Swedish women vote in the cities for municipal councillors and in the country for members of the county council, and as the latter body appoints the members of the upper chamber of the diet the women may be said to exercise a direct power in Swedish affairs.

The Apostles' creed is not the creation of any single person. It grew. It is found in practically its present form in writings of the Fifth century. The Nicene creed was formulated in A. D. 325.

Psychic Influence.

The other day a woman was building with great deliberation a dialect story. Suddenly she felt her attention called to the corner of the room. There she saw a friend who lives in Washington seated with bowed head, crying. The story writer called out the visitor's name, and the vision fled. Immeniately, on her manuscript paper, this woman wrote her friend, detailing the circumstance.

The next day she received a letter from her friend, saying: "A queer thing has just happened to me. I was sitting in my room crying when I distinctly heard you call my name." The two letters had crossed each other in transit.—New York Evening Sun.

Amazons and Amazons.

"Who's the large lady over there raising a row with the waiter?" inquired a guest at the hotel of the landlord.

"Oh," was the good natured reply, "that's my wife."

"Ah, indeed; she's a perfect Amazon, isn't she?"

"Well, mighty nigh it, responded the landlord reflectively. Her mouth ain't quiet so big, perhaps, but she talks a heap sight more."—Detroit Free Press.

Pathetic Farewell.

Jacques Jasmin, a barber and poet of France, began life in extreme poverty. That the pathetic events of such a childhood must have sunk into his soul may be guessed from one incident which, in after years, he set down in his "Recollections." His grandfather, when too old and infirm to solicit alms, quietly made arrangements to be carried to an almshouse in order that he might no longer burden the family. Jasmin says:

I was then ten years old. I was playing in the square with my companions, girded with a wooden sword, and I was king, but suddenly a dreadful spectacle disturbed my royalty. I saw an old man in an armchair borne along by several persons. The bearers approached, and I recognized my own grandfather. In my grief I saw only him.

I ran up to him in tears, threw myself on his neck and kissed him. He returned my embrace and wept.

"Oh, grandfather," said I, "where are you going? Why are you leaving our home?"

"My child," said he, "I am going to the almshouse, where all the Jasmins die."

He again embraced me, closed his eyes and was carried away. We followed him for some time under the trees, and then I abandoned my play and returned home, full of sorrow.

In five days the dear old man quietly breathed his last. His wallet was hung up on its usual nail in the room, but it was never used again. One of the breadwinners had departed, and the family was poorer than ever. On that Monday I knew and felt for the first time that we were very poor. Fortune came to me years after, but for some of those I loved she came too late.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of JAMES B. STEWARD, deceased.

The appraisers heretofore appointed by this Court to appraise and admeasure the homestead petitioned for by Annie Steward, the widow of said deceased, having filed herein a report of their proceedings:

It is therefore ordered by the Judge of said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the Judge of said Superior Court on Saturday, the 13th day of August, 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, at the chambers of said Judge, at the Court-house, in the town of Independence, County of Inyo, State of California, then and there to shew cause, if any they have, why said report should not be confirmed.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published in the INYO INDEPENDENT, a newspaper printed and published in said Inyo county, for two successive weeks before the said 13th day of August, 1892.

Dated July 27th, 1892.

GEO. M. GILL,
Judge of the Superior Court.

SUMMONS.

IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT OF THE SECond Township in the County of Inyo, State of California.

EMMONS SPENCER, Plaintiff, vs. WILLIAM EVA, Defendant.

The People of the State of California send greeting to William Eva, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Justice's Court of the Second Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer before the Justice at his office in said Township the complaint filed therein, within five days (exclusive of the day of service), after the service on you of this summons—if served within the Township in which the action is brought; or, if served out of said Township, but in said County, within ten days; otherwise within twenty days.

This action is brought to recover of you the sum of One hundred and thirty-three and 75-100 ($133.75) dollars due from you to Plaintiff for services rendered to you by Plaintiff as collector and attorney between the 15th day of November, 1891, and the 20th day of May, 1892, as more fully appears in complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to so appear and answer said complaint as above required, said Plaintiff will take judgement against you by default for the sum of $133.75, together with costs of suit.

Given under my hand this 2d day of July, 1892.

DENNIS J. HESSIAN,
Justice of the Peace of said Township.
EMMONS SPENCER, Attorney for Plaintiff.

DIED.

EKELES—At Bishop July 24 1895 infant son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Elkeles, aged 2 months.

Mrs. Blanche Julian is visiting with her parents at Lone Pine.

Miss Alice Williams of Bishop is visiting with friends at Independence.

John Blair came down from Bishop on Wednesday's train, returning yesterday morning.

Quite a number of Lone Pine people are on a camping trip over to the Kings River country.

Miss Maggie Gorman has returned to Santa Rosa to attend school. She left on last Saturday's train.

Fred Burckhardt is back at his old stand at Lone Pine and will give promt attention to watch and jewelry repairing of all kinds

On Monday evening W. A. Lamar Esq., received word that his father was very ill at San Jose, and started for that place on Tuesday morning.

Mrs. Marker of Detroit, Michigan, a daughter of Mrs. A. Stewart of Lone Pine is visiting with her mother and brother, J. J. Stewart.

The County Clerk will begin the compilation of the new Great Register on Saturday. Remember that if you don't get your name on you don't vote.

John D. Lewis became a full-fledged barrister by passing a most creditable examination in the Supreme Court. He is expected home next Monday.

A telegram from Hawthorne on Tuesday stated that the entire business portion of Bodie was burned to the ground. This evening's papers will contain full particulars.

Fred Eaton, accompanied by a party of Los Angeles capitalists, is expected to arrive at Lone Pine in a few days, having in view the project of extending the Lone Pine canal.

J. J. Stewart and P. Labarge came up from Lone Pine yesterday. Pete says he has at last become completely civilized. He took out his final papers in the Superior Court yesterday.

The Bishop creamery was started up on Wednesday, an expert having arrived from Chicago for the purpose of managing the concern. He says the plant is a good one and the enterprize should prove a success.

C. Meysan has been appointed Wells, Fargo & Co.'s agent at Lone Pine, vice J. J. Stewart, resigned. As Mr. Stewart is postmaster and Lone Pine has been raised to a money order office he could not hold both positions.

The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Elkeles died at Bishop on Sunday last, and the body was brought to Independence for interment. The sorrowing parents were accompanied on their mournful journey by A. Cohn, M. S. McLeod and wife, Mrs. Smales and Sol. Foorman. The funeral took place on Monday and was attended by quite a large number of our citizens.—Index

Children's Day

GEORGES CREEK, July 27, 1892.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:—Will you kindly permit me to call the attention of the scholars belonging to the public schools of Inyo county to the importance of celebrating Columbus Day, October 12, 1892. The Executive Committee of the Columbian public school celebration sends the following message: "The 12th of October, 1892 the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America, ought to be celebrated everywhere in America. The day will be marked in Chicago by the dedication of the Columbian Exposition grounds. The day also may be signalized in every town and village in the Republic by a local celebration, of which the public school is the center. The public schools of the Republic will form the most fitting centers for all these local celebrations. A National public school observance, simultaneous with the Chicago exercises, will awaken a popular interest in the coming Exposition. Far more important is the fact that the public school has the right to occupy the most prominent place in the celebration. The public schools is the one characteristic institution which links all the neighborhoods together and can thus furnish a common bond for a National celebration. A programme of exercises will be furnished by the Executive Committee. It will be simple and adapted to any school, yet so arranged that more elaborate exercises may be added if desired. The aim of the official programme will be that certain leading exercises may be the same in every school in the Republic, and that at least in one feature the Chicago programme may be identical." The earnest enthusiasm with which the public schools are grasping the idea of a Columbian celebration augurs well for a successful National demonstration. I now appeal to the scholars of Inyo to be the first to move; arouse a sentiment in your schools and in your neighborhood for this grand way of celebrating the finding of America. Educators and teachers will meet you from their side and the local press will be the most valuable of all supports. There are 13,000,000 scholars enrolled in the public schools and I would say to the pupils of Inyo, you now have an opportunity to take part in a patriotic movement which will have a place in history and will strengthen the Republic through the coming century, for the public school to-day sways the hundred years to come. It is to be hoped that the pupils enrolled in our free schools will as with one voice sound a note that will thrill a nation. It is proposed that the raising of the flag will be one of the exercises of the public school celebrations on Columbus Day. This arrangement will stimulate all the schools that have not obtained a flag. On October 12th the stars should be floating over every school house throughout the Nation. How far the message is carried out depends on every boy and girl. It is expected that you will respond to it promptly and enthusiastically, that you are too thoroughly imbued with the true spirit of American loyalty and patriotism to permit such an opportunity to be lost. That you will enter into the spirit of this important event with characteristic American energy and determination. On October 12th the eyes of all Nations will be turned upon the public schools, which form the Keystone in the arch of our civilization. It is an inspiring thought that on that day all the loyal sons and daughters of our land will be united by one common purpose of such lofty conception. The time has come when you may prove yourselves to be as enterprising and as intelligently patriotic as the scholars of any town or city in America. Don't wait until the eleventh hour. If our schools are to attempt to be the center of a local celebration which shall be worthy of the day preparations should begin at once. It is the hope of the friends of common school education that not one public school in the United States will allow itself to be left out of this memorable celebration. The official programme will soon be printed and ready for distribution and I will be happy to furnish copies to any one desiring them. It will also be published in the INYO INDEPENDENT for the benefit of its many readers. Once more I will say, Scholars of Inyo, arouse yourselves to this important occasion and work with one accord, with "The union of hearts, the union of hands, and the flag of our Union forever." KATE J. ROBINSON.

H. E. WILKINSON, Observer.
Weather Bureau.

The stage-robbing fraternity received a terrible lesson in Shasta county last Monday. The notorious Ruggles brothers, who killed Buck Montgomery, were taken from the county jail and hanged. They made no confession and it is said that they had upwards of ten thousand dollars in coin hidden away, the whereabouts of which will probably forever remain a mystery. The robbers met with a just retribution for the murderous crime of which they were guilty.

In a recent letter to the proprietors, Mr. H. M. Bangs, the druggist at Chatsworth, Ill., says: "I am very much pleased with Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. During the epidemic of la grippe here it took the lead and was very much better liked than other cough medicines." The grip requires precisely the same treatment as a very severe cold, for which this remedy is so efficient. It will promptly loosen a cold and relieve the lungs, soon effecting a cure, while most other medicines in common use for colds only give temporary relief; 50 cent bottles for sale by Pay the Price of the Royal for Royal only.

Royal Baking Powder is shown by actual chemical tests absolutely pure and 27 per cent. greater in strength than any other brand.

Many grocery stores have recently been stocked with second-class brands of baking powder, which are urged upon consumers at the price of the high-cost, first-class Royal.

These powders cost from 8 to 30 cents a pound less than the Royal, besides being of 27 per cent. less strength. If they are forced upon you, see that you are charged a correspondingly lower price for them.

The world never adopted a greater error than it did when it accepted the belief that stupid people are necessarily honest.

"German Syrup"

I am a farmer at Edom, Texas. I have used German Syrup for six years successfully for Sore Throat, Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Pains in Chest and Lungs and Spitting-up of Blood. I have tried many kinds of Cough Syrups in my time, but let me say to anyone wanting such a medicine—German Syrup is the best. We are subject to so many sudden changes from cold to hot, damp weather here, but in families where German Syrup is used there is little trouble from colds. John F. Jones. 9a

Low in the Class.

A student at one of our colleges on commencement day pointed out to a visitor a row of young men sitting apart. "Those are our honor men," he said. "The rest of us are of no account. We won no prizes."

The head of a famous school in New England once frankly said: "I confess that the school is intended for lads of exceptional ability. We have no place for dull boys."

Here are two different views of the question, and between them both the boy of average talent falls to the ground. Yet nine-tenths of the students in our schools are not "honor men."

School contests are frequently cruel; the defeated majority are too often made to feel that they are inferior in their class, and will be so in the world.

They should remember that the prize or honor is a mere side issue of the subject; so is the success of their more able fellows. They have taken their brains to school to be trained as a workman sharpens his tools before beginning the day's labor. Let them look to their own tools and their sharpness. The condition of the brains or tools of their comrades does not concern them.

They must consider, too, that outside of school there are prizes and honors to be won in other fields than scholarship. Here and there a man writes a book, or paints a picture, or leads a political movement with brilliant success, and becomes famous; but the world is as much concerned to know whether the slow, commonplace man is honest and energetic; whether he is kind to his wife and family, generous to his clerks, charitable in his judgment. It is, after all, he and his fellows who give character to a community or a race; who, in the long run, fight the battles of progress, and sustain civilization and Christianity.

The boy in the middle of his class has a great work before him. Let him sharpen his tools and make ready for it.—Youth's Companion.

"Delikit."

A stout and exceedingly robust looking colored woman went to the office of a physician to ask him if he could give her something that would "kind o' build her up."

"What seems to be the matter?" asked the physician, failing to see any indications of weakness.

"Well, doctah," was the reply, "I'm jess natchelly delikit."

"Delicate?"

"Yes, doctah; Ise allus been delikit, en it peahs like I'm gittin delikitter all de time."

"You look very strong."

"Dat's hit, doctah. I don't look delikit, but I am. I cayn't bar to git up in de mawnin', en I don't wanter do anything arfter I am up; en I'm so narvous hit puts me all out ter be asked to wuk."

"Is your appetite good?"

"Va'y good, doctah, va'y good. Nothin' I eat seems to hu't me, en I kin eat all I wanter of it, but when it comes ter doin' anything I'm that delikit I jess cayn't do hit. His's turrible ter be so delikit."

The doctor had had similar cases of delicate constitutions before, and, as usual, prescribed a trip to Europe.—Youth's Companion.

"No Man's Land" in Brooklyn.

Every schoolboy can give you the exact location of the curious strip of land lying south of the state of Kansas popularly called "No Man's Land." A description and history has been given of the original "No Man's Land," lying between the states of Maryland and Delaware. Now comes the story of a lost piece of real estate lying in the heart of Brooklyn, N. Y. It lies at the head of the Wallabout canal, and abuts on the wall of the Navy Yard cemetery.

The United States government cannot claim the tract, as it was never ceded to it. The city has no title to it, it having been omitted from the plan made after the United States acquired the Wallabout lands. The spot is 10 by 4 feet, but small as it is is quite valuable. An enterprising squatter has erected a small shanty upon it, and put out the sign, "This is No Man's Land."—St. Louis Republic.

"Annie Rooney's" Classical Origin.

"Little Annie Rooney" is Wagnerian. Its opening measure is to be found in Wagner's "Die Walkure." It forms the motif of the Feuerzauber movements, and as such pervades the whole scene. It is especially prominent just at the point where Siegfried steps into the flame. Although consisting of only seven notes covering one measure with one note over, it is exactly the same as the beginning of Annie, even to the tempo. It is hardly likely that the author of "Little Annie Rooney" has plagiarized from Wagner, as it is doubtful if he is sufficiently familiar with the Music of the Future to be able to do this.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

Pulling Against a Horse.

A curious wager, with fatal results, was recently decided at Siepring, in Bavaria. A notoriously strong man, named Freytag, bet that a horse could not move him from the door of his house. The horse was brought, and Freytag put his hands and feet against the door posts, while Stern, the man with whom the bet had been made, fixed a rope around Freytag's neck. At the first pull the rope broke. A new rope having been brought, Stern plied his whip with all his might, when Freytag gave a scream and, letting go, was dragged along for some yards. His neck was broken.—Vanity Fair.

You Can See the Scene, but Not the Crowd.

An ingenious device has just been adopted at the Hippodrome in Paris for the production of scenic effects in the central oval space, without the spectators opposite being seen at the same time. An elliptical screen of fine steel netting is let down in comparative darkness, so as to be about twelve feet in front of the benches. This is painted on the inner side with any desired scene, and as it is strongly illuminated at a given moment from the center, a spectator from any point has an excellent view of the scene without seeing anything of the crowd beyond.—Paris Letter.

How to Make a Wife Unhappy.

See your wife as seldom as possible. If she is warm hearted and cheerful in temper, or if, after a day's or a week's absence she meets you with a smiling face and in an affectionate manner, be sure to look coldly upon her and answer her in monosyllables. If she forces back her tears and is resolved to look cheerful sit down and gape in her presence till she is fully convinced of your indifference. Never think you have anything to do to make her happy, but that her happiness is to flow from gratifying your caprices; and when she has done all a woman can do be sure you do not appear gratified.

Never take an interest in any of her pursuits, and if she asks your advice make her feel as if she is troublesome and impertinent. If she attempts to rally you good humoredly on any of your peculiarities never join in the laugh, but frown her into silence. If she has faults (which without doubt she will have and perhaps may be ignorant of) never attempt with kindness to correct them, but continually obtrude upon her ears: "What a good wife Mr. Smith has!" "How happy Mr. Smith is with his wife!" "Any man would be happy with such a wife!"

In company never seem to know you have a wife. Treat all her remarks with indifference, and be very affable and complacent to every other lady. If you follow these directions you may be certain of an obedient and broken hearted wife.—New York Ledger.

Saving the Big Trees.

Secretary Noble has made friends for himself in California, and deserves the thanks of every American possessing either pride in his country's greatness or a love of nature, by withdrawing from entry the tracts of land in the Sierras covered with sequoia groves, the big trees of the middle coast. The design is to have congress set them apart as a permanent reservation, that the trees may be preserved for all time or until nature works their ruin.

California is fortunate that her great trees are in clusters. Washington has her monarchs and grand ones, but they are to an extent isolated, and it will be more difficult to keep them from spoliation. What can be done to that end should be done, if it is nothing more than the exercise of the moral influence of each community to prevent the owner of a big tree from destroying it. The owner in law should regard himself in truth as only a trustee for the people, for the coming generations as well as this, and not sacrifice one of the glories of a great state for the comparatively trifling profit to be made by sending it to the mill.—Seattle Journal.

Value of a Night Meal.

Most students and women who are troubled with insomnia are dyspeptic, and they should, therefore, eat before going to bed, having put aside work entirely at least an hour before. If they are not hungry they should simply be instructed to eat, and if they are hungry they should eat whatever they want. A glass of milk and a biscuit are sometimes all that can be taken at first, or a mashed potato buttered.

If possible the night meal should be taken in another room than the sleeping apartments, and for men in the city it will be found advantageous to go out to a restaurant. Before eating, however, a bath should be taken, preferably cold or cool, which should be given with a sponge or stiff brush, and the body thoroughly rubbed off with a coarse towel afterward. The bath need not be more than five minutes in duration.—New York Journal.

Nothing Like Letters.

At the Guildhall jubilation, in celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the introduction of penny postage, Mr. Raikes, the postmaster general, said that this event "had done more to change for the better the face of England than almost any political or social measure of our times." The total delivery of letters in the United Kingdom was 76,000,000 in the year preceding the establishing of the penny post at a uniform rate. In 1889 it was 1,606,000,000, or with post cards, newspapers and other communications above two billions. In London the letters posted and delivered annually is now 850,000,000; the outward delivery, 600,000,000, and the number in London alone 350,000,000.—London Tit-Bits.

A Pet Whale in a Coral Tank.

On a small island in the middle of the South Pacific lives a planter, the only white man on the island, which is full of brown skinned folk, who cut and dry the meat of cocoanut, which he sells to trading vessels. The planter has a whale for his pet. The whale is a sperm of great size, and is kept in a natural water way, with walls of coral on each side. The creature is very tame. Chopped meat is its food. So, at least, says a writer in The Pittsburg Dispatch.

PRELIMINARY WORLD'S FAIR EXHIBIT OF CALIFOREIA.

Sometime since it was deemed advisable by the California World's Fair Commission to make in the city of San Francisco, a preliminary display of the articles which are destined ultimately for exhibition at the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago.

This display has been nicknamed the "Dress Rehersal," which in reality it is, although the name is somewhat unbecoming the dignity and extent of the enterprise.

By a most favorable arrangement with the Directors of the Mechanics Institute, the California Commission have succeeded in obtaining the use of the Institute's Pavilion, in San Francisco, where, during January and Feburary next, the display will be held under the joint auspices and direction of the California World's Fair Commission and the Mechanics' Institute.

Mr. Charles B. Turrill, whose office is Room 63, Flood building, San Francisco, has been appointed by the two organizations to manage this Fair, and is in direct communication with intending exhibitors in all parts of the State.

A premium list is now being prepared, which will soon be ready for distribution. It is designed, in this Preliminary Exhibition, to call attention to a large number of resources of the State which are frequently entirely overlooked in exhibition enterprises. With this object in view, premiums will be awarded on somewhat different lines from what is customary.

While one of the important features of the display will be the County Exhibits, which will be made up of the numerous resources of the different counties, arranged so as to show the exhibits to the best advantage and also giving due credit to each and every producer, it is also intended to include a large number of what might be called "classified" exhibits. Under this arrangement, there will be as large a horticultural display as can be made at that season of the year. Oranges and other citrus fruits will be specially prominent. This will be one of the first times that a display of this character has been shown in San Francisco, [except from a single county.

The importance of the mining industry is by no means being overlooked, and it is hoped that a large portion of the collection which is being prepared under the management of the World's Fair Commission will be arranged in this Preliminary Exhibition.

Arrangements are being made to secure a very complete and striking exhibit of the building materials of the State, this being deemed an opportune time for calling special attention to California's wealth in this department.

THE PHANTOM STEAMBOAT.

It Was Seen by Thirteen Men Puffing Across Devil's Lake in Dakota.

There are some modern stories of Devil's lake which vie in superstitious fancies with those of the aboriginal age. The phantom steamboat is a creation in which a number of people have implicit faith. Some weird tales are told of how this airy creation goes puffing up and down the silent lake in the darkness of summer nights, its special fires gleaming on the black water and the beat of its screw keeping up a rhythmic motion that becomes suddenly silent on the approach of a mortal.

The first appearance of the phantom steamboat was early in the eighties. At that time the government had a small steamboat plying on the lake between the fort and the settlement of Devil's Lake on the opposite shore. Leave of absence was often given to the soldiers to go over to the town and spend a day and night. For this purpose a small schooner was employed, it having been built by the men before the government constructed a steam vessel. Then it was a common thing for the civilians around the fort settlement to cross this lake and take up land and buy town lots in the new city, for the North Dakota boom was then getting under way. Frank Paler, the Indian trader at the reservation, tells the story:

"There had been quite a lot of us over at the settlement, and on a Sunday evening we started to return in the sailboat. If I remember rightly there were thirteen in the party, nearly all soldiers from the fort. We had just got rightly started when one of those high winds which suddenly spring up on the lake came down on us, and it was no time until our sailing gear got out of order and useless. When the storm subsided we were dismantled and drifting. Nearly all the soldiers who were in the boat were on absence leave, which expired on Sunday night, and consequently they were in a great state of anxiety over our helpless condition. It grew dark.

"As we had no oars we were compelled to sit helpless. There wasn't a drop of anything stronger than the water around us. While we were lying becalmed somebody heard, or imagined they heard, the puffing of the steamboat. We listened, and what seemed to be the noise of escaping steam was heard distinctly. Instantly the conclusion was reached that somebody at the fort had witnessed our predicament before sunset and had started the steamboat out to our relief. I strained my eyes in the direction from which the sound came, and, sure enough, the shadowy outline of a steamboat seemed visible in the darkness.

"Everybody was on the alert. The throb of the engines became more distinct; some of the men saw the lights and detected the glow of the furnace fires. So powerful was this impression that several of our party hailed the boat, but the cry was unanswered. We watched it go by in the distance till suddenly it disappeared. We managed to get to the fort landing that night after considerable trouble. The little government steamer lay there with no sign of life about her, and her furnaces as cold as a January morning. It was evident that she had not been out on the lake within twenty four hours. The people at the fort verified this.

"The story of our experience seemed incredible, but there were plenty of witnesses, and so the phantom steamboat from that hour became one of the mysteries of Devil's lake. Other people have since claimed to have seen it go puffing up and down the lake in the darkness of moonless nights, the fires making trails of light on the water, while the throb of the ghostly engines was distinctly heard."—Dakota Cor. Philadelphia Press.

A Brakeman's Joke.

An empty cattle train pulled out from the stock yards and in the caboose was a particularly disagreeable drover, who was homeward bound. After the train started he threw his buffalo overcoat on the forward bench and fell asleep. One of the brakemen secured a rope and cautiously tied one end of it tightly around the fellow's ankles. The other end he anchored to a heavy hook overheard. Then another brakeman took the coal scuttle, filled it full of newspapers, put it directly over the sleeper's head and touched a match to it. As the papers blazed up the two brakemen, who had taken a position on the roof, poked their heads through the lookout cupola and yelled "Fire!" The drover awoke, saw the flames and started up. The rope held his feet and he came down with a thump on the floor of the car. There was a bump on his forehead in ten minutes that was as big as an ostrich's egg. But he was meeker after that.—Chicago Herald.

Effect of Spraying Cold Water.

Some interesting laboratory experiments have been made on the effect of spraying a considerable part of the body surface of animals with cold water. So successful were these that the spray has now been applied for the purpose of producing febrile temperature in human beings. In the case of a man suffering from phthisis, whose temperature was high, it was found that by spraying about a pint of water at between 60 degs. and 70 degs. Fahrenheit, over his body, the temperature fell to normal, and continued so for several hours. A similar method was satisfactorily adopted in the case of a girl with diphtheria. In the healthy human subject the spray lowered the temperature nearly 2 degs.—New Orleans Picayune.

Rich Food for Maine Ducks.

William Mason, who lives a mile from Bluehill village, thinks there may be a gold mine on his farm, and proposes to investigate the matter. Several ducks killed by him have had pieces of gold in their crops, and as they have spent most of their time in a newly deepened pool, the bottom of which is gray sand, it is thought this is where they got their unusually rich food.—Lewiston Journal.

Evening Things Up.

They were talking of bowling. "Aren't you afraid, Henry, dear," she said softly "that such excessive exercise will make your right arm larger than your left?"

"I never thought of it in that light," he replied thoughtfully. "Perhaps you had better change around on the other side."—New York Sun.

A Division in the House.

"Don't talk so loud," said Mrs. Binks. "The baby is asleep."

"Go on. Talk as loud as you please," put in Mr. Binks. "Your conversation wouldn't keep anybody awake."—New York Sun.

TRUSTWORTHY TESTIMONY.

SOME VITAL FACTS CONCERNING THE WELFARE OF THE STATE MADE PUBLIC.

What California Citizens Say, and How Their Statements are Confirmed.

No fact has been more plainly manifest during the past few years, than the important effect which climatic changes have made upon the constitutions of American people. The steady-going habits of Europe tend to longer lives, but the influence of European climate is toward apoplectic and other similar diseases. On the other hand the bustling habits of the American people necessarily tax the nerve centers and other important parts of the body, while severe and sudden changes of atmosphere, add still more to the difficulties to be overcome.

The present spring has been a very unfortunate one in California. The extremely variable weather has had a very distressing effect upon the health of the people, which in many cases has resulted seriously. Knowing these facts, and in order that our readers might be more thoroughly informed upon the subject, a representative of this paper has collected some important data, which is herewith presented:

Mr. J. G. Dusenbury, real estate broker and land dealer of Fresno, said: "The beneficial effects of Warner's Safe Cure in a case of aggravated kidney disease, with which I have been troubled for seven years past, have been remarkable. Three weeks ago, my kidneys were in such a bad state that I could not rise from my bed. I then began the use of the Safe Cure for the first time. The good effect of the medicine was at once apparent. In five days I was up and around. I have taken several bottles since, and now feel as well and sound as ever in my life. I only regret I did not know the virtues of Warner's Safe Cure years ago."

Mr. James A. Jasper, Santa Maria, says: "I was taken down in 1885 with liver and kidney complaint, and all the doctors pronounced that my spleen was enlarged. I suffered from weakness, my food did not seem to digest, and did not seem to do me any good. I traveled from place to place, to Mineral Springs and in the mountains, but nothing seemed to relieve me until my uncle, while I was stopping at his place in Los Angeles, persuaded me to try Warner's Safe Cure. I took two bottles before I realized any change, and after taking twenty-six bottles was a well man after five years' sickness and given up by all my friends to die. I, therefore, give Warner's Safe Cure credit for my life, and for further information in my case, write to James A. Jasper, Santa Maria, and I will answer and give any references both in Los Angeles and Santa Maria."

Mr. A. A. Cook, Mountain View writes: "After suffering for many months from severe pain in the small of my back that entirely disabled me from work, and becoming quite debilitated from loss of appetite and sleep, and after trying all the best physicians to no good effect, I was induced to try Warner's Safe Cure, and after taking three bottles, I was able to work and eat again as usual, and now I feel like a new man."

Mr. Max Anthony, Oroville, had a very pleasing experience in his family with the use of this great remedy. He writes: "My wife suffered for a long time with pains in the small of her back, she tried everything to cure herself, but without doing her any good. Hearing of your Safe Cure, she concluded to try it, and after taking a few bottles was entirely relieved of her pain. My little daughter aged twelve, would at night wet the bed. We tried in all ways we knew or heard of to stop it, but nothing we tried did any good. It kept growing worse, if anything. The child grew so ashamed and mortified over it, we could not get her away from home. She would not go to see either friends or relations. Finally my wife suggested using Warner's Safe Cure. After using two bottles, she stopped wetting the bed, and has not done so since, now over nine months ago. I would not be without it for ten times its cost. I think it the best medicine for family use ever placed on the market. I cannot say too much in its praise."

Mrs. Kate Ward, of West Butte, Sutter county, writes: "My daughter has taken Warner's Safe Cure, and received great benefit therefrom. I am never without it in my house."

Mr. Edwin E. Webster, of Calpella, Mendocino county, says: "I am happy to state I have used Warner's Safe Cure and Safe Pills with the best result possible, for deranged liver and kidneys."

But one conclusion can be drawn from the above facts by any fair-minded individual. That conclusion must be, that while kidney and liver difficulties are so alarmingly increasing, still there is a safe and certain means by which they can be avoided, or having been contracted, a way by which they can positively be cured.

I hold it true, whate'er befals,
'Tis only stupid to be good;
For wealth can now win coronets
And look with scorn on Norman blood.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. ACROSS THE DEEP, TO THE FAR WEST,

On steamboats, cars and stage-coaches, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is carried as the most important item in the materia medica of the traveling public. It deprives vitiated, brackish water of its hurtful properties and execrable flavor, counteracts the pernicious effects upon the stomach of bad or indigestible food, remedies cramps, heartburn and wind upon the stomach. It is a fine defense against malarial disorders, nullifies the effects of excessive heat, cold and damp, relieves sick headaches, and is an incomparable cure for costiveness and biliousness. The fatigue of travel often tells most disastrously upon invalids and convalescents, occasionally to such an extent as to jeopardise life. Persons in feeble health, apprehensive of bad effects from travel, will, if provided with the Bitters, be far less likely to have their fears realized.

SAFE, SURE AND SPEEDY.

No external remedy ever yet devised has so fully and unquestionably met these three prime conditions as successfully as ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS. They are safe because they contain no deleterious drugs and are manufactured upon scientific principles of medicine. They are sure because nothing goes into them except ingredients which are exactly adapted to the purposes for which a plaster is required. They are speedy in their action because their medicinal qualities go right to their work of relieving pain and restoring the natural and healthy performance of the functions of muscles, nerves and skin.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer who will send me their Express and P. O. address. T. A. Slocum, M. C., 183 Pearl St., N. Y.

Ward off disease by removing the cause of it. It's with the liver or the blood, nine times out of ten. A sluggish liver makes bad blood—and bad blood makes trouble. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery makes pure blood. It invigorates the liver and kidneys, rouses every organ into healthful action, and cleanses and renews the whole system. Through the blood it cures. For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Scrofulous, Skin and Scalp Diseases—even Consumption (or Lung-scrofula) in its earlier stages, it's a certain remedy.

Nothing else is "just as good." Anything "just as good" could be sold just as this is. It's the only blood-purifier that's guaranteed to benefit or cure, in every case, or the money is refunded.

The catarrh that isn't cured costs $500. Not to you, but to the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. They promise to pay you the money, if you have an incurable case.

They don't believe that you have one.

MIZPAH, THEE AND ME.

Apart? Yet memory throws its sunlit mellowing rays
Across the line of hills dividing thee and me,
And far off past, with dreamy flush of purple haze,
Illuminates life's cross and crown for thee and me.
Apart? Yet voices tuned to sympathetic key
Waft through uplifted gates an old song to the heart,
While we are waiting for a day for thee and me,
"Still doth the Lord keep watch o'er thee and me apart!"

Apart? Yet guarded by the brooding skies above,
Where kindled glows Faith's beacon light for thee and me.
Apart? Yet billows on far stretching sea of Love
Blow white winged ships with messages from thee to me
Life's tide from my soul shore flows back to thy dear heart,
With "light of eventide" flung clear across the sea,
And "still the Lord to watch o'er thee and me apart!"

—Amy Seville Wolff.

HAVELOK THE DANE.

On the eastern coast of England is a town called Grimsby, and they who live therein—or such of them at least who have knowledge of the deeds done by the folk of old—tell this story to the stranger who happens into their dwellings:

Many years ago, say the folk of Grimsby, when in the place of this dear town of ours there was but a sea marsh, with the waters of the broad mouth of the river Humber lapping it, there dwelt in the far off country of Denmark a simple fisherman whose name was Grimme. The lord to whom he was in thrall ruled over the whole fair land of Denmark, yet did not rule of right, but of might. For when the true king of Denmark, whose name was Birka been, lay a-dying he called unto him his friend the knight Goddard, and spoke to him in this wise:

"Sir Goddard, in many a battle have we fought side by side, and at many a feast have we drunk out of the same horn, and so had we thought to do for many a year to come. But to each one of us Death cometh at his own bidding, and so is it with me this day. Nor would I sorrow overmuch at Death's coming; for well I know that he will take me to my true love and good wife, Helfeld, who died a year agone, were it not for my little son Havelok and his sister Swanboion. Now, therefore swear to me, good Goddard, that my children will be to thee as thy children, and that thou wilt cherish this fair land of mine until Havelok shall have grown to be a man and worthy to receive it at thy hand." And Goddard sware it, and the good king died in peace. Yet no sooner was he dead than the crafty Goddard took the kinship for his own and cruelly treated the children of his dead friend and master. The maiden indeed he killed, and likewise would he have done to the boy but that he feared, seeing the youth was kingly seeming, though but in his fifth year. So the evil Goddard sent for his thrall Grimme, the fisherman, and said to him:

"Take this boy, tie to him a great weight and cast him into the sea. So shall I reward thee with gold and with thy freedom, and thy sin shall be my sin, and on my head and not on thine it shall lie."

And Grimme took the lad and bound him, and wrapped him in a cloth, and carried him on his back to his hut by the sea, and threw him upon the ground the while his wife Leif cooked for him his supper.

And as he eat he told Leif what the king (for so all men now called Goddard) was to do for them, and what riches awaited them when that the boy should be thrown into the sea; and so he lay down to await the morning, when he should do as he had been bid. But in the night Dame Leif awoke, and thought it was already morning; for, behold, the hut was bright with a great light, the which, when her eyes were used to it, she saw came from where the child lay. Out of his mouth streamed a ray as if from the sun at noonday. Then Leif was troubled, and awoke her husband, who in his turn trembled sorely and was afraid; and asking what this could mean he got up and unbound Havelok, finding as he did so a royal cross on his shoulder. Then quoth Grimme, "Got wot, we have here in our hut the king of Denmark!" And he fell at his feet and swore fealty; but the boy laughed merrily and said:

"Though I be king, yet am I an hungry one and a thirsty withal." So the fisherman and his dame brought bread and cheese and milk and set them before the king's son, and when this one had eaten and drunken he lay down and slept as though he should never awaken.

In the morning, while the son yet slept, Grimme hied himself to Goddard and spoke in this wise: "I have done thy bidding and cast the child into the sea with an anchor of stone tied to his neck. Now give me the reward." But Goddard answered: "Thou naughty varlet, what know I of any child. If this is murder thou hast done I shall surely punish thee." And so Grimme departed from the castle, marveling at the wickedness and falseness of men.

When he came to his hut he gathered his goods together and stowed them in his boat, and putting into it also Havelok and Leif and her three sons and two daughters he raised the sail to the masthead and sailed across the sea toward the west. He had sailed thus for a day and a night when a great wind rose and blew the boat on to the shore of England, and the place where they landed was at the mouth of the river Humber.

Then Grimme built for himself a hut of earth, and seeing that he was a clever fisherman, neither he nor his family nor Havelok wanted for bread, for the fish that he caught he and his sons carried in baskets to the towns and hamlets hard by and sold them. Thus lived they for twelve winters, and young Havelok grew until he had the stature and strength of one who numbered twice his years. But it grieved him that he should be idle, and should have to look to his foster father Grimme for his food and for his raiment, though of the last named it was but little that young Havelok had. Indeed, when the time came that he went to Grimme and said, "I will lie idle no longer, but will go to the south country and there work for my own bread, seeing that you have naught whereunto I can put my hand," it fell out that he had no coat wherewith to cover himself when he should come among the southern folk. So Grimme took off his sailcloth enough to make a coat, and cut it, and the good wife Leif sewed it, so that Havelok had a coat. And Grimme, who was now old, blessed him, and so he departed.

Now, he who ruled over England in those days was no rightful king. His name was Godrich, and he was called the Earl of Cornwall. To him the good King Athelwold, when he lay a-dying, had trusted his daughter Goldborough, making him swear that he would use her rightly and would marry her when she was of a fitting age to the noblest of the land. But Godrich was false to his vows, and did none of these things. In their stead he took for himself the kingdom and shut the young queen up in the castle by the sea, which men call Dover, and she had but small clothing and less to eat and drink. Now the remembrance of his oath began to vex the wicked earl, and he looked around for a way by which he could break it and yet not imperil his soul. While he was debating this his steward, one Bertram, came to him and said: "Earl, there is in my service a youth named Havelok, who is lusty and strong beyond his fellows, and beyond any man I wot of, although he is but a cook's varlet. He came to me a year agone and asked me food, in return for which he hewed the wood and carried the water for the household. Seeing that he was clothed in a single coat, and that he did the work of four, I had fashioned for him clothes of a proper habit, and now I would pray you, earl, to let the youth be brought before you, so haply you may choose him for a man of arms. I say this, for that he is a gentle youth, and that all men, yea, the very children love him, in that he is not only strong but blithe of speech, and handsome to look upon."

And the earl did as Stewart Bertram asked of him, and when Havelok stepped in front of him he saw that all that was told of him was truth. And in that hour a wicked thought took hold of the earl. He thought that he would marry Goldborough to Havelok, and so might he keep his oath and break it, seeing that the youth was the poorest man in all the land and yet was a churl's son, whom having married the princess would be dragged down from her high estate and could no more be accounted worthy to rule the fair land of England. So the earl sent for Goldborough and for Havelok and partly by hard knocks and partly by threats he forced them both to agree to his wish, and the twain were married by the archbishop of York, for the earl's castle was at Lincoln, nearby.

Then Havelok took his wife, who was as yet to him no wife save in name alone, for she despised her husband on account of what she esteemed his lowly birth, and the two journeyed northward and eastward to Grimsby, as the dwelling of Grimme was then called and as it is known to this very day. But Grimme was dead and his wife also, and only his five children were left to welcome Havelok and his queenly bride. Right kind was the greeting Grimme's children gave, and soon they had prepared a great feast in honor of the pair.

In the night as Goldborough lay awake, sorrowing after the manner of women, she saw that the room was bright, and that the light came from about the head of her husband, and she heard a voice bidding her sorrow not, for that Havelok was a king's son and heir, and that he and she should rule together over Denmark and England. Then she woke Havelok and told him what she had heard.

In the morning Havelok rose and called to him Grimme's three sons, Robert the Red, William Wendath and Hugh Raven, and asked them if they would go forth with him to Denmark, and they answered, "Ay," and got ready their boat, into which they stepped with Havelok and Goldborough. Arriving there they traveled through the land until they came to the castle of Ubbe, a Danish earl, who showed them hospitality and lodged them in the town near by in the house of a man named Bernard the Brown.

In the night the house was beset by sixty thieves, with whom Havelok and his three companions fought long and hardly until they had each killed a full score of robbers. Havelok, however, was sorely wounded, which when Earl Ubbe saw he had him brought to his own castle, where his own leech might attend him. And as Havelok lay that night suffering bitter pain Earl Ubbe came into his room, and saw, as others had seen, the bright light streaming round his head and the red cross on his shoulder, and he saw, moreover, that never were two peas like to one another than the stranger to the dead King Kirka been. Then Ubbe fell at Havelok's feet and paid him fealty, for he knew him what he was. And in the morning Ubbe sent messengers far and wide, and summoned all the knights and all the barons to come and bow the knee to King Havelok. This all men who heard the summons were glad to do, for they wearied of the heavy burdens laid upon them by the false King Goddard. But some, being men of evil ways, clung to Goddard, so that the people were divided into two parts, and when the right time came Havelok led his army against Goddard and his men and made them flee. But with his own hand Havelok took the slayer of his sister and gave him over to his barons, that they might judge him. Nor of great length was the debate; but Goddard was hung, and that speedily.

So for a time Havelok abode with his people and ruled over them wisely, and of the three sons of Grimme he made three earls, and gave them lands and cattle and horses and gold, and all men did them honor.

It came about at length that Goldborough reminded her husband of the voice she had heard in the night when she first knew Havelok for the king that he was, and how it had told her he was to rule over England as well as Denmark. So Havelok made ready the warships, and taking with him his knights he crossed the sea and landed at Grimsby. Here he first had built a priory of Black Friars over the grave of Grimme, and then he set forth to do battle with Earl Godrich, who was already coming to meet him with his army. And hard by Grimbsy was a great fight fought and Havelok won, while Earl Godrich and his men were put to flight. Afterward, however, he was taken and slain; and when the English knew who Goldborough was and saw how valiant was her husband they acknowledged him for their king and her for their queen, so that over two great peoples Havelok reigned. Over Denmark he set Earl Ubbe, while he himself abode in England.

So for sixty years did Havelok and Goldborough reign in England, and were just and even in their judgment. Great love had each for the other, and this love grew and never lessened till on the same day they died and in the same grave were buried. Sixteen sons and daughters had they, among whom, when they died, they divided the two kingdoms. And this is the story told, in short, of Havelok the Dane.—Horace Townsend in Montreal Star.

Paper Tool Handles.

An engineer of Manchester, Eng., is introducing a novelty in paper, viz., paper file hafts and tool handles, which are said to be practically indestructible, and much cheaper than wood or malleable iron hafts. Placed under a steam hammer, although they can be flattened, they cannot be split or cracked.—Philadelphia Record.

The Hartford (Conn.) Times says the mercury in a thermometer placed five feet from the blowhole of one of the Bridgeport furnaces rose to the full length of the dial—190 degs. The men suffered intensely in catching the molten lead. None of the cases, however, resulted seriously, and after a liberal sprinkling with water the victims were soon able to return to work.

NEW MALADIES.

Diseases that Follow in the Train of Progressing Civilization.

A LIST OF THE MODERN AILMENTS,

Result of Using the Telephone Too Often.—Electrical Sunstroke.—The Telescopic Eye.

As every pleasure in life brings its corresponding pain or bitterness, so it may be said that every civilized aid to existence devised for human kind develops an agency for introducing new ills to torment alike suffering flesh and the Æsculapian brain. The invention of steam locomotion, telegraph and telephone instruments, electric lighting and various time and labor saving machines, while adding so much to public comfort and convenience, have also brought into existence curious diseases, which form interesting contributions to medical science, although less interesting and more expensive to the suffering victim.

Railroad spine or railroad shock, an affection unknown before travel by rail became so common, has been a familiar malady for some time; but one more recent is railroad kidney, a disease not unlike Bright's disease, but of nervous origin, due to concussions received on railroads. There is a disturbance of the general system, especially of the functions of the kidneys, the symptoms disappearing when the sufferer leaves his regular work. The over use of a telephone produces a curious disease, in some respects a form of asemasia, a volitional overstraining of certain powers, by which we perceive spoken words when we cannot see the speaker or perceive gestures or the movement of his lips, thus creating collusion of ideas, general nervousness and lack of self control.

Certain of the senses are developed at the expense of others, the natural equilibrium being unbalanced. Telephone tinnitus, aural overpressure, is caused by the constant strain of the auditory apparatus in persons who use the telephone continually, the ear becoming intolerant of the tinkle of the bell. The symptoms are buzzing noises in the ear, dizziness, neuralgic pains and in some instances a sub-inflammatory condition of the membrana tympani.

The telegraphers' cramp and the professional akinesia are of the same order of affections as the writers' cramp or the violinists' cramp. Electrical sunstroke is an affection that attacks those who are exposed to the intense rays of the electric arc used in fusing or welding metals, protection against this being afforded by wearing a mask of gray taffeta and gray eye glasses.

Opthalmia photo-electrica is an inflammation of the eye in persons employed about electric lights, and is caused by looking at these brilliant lights a short distance away. A succession of bright spots rapidly follow one another over the visual field, and at night there is inability to look at light without pain and a profuse flow of tears; the eyelids are swollen and movements of the eye painful. This lasts a few hours, and is succeeded by a feeling of painful weariness.

The ordinary telescope vision is a disease by which the visual field is limited concentrically, and the sufferer can finally see nothing except that which is directly in front of his eye, this condition being due to lack of nutrition of the retina or to some disease of the periphery. An affection of vision similar to the telescope eye may also be produced by the action of quinine.

The telescopic eye peculiar to lighthouse keepers is a thickening and enlarging of the bony walls of the orbit, caused by the persistent and repeated pressure at the end of the telescope upon the surroundings of the eye, inducing a chronic form of periostitis or ostitis, the eye gradually protruding, but not becoming myopic or astigmatic. The divers' bends is a new form of caisson disease, which attacks the victim on his return to open air, with nervous prostration. The cavities connected with the nasal passages are obstructed in some cases completely, while the men are at work, and in some cases extreme deafness has been induced.

The sufferers often reel and stagger like drunkards, and sometimes are affected with partial paralysis. Electricity has been used with success for the treatment of this disease. Civilized indulgences and vanities have also contributed their share of diseases that afflict the modern world. Tight shoes by compressing the nerves of the foot, have created "Morton's toe." Then the tennis elbow and baseball shoulder tell their own story, while chronic catarrh is in a large number of cases said to be due to cigarette throat, the result of smoking the much condemned but still favorite cigarette. Inventive genius is still at work improving the arts and sciences, and so the demon of disease, ever on the alert, will doubtless swoop down with his attendant ills to the end of time, keeping time with the march of civilization.—Cor. Times and Register.

Governmental Pawnbrokers.

Pawnbrokers in France are compelled to charge low rates of interest in order to compete with the pawnbroking establishments controlled by the government. These are called monts de piete, after the first institution of the kind, which was located in Perugia, Italy, on an eminence called the "mountain of piety." There are over seventy monts de piete in France, in five of which the loans are gratuitous. In the others the rate of interest averages 5 per cent. per annum.—Yankee Blade.

London Assurance.

First Swell—There goes Miller, the richest man in town. What a pity the old fellow has no daughter! Don't you think so?

Second Swell—I don't know. Why?

First Swell—Because she would make such a good wife for me.—London Tit-Bits.

Reliable authorities say that the death penalty is always inflicted in Siam on every one who is heard to mention the king's name.

A NEW WAY TO COMMIT SUICIDE.

When Other Methods Are Impractical Assault a Desperate Character.

Out at Prescott, A. T., ten years ago a young man with red hair, blue eyes and soft hands tramped into town. He had come down from the Tin Cup district of Colorado on a prospecting tour, but why he should strike into Prescott for anything nobody knew. He had been in hard luck, as anybody could see.

His blue woolen shirt had been washed and washed until it was almost brown from the corrosive action of alkali water, and his clothing was torn and wrinkled. He was a gentleman for all that. He had a pleasant word for everybody, although some of the boys had caught him moping about the corners. How he lived nobody knew. He had no money and could get no work.

"Idaho Jack," a reckless gun fighting cowboy from the Three Sister mountains of Idaho, was in town, too. He had some money, told a good story and absorbed liquor like a blotting pad. He said he was on his way to Deming. Every night saw Jack at the Ark. He made friends with everybody except the stranger from the Tin Cup district.

One night when the Ark was blue with smoke, and "Idaho Jack" was in the midst of a harum-scarum story, the morose stranger quietly arose from his chair, walked up to the upper country romancer and cuffed him across the ear.

For an instant not a word was said. Then of a sudden the Idaho gunner drew his weapon like a flash and fired. The stranger fell dead. Nobody knew his name, but when the sheriff ransacked his tattered clothing he found this note:

"To the Sheriff:

"My name is A. C. Hepburn. My parents live at Graton, N. Y. I have been out of work and starving. I have not got money enough to buy poison or a gun, and there is not water enough in Arizona to drown a gnat. I therefore take this opportunity to slap Jack, knowing as I do that it means instant death, and that is what I seek. It costs nothing, it is a new way to seek suicide, and I demand of you that you do not prosecute Jack, because he was not the aggressor. Bury me as I die. That is all I ask. Sincerely, A. C. H."

The letter dumfounded the town. It took all the fight out of "Idaho Jack." Dollar by dollar the "shiners" came in, until there was enough of them to buy a varnished coffin and a whitewashed headboard. Jack's contribution was something like $8—all he had and all he could borrow at the time. He was not prosecuted, but he left town as soon as the headboard was set.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Wit and Satire in Wills.

One might suppose that will making was anything but a merry occupation, and yet the drollery of the wills that some eccentric old fellows have left behind them could hardly be surpassed. Dean Swift could not have concocted a more bitter joke than that of the testator who, after reciting the obligations he was under to a particular friend, bequeathed to him at the bottom of the first page of his will ten thousand—dollars, of course, thought the delighted legatee; but, on turning the leaf, the bequest was discovered to be ten thousand thanks. What a wet blanket for "great expectations!"

Just as odd was the codicil of the death stricken humorist who left to certain of his dear relatives "as many acres of land as shall be found equal to the area inclosed by the track of the center of the oscillation of the earth in a revolution round the sun, supposing the mean distance of the sun to be 21,600 semi-diameters of the earth from it." This was a century ago, and as the problem could not be satisfactorily worked out the legatees were kept at a mean distance from the property all their lives.

A very neat reproach was conveyed in the will of an uncle who bequeathed eleven silver spoons to his nephew with the remark, "If I have not left him the dozen he knows the reason," the young scapegrace having stolen the twelfth spoon some time before.—New York Ledger.

Ingredients of Flint Glass.

In making flint glass, which is the kind used in the manufacture of fine table ware and for cutting and engraving, the greatest care is taken in the selection and mixing of the ingredients. Upon the purity of these depends the transparency, colorlessness and brilliancy which constitute the chief value of the product.

The ingredients of flint glass are fine sand, free from any trace of iron; red lead, potash or soda, nitre and cullet. Sometimes the red lead is replaced by a heavy gray alkaline earth called baryta, though it is generally considered that red lead is essential to the finest quality of flint glass.—Youth's Companion.

To Cleanse a Room of Tobacco Smoke.

Tobacco smoke has a way of clinging to a room and giving it a peculiar odor that sometimes cannot be removed by airing. One who has suffered recommends that a pail of water in which a handful of hay is soaking be left in the room for an hour or so. At the end of that time the smell will have entirely disappeared. As all evidences of the cigar or pipe can be removed so readily the men can smoke in whatever room they please, provided they will place the pail of water in position when they are leaving.—Exchange.

Ransomed.

Signor Arrigo, the Italian banker, who was held by Sicilian bandits for a heavy ransom, had an exceedingly interesting time of it during his captivity. His captors kept him in the bottom of a dry well, where they lowered his food to him regularly and conferred with him occasionally concerning his ransom. They finally compromised with his friends on $25,000, but wanted a much larger amount. At the end of a certain time, if the money had not been paid, the banker would most likely have been murdered.—Exchange.

The Difference.

Small Boy (looking up from his history)—Papa, the Union soldiers were paid only $13 a month. Seems to me that's awful small when a congressman is paid $13 a day. Why ain't soldiers paid as much as congressmen?

Papa—Soldiers, my son, do not fix their own salaries.—New York Weekly.

A Precocious Child.

Gazzam—Why is the baby crying so hard, Cora?"

Cora—I don't know; mamma is singing to him.

Gazzam—Why, the little fellow is developing very early into a musical critic, it seems.—Epoch.

A fruit dealer in Palatka, Fla., sells for a nickel all the cocoanuts that a person can take away in his pockets. Several who thought the offer a good one invested a nickel and lost it. The nuts had the shells on and would not go into any pocket.

HISTORY IN BONES

Fossil Remains Which Were Buried for Ages Found in Florida.

WHAT GEOLOGISTS SAY OF THEM.

Rhinoceri, Three Toed Horses, Mastodons, Megatheria, all Discovered Where no one Expected to Find Them.

Big boxes full of curious old bones have been arriving at the biological school of the University of Pennsylvania, pending a resting place in the working room of Professor Joseph Leidy, the famous anatomist. Certain marks have indicated that they came from Archer, Levy county, Fla. The specimens have been carefully wrapped up in Florida moss and other packing to prevent breaking on the way north.

These bones are hundreds of years old. They belong to extinct creatures of the quaternary period. Dr. Leidy has been hard at work identifying the animals of which the bones form a part, and this identification is now complete. His conclusions are now very interesting. The chief bones, he says, are those of a rhinoceros, a mastodon, a llama, a three toed horse and a giant sloth. There are also parts of a tapir, a small crocodile and a gar pike.

In 1887, a gentleman living in Archer, in northern Florida, found some fossil bones in beds of clay, and wrote to the late Professor Baird, of the Smithsonian institute, about them. At that time scientists were not expecting the discovery of fossil remains in Florida at all, and Professor Baird, becoming interested, suggested to Dr. Leidy that he go there and search for more bones. Dr. Leidy, being unable to do so, interested Maj. Powell, superintendent of the United States geological survey, in the matter, and the latter sent one of his assistants, Mr. Dall, to Archer for two weeks.

WHAT THE BONES TELL.

As a result of this visit two barrels and six boxes of bones were sent to Dr. Leidy to be identified. There were no further finds there until Professor Marsh, of Yale college, put an assistant, Mr Hatcher, to work digging in the same clay, directing him to send all the remains he might unearth to Dr. Leidy. Seven more boxes accordingly reached here. The two consignments, altogether, contained feet and limb bones, portions of the jaws and numbers of the teeth of about twenty rhinoceri; feet and limb bones and a quantity of teeth of the mastodon; the claws and ankle bones of the giant sloth; the limb bones, toe bones and teeth of the llama; limb bones and teeth of a three toed horse, and other less important remains.

Dr. Leidy identifies the rhinoceros as a variety whose skeleton has never before been found in this country east of the Mississippi. It is about the size of the present Indian rhinoceros, but has tusks eight inches long instead of three inches, and was probably hornless. It lived in Florida in the quaternary period, previous to the appearance of man. The mastodon whose bones were found Dr. Leidy calculates to have been half as large again as the present Asiatic elephant and a different species from the common mastodon whose remains have been found in almost every state in the Union. The head of one of the arm bones, which in the man is about one and a half inches in diameter, is all that one can lift, being as big as the human head. One of the giant sloths, pronounced by Dr. Leidy the megatherium, was also as large as the Asiatic elephant. The only living sloth known, about the size of a terrier, is a tree animal.

EVERY SLOTH HIS OWN SURGEON.

This megatherium, though too large to climb into trees, fed upon tree leaves and branches, and used to rear up on its hind legs, embrace the tree with its short fore legs, and swaying it from side to side finally uproot it. Dr. Leidy argues for this habit from its strong back legs and tail (like the kangaroo's), and from the fact that several skeletons of these animals have been previously discovered carrying signs of serious fractures of bones, which have been practically cured during life.

The remains of the three llamas show that these animals must have ranged in size from a little larger than a camel to one and a half times as large. The three toed horse, whose bones were found in Florida, was probably two-thirds the size of a donkey. So many teeth of mastodons were found as to enable Dr. Leidy to trace out a complete history of their dentition. Cuvier believed that in this animal the three milk grinders and three back grinders were followed in each case by a single successor. A few years ago a German investigator announced his discovery that each of these sets of three teeth was succeeded by two teeth. Dr. Leidy's study of the teeth sent to him confirms this announcement.

A TIGER AND ITS PREY.

At Peace Creek and Ocala, Fla., fossil remains have also been found. The bones at the former place were those of two giant armadillos, the first discovered in this country north of Texas. The other bones were found last winter in a cave near Ocala. The blasting of limestone brought them to light. They were those of a saber toothed tiger, about as large as a Bengal tiger; a llama, nearly the size of a camel; an elephant, like an Asiatic elephant, and a horse, indistinguishable from the common horse. Among the bones of the tiger was the skull, showing its canine teeth, which are six inches long and flattened out like a saber. This animal is now extinct, and its remains have never before been found east of the Mississippi. Dr. Leidy is satisfied that the elephant, tiger, horse and camel, being found in the same cave, lived at the same time, and thinks it likely that the others had been brought to the spot by the tiger as its food. The finding of the bones of a horse is considered strong evidence that the common horse once existed on this continent and afterward became extinct. These animals are also placed in the quaternary period.

Until these recent discoveries the eyes of scientists had not been turned toward Florida in expectation of finding fossil remains. The Bad Lands, Dak., and Bridger, Wy. T., are two of the prominent fossil fields of the West.—Philadelphia Press.

An Example of Meanness.

As an example of meanness an army surgeon told of a western New York farmer who came to the United States general hospital at Fortress Monroe in search of the body of his son, which had been buried in the hospital cemetery. As was usual in such cases, the remains were exhumed and carefully removed from the coffin to a strong box suitable for transportation, all at government expense. After getting safely home the man wrote to the executive officer in substance as follows:

"The old coffin in which my son was buried was left in the dead house. I want to know how much government is going to allow me for it."—Lewiston Journal.

A writer upon birds says that in the fields and groves are many old maids and bachelors who apparently never had any inducement to marry. There is no doubt that the rivalry in bird courtship is extremely keen, and the choice is a deliberate one.

UNDER A SPUTTERING LAMP.

It Needs No Shining Moon When Real Romance Is in Question.

There was something the matter with the big electric lamp on top of the high pole at the corner. It kept sputtering and hissing its discontent with whatever ailed it, and now and again it shut off its rays entirely, save for a dull red glow that made ugly shadows beyond the house stoops and awnings.

"Faith!" exclaimed Mrs. Flanagan, "phwat bedivilment is it I dunno in the light th' night. It's been aisy enough now for a week. Phwy don't it burn or shut up an' be done wid it?"

"A little light's better'n none, Mrs. Flanagan, on such a night," replied Kate, "when the moon must be wearin' her eyes out lukin' for the earth, the clouds be so heavy."

"Ay, ay," assented the elder woman, "that's like ye; yous'd be findin' some good in it if bot' the sun an' the moon should get lost altogether an' niver show us their faces again, so ye would."

Kate laughed and looked tenderly down at the wee face resting on her arm. They were sitting on the steps getting what cool their might be in the late hours of the evening. The narrow street lined with upturned drays and trucks and scattered over with refuse was silent save for the low rumbling of the machines in the bakery opposite, where white capped Germans were making bread for the city.

"It's a hard time ye're havin' since the mother died, Kate," said Mrs. Flanagan, dropping the bantering tone with which she had scored the sputtering lamp.

"Hard ye may say, Mrs. Flanagan," responded Kate, with trembling lip, "but sure it's much harder for the children to be without her when they need a mother most," and she rose to put the baby in bed, hoping that sleep had become so sound that the hot, close air of the tenement would not again rouse her before morning.

"Ay, ay," muttered Mrs. Flanagan, "always a workin' an' thinkin' for somebody else, an' divil a bit of comfort to be takin' for herself," and she, too, rose to seek the black room up three flights of stairs where she slept.

When Kate came down a few minutes later and found the steps deserted she sat with her face in her hands, trying to banish her thoughts in listening to the dull sounds from the bakery. Presently the trap door to the stairs leading down to the underground workshop opened, and a young man with a white apron and flour-stained clothes peered anxiously across the street. He crossed over and sat below Kate on the steps.

"It vas oful varn zu nacht, Katie," he said, laying his cap beside him.

"Yes, Karl," she replied; "it must be terrible in there by the ovens."

"So it vas," assented Karl, "but of dot I tink not. I vas tinkin' of you, Katie."

"Me?" she exclaimed in mock derision; "faith, haven't ye enough to think of with yourself, what with your dough and your yeast and your long shovels for reaching after the bread?"

"Nein, Katie!" responded Karl, with the equanimity of a man whose mind is set upon a definite policy; "no; dere's something more, more as all dot. It vas you, Katie, all of it. You know me, Katie, a goot many years, already. Vat you tinks?"

The lamp at the corner sputtered furiously, shook its flame angrily and went out.

"Karl," began Kate tremulously, as she rose to her feet.

"Yah, Katie, I lofe you a long time already. I haf my pay to-night raiset. I tink you lofe me, Katie; better as dot, I know it!"

Karl had risen and they stood close together. The lamp at the corner drowned in a vigorous hiss whatever happened between Kate and Karl's lips, and when in the next instant the street was aglow with light a young man was plodding across the way to look after his dough and a young woman was making her way upstairs with a lighter heart than she had ever known.—New York Sun.

The Traditional Bootblack Vanishing.

One of the features of life in New York city that is rapidly disappearing, if not already practically extinct, is the grimy little bootblack of former times. This ragged waif, who has furnished the theme for so many songs and stories, comic and pathetic, is a rare figure on the streets of New York nowadays. Like so many other picturesque things of the past he has been swept away by the on rolling wave of civilization. He is one of the innumerable victims of the prevailing tendency to trusts and "combines." His little nail studded box, slung over the shoulder by a strap, with its contents of blacking box, two or three well worn brushes, and the bit of carpet to kneel on, is fast becoming a memory only.

It has been succeeded by the chair perched on a high goods box, with the soft cushion for the customer and the iron foot rests, that occupy nearly every corner down town. A lusty Italian presides over the chair and is the commonplace successor of the bootblack of old times. The latter was accustomed to wander over the city, free as the air, catching a "shine" wherever he found one.—New York Tribune.

Expensive "Moving."

A driver told of one trip he took that lasted two weeks, and yet the town from which the goods were moved was not half as far away as Bridgeport, Conn. The house in question had been owned by a very wealthy man, a collector of various costly articles, from coins to Sevres vases. After his death the goods were sold in this city, and the driver who told the story had charge of the moving. There were several loads, but the main expense came in the packing. Most of the furniture had to be carefully burlapped, and nearly all the objects in the collection had to be packed separately and with the utmost care. The vans came to New York by highway, and the bill for moving was upward of $700. There was no swindle about it. The men employed to pack were experts, and they earned $4 a day.—New York Sun.

A Perpetual Fire.

In the Peninsula of Abeheron, in the Province of Schirwan, formerly belonging to Persia, but now a part of Russia, there is found a perpetual, or, what the natives call, an eternal fire, which is known to have been burning over 2,000 years. It rises with a constant flame from an irregular orifice of about 12 feet in depth and 120 feet in width. The flame rises to a height of 6 or 8 feet, unattended with smoke or disagreeable smell, waving back and forth with the wind, like a field of golden grain.—St. Louis Republic.

Cork oaks have been transplanted to California, where their raising promises to become an important industry. They produce there a cork of excellent quality. At present, however, practically all the cork used in America is imported from the Old World, where there are about three million and a half acres of cork oak forests producing profitable crops.

VENTILATION.

Valuable Suggestions on a Subject of Vital Importance in Every Home.

SECURING PLENTY OF FRESH AIR.

Too Many Houses are Death Traps Because of Vitiated Air.—Ventilators and Valves.

Dr. Howard Van Rensselaer, of Albany, has written an essay on "Impure Air and Ventilation of Private Dwellings" that was awarded a prize by the New York State Medical association. Here are some extracts from Dr. Van Rensselaer's article:

Were people killed outright by foul air, its dangers would be carefully guarded against, but its effects are slow and insidious, and often ascribed to other causes. We are careless of its results because, as its effect at any one time is slight, we grow accustomed to it and disregard its risks, and after being in its presence a few minutes our senses become dulled and do not warn us of the danger.

But while the immediate effects seem trifling, yet it is true that any prolonged vitiation of this source of supply interferes with the proper working of our organizations and depresses our vital functions. Statisticians have shown that of the causes of mortality the most important and farthest reaching is impure air.

We keep our windows closed a great part of the year—during the winter to keep out the cold and in the heated term in summer to exclude the heat—so that the circulation and renewal of air in our houses are at these times slight. The incoming air introduced for ventilation may be vitiated or not, according to our surroundings; but once in, it may become contaminated in several ways, and unless we take special pains to remove this foul air it rapidly accumulates, becomes offensive and is a menace to health.

The primary condition for ventilation is that the incoming air shall be pure; it must be pure external atmosphere. Air that is drawn from small, closed courts, or from between back to back buildings, or that has blown over refuse or that rises from a cellar is unfit for continuous breathing. The sun rarely or never visits these spots and the wind gets no chance to sweep through them. Especially bad is the cellar air, as cellars are apt to be damp, moldy and dark, and are frequently polluted by decaying vegetables and the ash heap, and currents of air are constantly passing through them from the soil below so that sewer air from defective drainage in the neighborhood may easily enter and be sucked through the house. This danger is particularly great if the house is heated by a furnace whose wooden air box passes through the cellar.

In providing inlets a number of things have to be taken into consideration. The inlets must be so placed that the air cannot blow directly on the occupants of the room, and they must be of such size that sufficient incoming air is obtained without a high velocity, for if the movement is greater than two or three feet per second drafts are experienced, and besides a slow current is more favorable for uniform diffusion than a rapid one.

If it can be avoided air should not enter through openings at the level of the floor, as dust readily falls into the openings and fouls the air, and if the incoming air is cooler than the temperature of the room it chills the feet. The place of admittance of cool air should be above the heads of the occupants, and means should be taken to diminish the current if too rapid, and the flow should be directed upward, as there, meeting the warmer air of the ceiling, it mingles with it, becomes warmer and gradually spreads through the room. The external openings of the inlets should give on a place where the air is uncontaminated. They should be short and so arranged that they admit of ready cleansing. They should be numerous and small, rather than large and single, as they are thus less liable to cause drafts.

When the conditions are such that the window cannot be freely opened, it can be arranged in one of several ways to provide sufficient fresh air. Hinckes-Bird's method consists of placing a movable block of wood under the entire length of the lower window sash, thus raising the top of the lower sash above the bottom of the upper. By this procedure considerable space between the two window frames is left, through which the incoming air freely passes, and being impelled in an upward direction it causes no draft.

In Tobin's tube the air from outside enters through a hole in the wall and is conducted by an upright tube into the room. The opening of the tube is above the heads of the occupants, and the air escaping ascends toward the ceiling.

Cooper's ventilator consists of a series of apertures in a window pane arranged in a circle, which can be partially or entirely closed by a glass disk, movable on a pivot, with corresponding apertures. In private houses during parties the rooms often become insufferably hot and close. These unpleasant features can to a great extent be avoided by having a temporary Sheringham valve, constructed of wood and canvas and inserted above the upper sash of the window, which is lowered for the purpose.

The Sheringham valve consists of an opening through the wall for the air to pass, the entrance being usually guarded by a strainer of some sort to keep out dust. On the inside is a valved iron plate with closed sides and hinged at the bottom. An attachment is arranged to more or less completely change it. The entrance should be a little smaller than the exit, that the velocity of the current into the room may be diminished. It is usually placed near the ceiling.

Ventilating fireplaces are marked improvements on the ordinary fireplaces. They have all the advantages of the latter, and in addition they prevent drafts of cold air by sending into the room air that is partially warmed. Fresh air is admitted to the back of the grate into a chamber which is warmed by a large heating surface, and, being carried up by a flue, discharges into the upper part of the room. There are a number of different kinds of good ventilating fireplaces and ventilating stoves made. The merits claimed for these improved fireplaces are—

That they ventilate the room.

That they maintain an equable temperature in all parts of the room and prevent drafts.

That the heat from radiation is thrown into the room better than from other grates.

That the fire brick lining prevents the fire from going out, even when left untouched for a long time, and prevents the rapid changes of temperature which occur in rooms in cold weather from that cause.

That they economize fuel, partly by making use of the spare heat, which would otherwise pass up the chimney, and partly by insuring by their construction a more complete combustion, and thereby diminishing smoke.

HOW TO VOTE.

THE NEW BALLOT LAW AND HOW TO USE IT.

Text of the Law and Explanatory Cuts and Sample Ticket—The Law Said to Be Safe Against Repeaters and Vote Buyers—Read It Over and File the Paper Away for Reference.

The new Australian ballot law is now in force in this state, and every voter is interested in knowing how to comply with the law in casting his ballot.

A few municipal elections have been conducted under the new plan, and others are yet to be held before the final test of the law is to be made at the fall general election. To assist voters to a proper understanding of the way to do it, we print herewith the full text of the law and illustrations of the voting booths.

Cut No. 1 shows the boxes or compartments in which the voter prepares his ballot.

Cut No. 2 shows the position of the ballot clerks, voters in the stalls, and the officers of election checking the voters as they deposit the ballots in the box near the exit. Enter with the man to the right of the cut, and get a ballot from the gentleman standing at the end of the table, provided the young man at the desk finds your name properly registered in the great register open before him.

Then walk over to one of the open stalls and mark your ballot in accordance with your wishes, and pass in front of the group at the left, and announce your name to the judges of election. When the young man sitting at the desk finds your name properly registered, you are permitted to deposit the ballot in the box and pass out. That is all there is to it. Cut No. 3 shows the ground plan of Cut No. 2, with the positions of each election officer and voter indicated.

It has been claimed by some that the new law can be beaten, and that vote buying cannot be prevented by the experiment. The following editorial from the San Francisco Examiner seems to state the case about as fairly as it can be done:

"A correspondent of the Examiner warned the California electors of the method by which the Australian ballot system was beaten in Montana. It was a variation of the 'Tasmania dodge,' a voter being bribed to bring out a ballot by substituting a piece of blank paper for the official ballot that was given him on entering the booth. In the 'Tasmania dodge' the voter was supposed to vote the blank paper, in the Montana case to tear it up. The official ballot

"But a second check, still more valuable, prevents any illicit use of the ballot even if it is taken outside. When the voter enters the booth the ballot clerks mark the check number of his ballot against his name on the printed register. When he marks the ballot he folds it with the counterfoil or tag that bears the number of the ballot exposed, and delivers the ballot to the inspector. The inspector announces the name and number, the ballot clerks verify it from their record, and the inspector tears off the tag and drops the ballot in the box. If the ballot does not bear the same number as the one he received from the ballot clerks he cannot vote.

"The California ballot system cannot be 'beaten' in this manner except by the collusion of the election officers, challengers and watchers of both parties. It is hardly possible to secure so large a number of corrupt men together, or at all events men corrupted by the same side. Whatever vote buying is done under the system will have to be carried out under the 'assistance to illiterates" provision. This will be a possible but dangerous game to play. It will require the collusion of election officers, and will be readily detected by the watchers. The November election will show whether an amendment on this point will be necessary."

The sample ballot given is intended to show how to mark votes. If a straight ticket is voted, an X in the space at the right of the party for which the voter desires to cast his ballot is sufficient. But a split ticket requires an X opposite each name voted for. Only one office is on this ticket. All are arranged in the same manner.

The Street Band.

"I like the dashing cornet and the sprightly clarinet," said Colonel Calliper, "but I like best of all that brass fountain of cheerfulness, the big bass horn. Care takes a back seat when the big horn sounds. It paints the air red and defies all creation, but it is vastly good natured withal, and it never fails when its friends the cornet and the clarinet pause for breath to come in with its oomph-ah! oomph-ah! oomph-ah! preserving the harmony unbroken.

"Relieved from this duty, it rolls off over the edge of a cliff and brings up suddenly at the foot with a tremendous oomph! Rebounding, with dignity unruffled, with undiminished vigor, and with undimmed, inextinguishable and overwhelming good humor, it tosses off sound in large decorative effects that excite the wonder of every hearer and fill every hearer with broad delight.

"Just why the big bass horn is usually played by a short, stout man, while the slender clarinet is played by a man who is tall and thin is one of those things that nobody knows. The time may come, indeed, when the short, stout man will play the slender clarinet and the tall, thin man will play the big bass horn; but by whomsoever it may be played let us hope that the big horn's thunderous jollity will never be abated." —New York Sun.

Too Much.

Mrs. Laverty, an Irish lady, who lived thirty miles from the American Richmond, was in the provident habit of laying in a store of groceries to last an entire quarter, since she could not repair to Richmond oftener than four times a year. On one of these provisioning expeditions she laid in a store of matches—a disastrous investment, since not a match would strike. Wild was her fury, which was kept alight and aglow by her recurring daily trouble to get her fire alight and aglow without a match. Her wrath, thus kept at boiling point for three months, gave the storekeeper a hot quarter of an hour, when she burst at last into his store and thundered down the parcel of matchboxes upon the counter. Having waited with deferential patience until the storm had spent itself, he said suavely, "Allow me, madam."

Taking a matchbox from the parcel and a match from the box, he struck it, after the manner of men, upon his trousers. "See, madam?" he exclaimed in smug triumph, holding up the kindled match. "The divil fly away wid ye!" shrieked Mrs. Laverty. "Do ye think that ivery time I've a fire to light I'll travel thirty miles to sthrike a match on the sate of yere breeches?"—Richard A. King in Belgravia.

A Gallant Irish Boy.

The biographer of General Crawford tells the following story: During Wellington's campaign in the Peninsula, the Light division was defeated by the French under Marshal Ney, and forced to retreat across a river. A young soldier from the north of Ireland, named Stewart, was nicknamed "The Boy," as he was only nineteen years of age and of gigantic stature.

He had fought bravely, and was one of the last men who came down to the bridge, over which the division was retreating. He refused to pass over, but gazing at the French with a grim look, said in a loud voice:

"So this is the end of our boasting! This is our first battle, and we retreat! The Boy Stewart will not live to hear that said."

Striding forward, he fell upon the advancing Frenchmen with his bayonet, and died fighting.

"Gallant, but rash!" the reader says. Yes, but so were the unyielding warriors at Thermopylæ.

THE BIG LAGOON.

An Interesting Formation on the Northern Coast of California.

On the northern coast of California, some thirty miles below the mouth of the Klamath river, is one of the most interesting natural formations to be found in this country, known as the Big lagoon. Here the coast, which runs north and south up to this point, takes a sharp turn inland, bordered by very high hills, running to a distance of about three miles, then turning out again makes a sharp bay almost V shaped, and for ages past a sand bar has been washing itself up across this bay until the bar has raised up out of the water some ten or twelve feet, having a width of about 100 feet and a length of four miles, reaching across the entire bay.

This bar is in the shape of a roof. When there is a storm the breakers will roll up one side of it, break over, and run down into the bay inside, and it is a novel sight to stand there and watch the waters, mountain high on one side and perfectly calm on the other, the line between the two at intervals hidden altogether.

This bar is a sort of short cut and can be traversed on horseback. In a storm the horseman will one minute be high and dry on land, the next minute a large wave will roll up and running under the horse's feet to the depth of a foot or more, the rider will be for an instant four miles or so at sea on horseback, with no land nearer than the high bluffs of the mainland in sight.

Moss agates may be found in abundance on the pebbly beach, and when the sun shines they glitter with dazzling brightness.

The wild duck that frequent this part of the coast literally fill this inland bay, and the passing hunter, should he take a shot at them, will raise such a cloud and such a quacking that he will think all the ducks of the earth have gathered there. Occasionally some wild beast like a bear or a panther will be found crossing this bar, and the Indians have much sport when such a thing happens, the animal rarely escaping capture or death.

Here the Digger Indians abound, living on the shellfish, which they catch along the beach, seldom going over the ridge of hills to capture a deer, which are plentiful. It would astonish a Yale or Harvard football man to come upon this scene some bright morning at low tide and see the squaws and children playing lacrosse on the beach. They get so excited with their sport that they keep it up until the tide drives them from the beach, often staying there until they have to chase the ball down into the surf.—Detroit Free Press.

The sun gives 600,000 times as much light as the full moon; 7,000,000,000 times as much as the brightest star in the sky and 36,000,000 times as much as all the combined stars of the heavens.

England now manufactures window frames of pressed steel, thus replacing those made of cast iron and gaining in strength, lightness and cheapness of manufacture.

Two newspapers spread between the insufficient covers of a bed on a cold night are an excellent substitute for the unprocurable blankets or comfortables.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of JAMES B. STEWARD, deceased.

The appraisers heretofore appointed by this Court to appraise and admeasure the homestead petitioned for by Annie Steward, the widow of said deceased, having filed herein a report of their proceedings:

It is therefore ordered by the Judge of said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the Judge of said Superior Court on Saturday, the 13th day of August, 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, at the chambers of said Judge, at the Court-house, in the town of Independence, County of Inyo, State of California, then and there to show cause, if any they have, why said report should not be confirmed.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published in the INYO INDEPENDENT, a newspaper printed and published in said Inyo county, for two successive weeks before the said 13th day of August, 1892.

Dated July 27th, 1892.

GEO. M. GILL.
Judge of the Superior Court.

SUMMONS.

IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT OF THE SECond Township in the County of Inyo, State of California.

EMMONS SPENCER, Plaintiff, vs. WILLIAM EVA, Defendant.

The People of the State of California send greeting to William Eva, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Justice's Court of the Second Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer before the Justice at his office in said Township the complaint filed therein, within five days (exclusive of the day of service), after the service on you of this summons—if served within the Township in which the action is brought; or, if served out of said Township, but in said County, within ten days; otherwise within twenty days.

This action is brought to recover of you the sum of One hundred and thirty-three and 75-100 ($133.75) dollars due from you to Plaintiff for services rendered to you by Plaintiff as collector and attorney between the 15th day of November, 1891, and the 20th day of May, 1892, as more fully appears in complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to so appear and answer said complaint as above required, said Plaintiff will take judgement against you by default for the sum of $133.75, together with costs of suit.

Given under my hand this 24 day of July 1892.

DENNIS J. HESSIAN.
Justice of the Peace of said Township.
EMMONS SPENCER, Attorney for Plaintiff.

ALIAS SUMMONS.

IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT OF THIRD Township, County of Inyo, State of California.

JOHN WELCH, Plaintiff, vs. JESUS ENSENAS, Defendant.

The people of the State of California send greeting to Jesus Ensenas, Defendant:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the Justice's Court of Third Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer before the Justice at his office in said Township, the Complaint filed therein, within five days (exclusive of the day of service), after the service on you of this Summons—if served within the Township in which this action is brought, or, if served out of said Township, but in said County, within ten days; or within twenty days if served elsewhere.

The said action is brought to obtain judgment against you for the sum of $38.60 alleged to be due plaintiff upon an account for work, labor and services performed by one J. W. Murphy in the line of general blacksmith work and for materials furnished you in and about said work at your request, between the 26th day of August, 1890, and the 3rd day of May, 1892, and which said account was assigned to plaintiff herein on the 5th day of July, 1892, and before the commencement of this action, as more fully appears by the complaint on file herein, to which you are referred.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, said plaintiff will take judgment against you for the sum of $38.60, together with costs of suit.

Given under my hand this 12th day of July, 1892. IRV. H. MULHOLLAND.
Justice of the Peace of said Town-hip.
F. E. DENSMORE, Attorney for Plaintiff.

Jack Wilson is in town.

J. F. Millner of Benton came down to Independence on Monday.

Sheriff Gorman is on a prospecting trip in the northern end of the valley.

Mrs. F. R. Winsor from Loyalton, Sierra Valley, is visiting her sister here.

George Lewis went south last Monday on his way home from San Francisco.

John D. Lewis and Chas. Turner arrived home from San Francisco on Monday's train.

S. G. Sneden, Esq., spent several days in town this week on business in the Superior Court.

This week has been the hottest yet. The mercury has cavorted in a playful manner about the 100° mark every day.

Mrs. Thos. Williams and Mrs. D. Crough, the latter accompanied by her sister, Miss Coyle, visited Independence early in the week.

Men and teams have been steadily at work all the week on the new track. It will be in condition to train on in about two weeks.

George Meads went south on his way to Mojave with his big team last Monday. George Neil was with him in the official capacity of swamper.

Samuel C. Wright, Superintendent of the Mint at Carson, died on Monday last. He was a pioneer citizen of Carson and a good man.

Mrs. C. W. Craig, accompanied by her daughter, Miss Cora, started for San Francisco yesterday morning. The latter will remain below and attend school at Oakland.

Richard Tenbroeck, the noted horseman, was found dead in his bed at his home in San Mateo county last Monday. He was the owner of Lexington and the breeder of Tenbroeck, the two most famous American racehorses.

A fire at Mojave on Monday last destroyed the large warehouse of Searles Bros., together with its contents. There were 60,000 pounds of refined borax, three carloads of hay, one carload of barley, etc., destroyed.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Gunn and little daughter returned on Monday after an absence of several weeks. Mr. Gunn visited his old home at Ottawa, on the trip, while Mrs. Gunn spent the time with her sister at San Francisco.

No sale of the Soda Works at Keeler has yet been effected. The present management continue to make soda and construct new vats. About ten head of horses will be added to their present stock and the work considerably extended.

In this issue will be found the announcement of William McDonald of Bishop as a candidate for the Republican nomination for Sheriff. Mr. McDonald has been a resident of Owens Valley for many years and is well and favorably known to the voters of Inyo county. If selected to head the local Rebublican ticket this Fall he will prove a hard man to beat.

Zamloch the magician, gave a highly interesting exhibition at Mairs' Hall last night. The famous cabinet trick caused much speculation as to how it was done. An entirely new performance will be given to-night, and another to-morrow night. Quite a number of valuable presents were given away last night and more will be given at the two remaining exhibitions.

The Bodie Fire.

Last Saturday's Bodie Miner contains a complete account of the fire. The conflagration started in a building occupied by Mrs. James Perry as a bakery and restaurant, about two o'clock in the morning. An alarm was given at once and the fire company called out, but lack of water prevented any possibility of allaying the progress of the flames.

Day dawned upon a scene of desolation. where once had stood prosperous business houses now nothing remained but their ruins. Main street presented a sorry sight. For nearly its entire length nothing met the eye but the debris of burned buildings. Scattered about in different places at a safe distance from the street were the things that had been saved. They comprised a miscellaneous assortment and included a little of everything, from a piano to a paper of pins.

Not an eating-house nor a lodging-house was left, and numerous miners and others were without places to sleep or procure breakfast; but the private families overcame this difficulty by placing their homes at the disposal of the unfortunates, so none went without food or shelter.

Early in the morning a grand scramble took place for buildings, and places that had before been considered worth but little became valuable. Everything in the shape of a house is being utilized for some purpose. A number of unoccupied buildings were still standing in different parts of town, and these will be moved to the old lots, or new ones will be built. Some of the business men are yet undecided as to where they will locate, but most of them will probably start at their old places.

The property saved from the burned houses amounted to but little. Some goods were taken out of the places on the west side of the street, but much thus saved was afterward burned or stolen. On the other side the people had placed all hopes in the timely arrival of the water, and but little effort was made to have things taken to a place of safety until it was too late to accomplish much.

Those who were burned out have furnished the Miner with the following estimates of their losses:

August Seile, $600.
Louis Lewis, $1000.
Richard McAlpin, $300.
—. Hansen, $1500.
T. J. Brown, $300.
Kohlman bros., $7000; insured for $1000.
Mrs. D. V. Goodson, $1500.
N. J. Salisbury, $8000.
Mrs. Jame Perry, $1500.
John McAlpin, $3000.
Jacob Levy, $6500.
Eli Jobl, $5000; insurance $500.
C. B. Donnelly, $1800.
J. B. Vieira, $5000.
N. W. Boyd, $15,000; insurance, $2000
R. A. Leale, $1000.
A. Soderling, $1000.
A. Maestretti, $1500.
Peter Tobin, $2000.
P. Walheim, $2000.
Fred Henselett, $2000.
John Nicolas, $1000.
J. W. Moyle, $1000.
Wells, Fargo & Co., $150.
E. Marks, $3000.
F. A. Fallmore, $1500.
Orlando E. Jones, $2700.
Andrew Arrild, $3000.
Mrs. S. A. Montrose, $1000.
M. J. Cody, $2000.
R. W. Scott, $250.

The above figures, though aggregating $88,100, do not represent the entire loss. A great many of the buildings were owned by San Francisco people. Not included in the above losses are the Langrell building and the old Parole saloon, which was owned by N. Carian. To the above amount should also be added the value of the personal effects of those who were living at the hotels and lodging-houses, which, together with the other losses, will swell the grand total to at least $100,000. As an offset to this sum there is $3500 worth of insurance, which will be received by three of the heaviest losers.

In all there were 64 buildings destroyed, and the burned district extends from the shed south of where Andrew Arrild's livery stable was to Cain's bank on the west side of Main street and on the east side from A. Soderling's assay office to the old dwelling house of Silas B. Smith, but which is now owned by John Langrell.

The Bridgeport Chronicle-Union says: "We had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Boland at the last Republican State Conventions that nominated Markham and Bowers, and found him to be a gentleman whom the Republicans of this Assembly District can place implicit confidence in, as he is very popular in Inyo county, where he is known as a good business man and thoroughly honest. If all the Assembly Districts in this State will be careful in the selection of their Assemblymen, as Inyo will be, the next Assembly will be an honest one; but it is a consolation to know that it cannot be worse than the last was. If Mr. Boland lives to be voted for he will receive a rousing vote in Alpine and Mono counties."

Hon. Joseph B. Lamar died at San Jose on Wednesday of last week. He was a California pioneer, having come to the State in 1849. His two sons, Walter A. and J. B. Lamar, were on their way to their father when he died, arriving too late to see him again in life.

No Substitutes

For Royal Baking Powder. The "Royal" is shown by all tests, official, scientific, and practical, stronger, purer, and better in every way than all other Baking Powders. Its superiority is privately acknowledged by other manufacturers, and well known by all dealers.

If some grocers try to sell another baking powder in place of the "Royal," it is because of the greater profit. This of itself is good evidence of the superiority of the "Royal." To give greater profit the other must be a lower cost powder, and to cost less it must be made with cheaper and inferior materials, and thus, though selling for the same, give less value to the consumer.

LOOK with suspicion upon every attempt to palm off upon you any baking powder in place of the "Royal." There is no substitute for the "Royal."

Painters on the Big Bridge.

He was a stout, well fed man on one of the bridge cars, and as he noticed the painters running lightly along the big cables, scarcely touching the handrail, he shuddered.

"They must have to pay those men well to get them to do that sort of work," he said to the conductor.

"They must, hey?" said the conductor. "Well, whether they must or not, they don't." And having got rid of this array of negatives he went on, "Them men gets $2.50 a day an no more."

"That seems small pay for such dangerous work," said the short man.

"Dangerous nothin," was the response. "I used to work at it an I didn't find any danger in it. There ain't none if the bridge don't fall, an that ain't likely. I'm a bit stiff now an not just in shape for that sort of work, but it's nothing to a young man.

"Most of them men is sailor men, as I was, an they're very glad to get a job like paintin the bridge. It ain't half as bad work as hustlin out at all hours an in all sorts of weather an pullin and haulin an reefin sails that's all covered with ice, and then bein cussed an mebbe knocked down with a belayin pin by the cap'n or mate, an all for twelve or fourteen dollars a month.—New York Mail and Express.

A Photographic Ghost.

There is one curious way by which houses have been made "haunted" as much as houses were ever the residences of spirits. In a New York town some summers ago a woman saw in passing the house of her birth what she was convinced was the spirit face of her dead mother, killed by lightning a month before. Of course this house became "haunted" in the minds of the superstitious—it had the unenviable reputation for many months. But a year afterward a more than usually brave citizen saw the face at the window as he was passing. It did not change as he approached.

And the result of his investigation showed that the lightning flash which killed poor Mrs. Rodman had photographically drawn her likeness on a pane of glass—a very faint impression, true, only noticeable when the sun was in a certain position, but then wonderfully bright, probably the best human photograph ever taken. The phonograph may be used to bequeath the eloquence of modern orators to a future generation, but the lightning flash in producing the perfect likeness of Mrs. Rodman can probably never be improved upon.—Boston Journal.

Employees of the Queen's Household.

The lord steward has the whole direction of the royal household below the stairs. The treasurer of the household, the comptroller of the household, the master of the horse and the master of the buckhounds have duties which their titles mark out, and they carry wands of office. The master of horses is the only one who can use the sovereign's horses, carriages, pages or footmen. There are also attached to the royal person a captain of the yeoman of the guard, a private secretary, a keeper of the queen's private purse, master of ceremonies, lords in waiting, gentlemen ushers of the private chamber, equerries, pages of honor, etc.

These last are dressed in antique costume, and attend at receptions and on state occasions. The groom of the robes and the young pages carry her majesty's train on state occasions. There are also maids of honor, mistress of the robes, ladies in waiting, etc. The maids of honor have the title of "honorable," and when they marry receive a present of £1,000 from the queen.—Joel Benton's London Letter.

Forgetting His Loss.

It is not unusual for people who have lost the use of a sense or of a member to talk, more or less unconsciously, as if they still possessed it. Not long ago a gentleman in the west, who had been totally blind for many years, but who manages to travel about notwithstanding his affliction, wrote to a friend in New York:

"I am going to New York this summer to see how the world wags, and I hope to see you while I am there."—Youth's Companion.

The average life of a rabbit is put at about nine years. The doe may have young eight times a year, averaging eight each time. The first litter is produced when but four months old. The progressions based on these figures lead to astonishing results. For three years the possible progeny of two rabbits has been calculated at over 13,000,000, and for seven years at 1,500,000,000.

SONNET.

Tell me, O Time, the utmost of thine art,
Thy wondrous healing art that men so praise;
For which no feat too hard is but to raise
The dead once more and lost life reimpart.
Men say that thou canst ease the burdened heart,
And bring new dower of light to darksome days,
And new companionships to lonely ways,
New joys whose charm holds back the tears that start.

Hast thou no cup save cold Lethean draught,
Which blots the past when I its virtues drain?
Give me the wine of love that once I quaffed!
Tho' but in dream I'll drink it once again.
No comfort may I find in all thy craft
If death of love alone can heal love's pain.
—New York Independent.

Changes in Small Arms.

In 1779 was published in America the volume of Baron Steuben's tactics, which contains the manual of arms for our revolutionary army. The musket was then a flintlock muzzle loader, with single ball or ball and buckshot, effective at about 100 yards, with a recoil as dangerous to the soldier as to the object aimed at. For firing and loading the commands were, the musket being loaded and at shoulder, "Poise firelock. Cock firelock. Take aim. Fire." "Half cock firelock. Handle cartridge, prime, shut pan; charge with cartridge, draw rammer; ram down cartridge; return rammer; shoulder firelock."

Up to 1840 we had the same old flint lock, smooth bore musket, with paper cartridges, and loaded by twelve commands: "Load; open pan; handle cartridge; tear cartridge; prime; shut pan; cast about; charge cartridge; draw ramrod; ram cartridge; return ramrod; shoulder arms."

About 1845 the percussion cap, previously used by sportsmen, was adapted to the smooth bore muzzle loader, and it was loaded in "ten times," or motions, gradually reduced to four motions, and finally to one, "Load at will."

Now, in 1890, every recruit knows that he can load his rifle and fire it from five to twenty times a minute, thereby exhausting his supply of sixty rounds in a few minutes, whereas as late as our civil war forty rounds in the cartridge box and twenty in the haversack were a full allowance for a day's fighting.—Gen. Sherman in North American Review.

The Influence of the Crank.

The genuine crank is a boon to any community. New England, being the native home of American intellect, is the nursery where the species is reared most successfully. Let the thoughtless scoffers of society laugh, the crank can afford neither to notice nor to mind. He, at least, is in earnest, and has something besides vain words to bring forth when he talks. He may be like one of those disagreeable nuts in the road that shake you up so painfully, or like the nettle that stings your hesitating fingers, but he never resembles the indistinct grain of dust blown hither and thither along the way, or the trembling blade of grass that grows uponly to be cut down by the scythe.

He may stick pins in your inflated vanity, he may look at your diminishing proportions through the small end of a pocket telescope; he may prod you and punch you without regard for your weaknesses or well veiled deformities, but he is your benefactor for all that. He makes you ashamed first, and then brings you out, forces you to grow. You uproot and cast aside the weeds that sap the nourishment from the soil of your wit, which, if it be a healthy plant, is to that extent benefited by the existence of the crank.—Kate Field's Washington.

Puritanic Horror of Kissing.

Many ridiculous anecdotes are told to illustrate Puritanic horror of this pleasant and natural salute—one of Rev. Brown, an English divine, who was known as the author of a Biblical Concordance. He courted his wife seven years before he asked if he might kiss her. "Just as you please," she answered demurely. "Let us first ask a blessing," he said, after which he kissed her.

"Why, it's good!" he exclaimed. "Let us return thanks." They were married in a few weeks.

That brings to my mind the saying of a young woman concerning a suitor whom she had rejected. In summing up his qualities she said: "He was good looking, he was educated, he was devoted, he sent me flowers—I always thought I'd love a man who sent me flowers—but," she concluded in a tone of disdain, "he hadn't sense enough to kiss me when he had a chance!"—Kate Kauffman in Jenness-Miller Magazine.

Characteristics of the American.

The American citizen is not content to exist as a mere animal. Physical well being does not limit his desire or aspiration. He is especially solicitous for the welfare and advancement of his children, and freely depletes a limited income in their education and training for a career in life, often upon other than ancestral lines. This tendency may become excessive, and is already to some extent creating a distaste for useful industry and a desire for conspicuous position, for accumulation without labor and speculative rather than productive occupation. Thus the average American lives upon a high plane, exciting the envy and emulation of people of other countries and inducing extraordinary immigration.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The Owner of Youth's Companion.

Daniel S. Lord is the Perry Mason & Co. (the nominal proprietors) of the Youth's Companion. He bought it some thirty years ago, after it had been in existence about thirty-three years, for five or six thousand dollars, when it had only a few thousand circulation. It now has an immense circulation, close upon 500,000. His income is reported to be not far from $200,000, one-half of which he distributes in charity. A business reason for adopting the name of Perry Mason & Co. is that there may be no change in the proprietorship in case of the real owner's death or retirement.—Writer.

Food for Neptune.

The quantity of meat thrown overboard into the Atlantic is very great. Out of 186 cargoes of animals sent to British ports in one year from Canada, consisting of 61,092 head of cattle, 61,382 sheep and 75 pigs, 658 cattle, 1,170 sheep and 1 pig were consigned to the deep during the voyage. Of the 432 cargoes exported from the United States to this country, comprising 138,661 head of cattle, 30,317 sheep and 17 pigs, 1,570 of the first and 857 of the second class of this live stock were thrown overboard during the voyage, thus numbering 4,856 animals which were pitched into the sea for the year.—London Letter.

Precocity.

Two scions of a well known Detroit house were recently locked up in a room by way of punishment. In their eagerness to escape they adopted heroic measures. Piling dresses, bonnets and bed clothes in the middle of the floor, they started a bonfire that brought out the fire department and gave it plenty of work, too. The little rascals went to bed that night as warm as though they had not escaped from the burning room.—Detroit News.

Handy Lamp Shade.

If you have a common lamp on your desk you can make a cheap shade for it by bending a piece of wire half way around the brass beneath the wick screw, leaving the other end long enough to bend up straight a little clear of the globe; on this end fasten a piece of pasteboard by running the wire through two holes in it, like a stitch.—Cor. Writer.

Lets His Neighbor's Dog Alone.

Some time ago a camp meeting was begun at Hollow Rock Springs, owned by an old fellow named Mayhew. Just after the religious exercises were started one of the officers of the association went to old Mayhew and said:

"Look here, old man, there is something the matter with that spring water."

"Think so?"

"Yes, I know it. Tastes bad and smells awful."

"Wall, I won't dispute your word. Man's got a right to his opinion in this here neighborhood."

"But can't something be done?"

"I don't know but thar mout."

"What would you suggest?"

"Wall, I reckon the best thing to do as a starter would be to take the dog out."

"Take the dog out?" the officer gasped. "What do you mean?"

"Mean you had better pull out the dead dog, an' give the water a chance to prove its innocence."

"Is it possible that you knew there was a dog in there?"

"Of course I knowed it when I seed him in thar."

"Why didn't you take him out?"

"Well, it's old Andy Patterson's dog, an' me an' Andy ain't on good terms, you know. Andy is mighty funny about his property. I found the dog, the same one, in my springhouse once, an' I pulled him out, an' pulled him putty hard, too, an' Andy got mad an' chunked me round a good deal, an' since that I ailus let his property alone."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Sunday with the Vanderbilts.

The Vanderbilts are all religiously inclined, and early on Sunday morning the children are washed and dressed and sent to Sunday school. At church time they go to their father's pew and sit there with him and their mother during the service. In the afternoon they go to Sunday school again. They are never allowed to use horses or carriages, nor to go out, except for a short walk as a matter of exercise. The day is spent very quietly. They have an early tea, and in the twilight the children gather in the music room, while one of the ladies plays the piano or organ. Cornelius Vanderbilt, William K., Elliott F. Shepard and the ladies of the families join for an hour or two in song.

The boys sometimes bring out their violins, the young girls play their harps, and there is an hour or two of the most delicious music that one could imagine. They sing hymn after hymn, and when the twilight fades the little ones are put to bed, to get up the next morning with the glow of health upon their cheeks, and begin their week of study and play that shall fit them to become strong men and women to administer wisely upon the vast fortunes that will soon be theirs.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Several Historic Fans.

A fan belonging to a New York lady was originally given by Napoleon to Josephine and then by the empress to Mme. Campan, from whom it passed to its present owner. Of other beautiful fans owned by fortunate New York ladies, one painted by Detaille is a spirited picture of horses taking the fence at Jerome park; another, by the painter Borra, minutely depicts a christening scene before a Spanish alcalde, while a third shows a charming skating scene in the Bois de Boulogne, painted by Lafitte. The fan which Mrs. Levi P. Morton carried on the night of the Centennial ball is an heirloom—exquisitely carved ivory sticks and charming water color painting on white silk.—New York World.

Smallpox in Germany.

The law of Germany makes vaccination compulsory, and provides for re-vaccination at stated periods. As a result smallpox is rapidly disappearing, a recent report giving the deaths for the whole empire as only 198 in 1886, 169 in 1887 and 110 in 1888. Of the deaths in 1888 about four fifths occurred in parts of the empire immediately bordering countries not protected by vaccination. Comparing the deaths of the larger cities with those of cities in other countries, the death rate from smallpox was 136 times as great in Austria, 30 times as great in Hungary, 16 times as great in England, 24 times as great in Belgium and twice as great in Switzerland.—Arkansaw Traveler.

She Never Told Her Age.

There is an astrologer's den in this city where visitors can learn the secrets of the past, present and future through the star of their nativity and by other occult means.

A lady went there the other day with a party of friends. The astrologer was asked to cast her horoscope.

"In what year were you born, madam?" he inquired.

"Must I tell that?"

"Certainly. I must know what star controls your life."

"But I do not know the year."

"Have you no means of finding out?"

"No, sir."

"Try and find some one who can remember. Look in the family Bible."

"I'll do nothing of the kind," snapped the indignant woman, and she left never to return.—Detroit Free Press.

Uses of the Sand Blast.

The use of the sand blast is now found to be a very convenient and effective method of cleaning buildings. A pump which forces a blast of air at a pressure of four ounces to the square inch through a system of flexible pipes removes the unclean surface of stone readily. One square foot of stone can thus be cleaned in ten minutes, and the rapidity of the process can be increased by the use of a higher pressure. Another, though an older application of the sand blast, is for the whitening of the outside of incandescent lamp bulbs, and decorative effects are often introduced by fastening letters or ornaments upon the outside.—New York Telegram.

DEAD SEA FRUITS.

They slay multitudes when they are the product of neglect of incipient disease. A "slight" cold, a fit of indigestion, biliousness or constipation each or any of these "minor ailments" advance in many cases with "league-destroying strides." Give them a swift, early defeat with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters and avert the danger. A benefit administered an alarming rebuke to the man who informed him that he had "only a cold!" "Only a cold," repeated the doctor. "What would ye have—the plague!" Rheumatism and la grippe are easily extinguishable at the start. Why then allow them to get up a full head of steam? Put on the rakes with the Bitters. The Genial warmth which this superb medicine diffuses through the system, the impetus it gives to the circulation of the blood, its soothing and strengthening effect upon the nervous, specially recommend it to the enfeebled and sick. 'Tis the great specific for malaria.

"Whoever would do good in the world ought not to censure. We ought not to destroy, but rather to construct."

CONCENTRATE YOUR VITALITY.

One of the secrets of health is the concentration of vitality. The recruiting of the vital principle is done effectually by BRANDRETH'S PILLS. "Health finds happiness in the mere sense of existence." BRANDRETH'S PILLS help nature to reassert her own when she has been forced to vacate her stronghold in the body. When an enemy attacks a fort all the forces are concentrated at the point of attack to resist the onslaught. So with the body. BRANDRETH'S PILLS concentrate all one's vitality to throw off the encroaching disease. Get BRANDRETH'S PILLS. Be sure to take no other.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold in every drug and medicine store, either plain or sugar coated.

Men should bear with each other; there lives not the man who may not be cut up—ay, lashed to pieces—on his weakest side.

A soft answer turneth away wrath; so does money in the People's Home Savings Bank.

PLEASURES OF MEMORY.

What a blessed thing is memory! How it brings up the pleasures of the past, and hides its unpleasantnesses! You recall your childhood days, do you not, and wish they would return? You remember the pleasant associations, while the unpleasant ones are forgotten. Perhaps to your mind comes the face of some friend. It was once a pale, sad face. It showed marks of pain, lines of care. It seemed to be looking into the hereafter, the unknown future. And then you recalled how it brightened, how it recovered its rosy hue, how it became a picture of happiness and joy. Do you remember these things? Many people do, and gladly tell how the health returned, how happiness came back, how the world seemed bright. They tell how they were once weak, nerveless, perhaps in pain, certainly unhappy. They tell of sleepless nights, restless days, untouched food, unstrung nerves. And then they tell how they became happy, healthy and strong once more. You have heard it often in the past, have you not? You have heard people describe how they were cured and kept in health? You certainly can remember what it is that has so helped people in America. If not, listen to what Mrs. Annie Jenness-Miller, who is known universally as the great dress reformer, says: "Six years ago, when suffering from mental care and overwork, I received the most pronounced benefit from the use of that great medicine, Warner's Safe Cure." Ah! now you remember. Now you recall how many people you have heard say this same thing. Now you recollect how much you have heard of this great Cure. Now you are ready to admit that memory is usually pleasing, that the highest pleasure comes from perfect health, and that this great remedy has done more to produce and prolong health than any other discovery ever known in the entire history of the whole world.

A curious phenomenon is reported from Batoum, on the shores of the Black sea. During a complete calm the sea is said to have suddenly receded from the shore, leaving it bare to a depth of ten fathoms. The water of the port rushed out to sea, tearing many of the ships from anchorage and causing a great amount of damage. After a short time the sea resumed its usual level.

PRELIMINARY WORLD'S FAIR EXHIBIT OF CALIFORNIA.

A little over a month ago, definite arrangements were concluded between the California World's Fair Commission, and the Mechanic's Institute of San Francisco, by which the two organizations will jointly give a "Preliminary World's Fair Exhibit of California," in the Mechanic's Pavilion, in San Francisco, beginning on the second Tuesday in January, and closing on the last Friday of February. As soon as arrangements were arrived at between the two organizations, Mr. Charles B. Turrill, who has had a large amount of experience in exhibition work, was appointed manager of this exhibition. An office was immediately opened, and correspondence commenced with various World's Fair Associations, throughout California, as well as with individual exhibitors, who are getting up striking displays for the World's Columbian Exposition, in Chicago, next year.

Everything now indicates that the exhibition in the Mechanic's Pavilion, next spring, will be one of the most remarkable that has ever been held in California. There will be no room for eastern or foreign exhibits; the entire 100,000 square feet of floor space, and the walls will be filled and covered with the native and manufactured products of this State.

It is the intention to exhibit as large a portion as possible of the display which will be shown in the California Building in Chicago, but this will by no means constitute the entire display. It is expected that those who will make displays in the different departmental buildings in Chicago will also show their products in the Preliminary Exhibition in San Francisco. Ample premiums will be provided for all these, as well as for the different county and industrial exhibits, in the premium list which is now being prepared.

As this exhibition is at a time when we may naturally expect a large number of eastern visitors in San Francisco, it will prove a most important "opening wedge" in securing popular interest in the California display at Chicago. It is altogether likely that these strangers in our midst will write to their friends, urging them to devote a large portion of their time while visiting the Columbian Exposition to the display of the California Building.

This Preliminary Exhibition will be a complete compendium of the history of the industrial development of California. It is intended to have in the display a great many rare old articles illustrating the early stages of the mining industry, agriculture, stock raising, etc. in the State, extending back to the time of the Mission Fathers. The art of the State from the earliest times to the present will be thoroughly represented in the art gallery. The educational display, which will be made to show the schools and universities of California will be on display before it is repacked for Chicago. The scenery of the State will be illustrated by thousands of photographs. Several counties already have men in the field taking negatives for this exhibition.

LOST LOVE.

Through the wood I wandered away, away,
And the forest green and grand
Was so full of the flowers of yesterday
I could feel my sorrow expand.

I questioned the shy May lilies so:
"Have you seen her, my sweet, my own?"
And I cried to the ring doves, cooing low:
"O tell me which way she has gone?"

But the ring doves all were silent above,
And silent the flowers of Spring,
So I search for the path where my false, false love
One day went a-wandering.

O love! O love! When love is so great
'Tis like climbing a mountain steep,
When all the way up your heart is elate,
And when you go down you weep!

—George Horton in Chicago Herald.

AN EXCHANGE OF SHIPS.

We were whaling in the Arctic ocean, to the north of Point Barrow, Alaska, in the old Scotch bark Emma Davis. That was my fifth whaling voyage, and no ship could have had worse luck. When we had been out fourteen months we had to buy a barrel of oil to keep our lamps going. We had sighted a whale now and then, but they were as wild as deer, and twice when we had made fast we had our boats stove and lost two or three men. We had lost topmasts, been aleak, had several sails destroyed, been on fire, and it seemed as if the very devil was to pay with the voyage, and yet no one could blame any one else. It was simply "ship's luck," and we had to make the best of it. Finally, late in the season, when we ought to have been heading for the south, we got among the whales. That is, they suddenly appeared all around us, and on the very first day we killed four without accident. We cut them in without trying out, as this was the quicker way to dispose of them, and the last of the blubber was no sooner over the rail than down went the boats and two more whales were secured.

The winter gales were at hand and ice was making fast, but it was our golden opportunity. We drifted slowly to the south, killing and cutting in as we went, and if we could have had two more weeks of it we could have filled the ship. One afternoon, as we had a half cut whale on each side of us, a gale sprang up, a heavy snow storm came on and in less than an hour we had to let go of our prizes and look sharply after the bark. It was the beginning of the arctic winter, and while the captain was satisfied of it he decided to take one more chance. There might come a few days of fine weather after the gale, and so we drifted away to the north to wear out the gale. For thirty hours there was no let up, and every half hour we had to turn out and shovel snow over the rails. Just as the gale broke we got among the field ice, and the temperature went down in four hours from 2 degs. below zero to 18 degs. below. From a gale blowing at the rate of forty miles an hour the wind died out until it hadn't motion enough to flare a candle. On that first night, when we were surrounded by field ice and drifting with it, many of the men were badly frostbitten, and the frost cracked through the old ship like muskets.

Morning came without a breath of wind, with the temperature down to 27 degs. below, and now every man knew it was one chance in ten for us. We were drifting very slowly to the south, and while we made everything as snug as possible the captain hoped for a break before winter actually shut down. Before noon the sea, as far as could be discovered from the crow's nest with a glass, was covered with field ice, and by night the temperature was 32 degs. below. We kept up our fires and got out all the spare clothing and bedding, but many of the men suffered with the cold, and no one slept more than ten minutes at a time on account of the noises. When morning came again it brought in wind, while the cold was just as intense, and we could now discover a great change in the ice around us. It was rugged and broken, the heave of the sea having piled cakes on top of each other, and the field was four or five feet thick. The old man himself went to the crow's nest and took a long look, and when he came down he said to the men, who were waiting to hear his words:

"Well, boys, it looks very serious to me, and I expect you had better prepare to winter this side of Dundee."

That settled it with us. We turned to and began to caulk and batten to keep out the cold, and in a couple of days we were as ready as we could be. For four days and nights there wasn't a puff of wind, with the cold so intense that ice formed to the thickness of seven feet alongside the bark. At daylight on the morning of the 5th a squall came out of the southwest, accompanied by snow, and before noon the ice field was broken up. At noon the wind died almost out, but within an hour it shipped to the north, and away went everything to the south. A wilder sight than a sea covered with great cakes and blocks of ice, each one tossing, grinding and crashing on its own account, no one ever saw. We dared show only a rag of sail—just enough to give her steerage way—and the smashing she got that afternoon seemed enough to break every timber in her bows. At night the wind fell again, and at 7 o'clock the thermometer marked 42 degs. below. As soon as the heave of the sea subsided the ice was firmly welded together again, and when morning came there were hills and hummocks in sight as big as the ship. The men were now told by the mate that our position was about ninety miles north of Smith's bay, and that our floe was no longer drifting. This signified that the southern edge of it rested against the shore ice, and that we were in for it, unless some unlooked for streak of luck came to our aid.

Next day there were heavy wind squalls, but the ice did not break nor did the ship move. That settled it. For the next week we had calms and squalls, with the temperature ranging from 27 to 38 degs. below, but the pack was as solid as a rocky ledge. We were housed in by this time and had established the winter routine, and the arctic night had come. For the next month, not to weary the reader with details, our life was that so often described in the books. Then a sudden and terrible interruption came. The bark began to heave out. The first movement occurred at about 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and filled everybody with dire alarm. After five minutes she heaved again, lifting right out of the solid field, with great cakes clinging to her, as if machinery was at work. As she lifted she canted to starboard, and at noon her decks were at an angle of 45 degrees. It has always seemed to me that powder ought to have been used to blow up the ice around her and let her back. Indeed, had not our captain got so badly rattled we could have cut and sawed and dragged half an acre of ice in half a day. The carpenter, who had a little plan of his own, reported that the heave had shattered several planks in her bottom, and that she would fill if she was cradled back. She took one more heave, canting over until almost on her beam ends, and then we got the order to abandon her.

We got out clothing, bedding, provisions, a compass and four boats, and at midnight headed away in four gangs for Smith's bay, each gang having a boat, which was dragged and lifted over the ice. The order to abandon ship has the same effect on the sailor that the order to retreat does on the soldier. It creates a panicky feeling and he loses his judgment. We had not gone five miles before some of the men began to curse the captain's stupidity in leaving the neighborhood of the bark, and others expressed their doubts of the carpenter's reports. However, all pressed forward, and after making ten miles we went into camp. Fortunately for us there was no wind, while the thermometer was only about 15 degs. below. After a rest of six hours we pushed on again, and now our marches and rests were marked by hours. It was terrible hard work crossing those ice fields, and five hours of pulling, hauling, climbing and sliding were enough to wear out the best man in the crew.

We had made forty miles or more, and were strung out on the pack for a mile or more, when a man named Tinkerson and myself, who were ahead to pick the route, turned a large hummock or hill of ice to find ourselves bumping up against a three masted ship. There she lay, broadside to us and not over fifty feet away, looming up in the darkness like a mountain. We rubbed our eyes and looked again, but it was not a deception. We sent the news back and waited till all had come up, and then Capt. Tree went forward with his mates and hailed her. There was no response, and after hailing again the first mate climbed in over the bows. In three or four minutes he reported her abandoned, and we all went on board. We soon found her to be the Bristol ship Endurance, a whaler of course, and two-thirds full of blubber and oil. She had a slight list to port, and after looking her over the officers said that she had hove out, the same as our bark, but had settled back again. She had also been abandoned in a hurry, as there were many evidences; but an inspection showed plenty of provisions aboard and proved her perfectly sound. We had our bedding and clothing, and when it was decided to take possession of her the crew were pleased. In three hours after first sighting her we were as much at home aboard as if we had formed the original crew. She was a larger craft than ours and also better found, and we profited by the change.

We had been aboard of the Endurance about a month when the carpenter fell sick. In his case it was pure homesickness and nothing else. He was moody and taciturn, refused to make any effort to throw off the feeling, and at length took to his bed. There was really no medicine to touch his case. He was slowly dying because of his desire to get home to wife and bairns. All of us had a touch of his malady, but we shook it off by hunting, trapping, indulging in games, and keeping our thoughts with the ship. Lord! man, but I have often wondered why half the crew did not go dead crazy. It was endless night. It was ice—ice—ice. It was like being shut up in a dungeon, with the addition that when night came and all was still the ship was full of groans and sighs from stem to stern—noises caused by the ice heaving and settling. I was appointed to nurse the carpenter, and when he had been brought very low and knew that he must go he told me a secret. He said he had made a false report to the captain about the damage to the bark's bottom on purpose, to induce him to abandon her and start for land. He hoped in this way to get home the sooner.

This confession was made to me with the promise on my part not to betray the man while living, and he lived on for two weeks after making the statement. When he had been buried in an icy grave I told the captain, and he at once fitted out an expedition to go back and look up the bark. The first mate and five men composed this party, and after being gone a week, during which time the weather was full of tempest, snow and sleet, they returned from the west and blundered right up against us before they saw the ship. Their compass had been broken, and they had been lost for six days on that fearful waste of ice. One man died of exposure that night, and two others were used up for a month. Two weeks later the second mate headed a party, but they only went about fifteen miles to the north. They reported traveling so difficult that they had to return. Nothing further was done until the sun and daylight came again. Then the first mate set out again, but after making about half the distance he found open water and signs of a break up, and returned.

No further efforts were made. Day by day the sun lasted a little longer, giving us more of the blessed daylight, and at last a gale came to break up the great field and show us streaks of open water. When we were finally clear of the icy bed which had held the ship we headed for Point Barron, sometimes gaining and sometimes losing ground. One day, I remember, we made twenty miles to the south, but on the very next a change of wind packed the ice and drifted us that far back to the north. We were slowly working down toward the straits, however, when, one day at noon, after a snow squall lasting about two hours, we got into a channel running southwest. We had scarcely entered it before we caught sight of a bark coming down a channel from the north, and not over a mile to the west of us. Twenty voices at once cried out that the stranger was our old craft, the Emma Davis, and as we neared each other, running on the long lines of a triangle, everybody felt sure of it. We also noticed much excitement aboard the bark, but it was only when the two crafts got out their ice anchors within a stone's throw of each other that matters were fully explained.

Who do you suppose the strange men were? None others than the crew of the Endurance. They had our bark and we had their ship. A swap had been made of crafts. Their ship had hove out about the same time ours did, and they had abandoned her for the same reasons. Instead of trying to make the land they had sought to find a brig which they had seen to the north of them. This brig was a myth, or some foreign vessel which got safely out and could not afterward be traced. In hunting for her they came across our bark. Three days only had passed, and yet she had canted back almost to an even keel. They had boarded her, taken full possession, and then worked her out on the breakup. We changed crews and resumed the voyage, and both crafts entered the port of Nuwuk together, whence, later on, both resumed the business of whaling. It was called even up all the way round, and neither was debtor nor creditor.—New York Sun.

THE MANGO TRICK

How the Indian Jugglers Make a Full Grown Mango Tree Spring Up.

SIMPLE, WHEN YOU UNDERSTAND IT

An Illusion That Has Long Puzzled the World, Explained for the First Time.

My readers will remember that some months ago I appealed for information respecting Indian jugglery, and especially for details of the manner in which the celebrated mango trick was performed. If I may recapitulate the circumstances under which my appeal was made, it may be added that a discussion had arisen regarding the relations of science with what was held by many persons to be occult and inexplicable phenomena, including not only the resuscitation of buried fakirs, but the "participation" of theosophical bodies and objects themselves.

In the attitude of a scientific skeptic, I maintained that it was unsafe to assume the inexplicable theory of matters until we had exhausted the probabilities which lie at our doors, and I said the same thing concerning a "boom" in ghosts and ghost seeing. Most things come to those who live long enough to wait, and after the receipt of many letters regarding Indian jugglery I have at last been favored with what I venture to think is the true explanation of the mango trick. This trick consists in the juggler causing a mango plant to grow out of a pot containing earth, amid which a mango seed has been planted.

As far as I can discover, there exist various modifications of the trick, for some of my correspondents declare that it is not a mango which grows out of the pot, but only a branch of some tree which the juggler has plucked off close by the scene of his operations. The typical trick, however, shows a mango plant growing bit by bit as the juggler performs, and I think we have arrived at the secret of the operation at last.

My present correspondent writes to me from the far off Noumea, New Caledonia.

AN EXHIBITION OF THE TRICK.

He is an old Anglo-Indian, writing with a full experience of what he has seen, and, as the sequel will show, speaking with the authority of one who has been behind the scenes. He does not agree with the explanation of Herr Hermann, who said the growing plant trick was performed through the performer concealing the pot, with the plant in it, under his robe.

In 1865 my correspondent was on the point of leaving Calcutta, when some native jugglers came on board the steamship to give an exhibition of their powers. The surroundings were thus very favorable for the performance of anything but a very dexterous trick, and the mango exhibition was given on the bare deck. The performer was almost naked, so there was no opportunity for the concealment of a flower pot under a robe. He placed before him first of all a small, flat, native wickerwork basket, such as snakes are carried in. This was filled with earth. A mango seed was then produced.

It was a very large one—a point, this, of importance in view of what follows—and was duly placed in the earth and covered up. The earth was watered and the basket in its turn concealed by a small cotton cloth. Then began the usual mutterings and incantations, while the earth was again sprinkled with water and stirred with the fingers of the operator. After a few minutes' interval the juggler lifted the cloth and showed to the spectators two small mango leaves appearing above the surface of the earth.

The basket was once more covered up, the watering of the earth and the incantations proceeded, and in a short time, when the cloth was removed, a mango plant, seven or eight inches high and bearing four or five leaves, was disclosed to view. After another interval a seedling mango appeared at least thirteen inches high and bearing seven or eight leaves. Here the performance ended, my correspondent adding that he did not see the fruit produced, although in some cases, it is said, the jugglers undertake to bring the fruit itself into equally rapid existence.

SECRET OF THE TRICK.

Curiosity was rife, of course, regarding the juggler's modus operandi, and my correspondent, anxious to know how the trick was performed, offered the juggler a good round sum of money for the disclosure of his secret. After some hesitation the man consented to reveal his art, stipulating that his revelation should be conducted in a secluded spot. A cabin on the ship was offered and accepted as a suitable place, and the juggler and my correspondent retired thereto. The basket was prepared as before, and the mango seed was handed around. It was, as before, a large one.

On its being returned to the juggler he pressed one end of the seed with his long finger nail, when the seed opened. Two small leaves, those first seen in the deck trick, were withdrawn from the seed, and next in order came forth the stem with four leaves. Ultimately the full thirteen inches of the plant were manipulated out of the seed before the eyes of the spectators. The seed was in fact a hollow one, and the young plant had been dexterously folded within its compass. It is the art of folding the plant inside the seed which constitutes the essence of the trick.

My correspondent added that he has repeated the trick since, and a simple experiment shows how its conditions can be realized. Most leaves can be so folded that when liberated from pressure they spring back to their original shape. The folding, however, must be done in a special and careful manner. The upper surface of the leaf must be folded on itself, and that surface skillfully treated and watered will scarcely show a crease on a superficial examination.

The creasing which the under surface will show is of course concealed from the spectator's view. If the fruit is produced in the course of the trick, my correspondent conjectures, it also is contained in the hollow seed. It is likely to be a very small mango, which is packed in a dry state, and which, under the watering process, swells out to considerable proportions.—Dr. Andrew Wilson in Illustrated London News.

In Belgium no person is allowed to vote unless he is a taxpayer to the amount of forty francs a year. This law makes the voters only twenty-two out of every thousand of population.

In some countries the leaves of trees are still used for books. In Ceylon the leaves of the tall pot tree are used for that purpose.

The Liverpool elevated railway will be worked by electricity, using motor cars instead of separate locomotives.

Who First Used the Weed?

To me it appears probable that even before the discovery of the fourth quarter of the globe a sort of tobacco was smoked in Asia. This conjecture being mentioned to the celebrated traveler M. Pallas, he gave the following answer: "That in Asia, and especially China, the use of tobacco for smoking is more ancient than the discovery of the New World, I, too, scarcely entertain the doubt. Among the Chinese, and among the Mongol tribes who had the most intercourse with them, the custom of smoking is so general, so frequent, and become so indispensable a luxury; the tobacco purse affixed to their belt so necessary an article of dress; the form of the pipes—from which the Dutch seem to have taken the model of theirs—so original, and lastly the preparation of the yellow leaves, which are merely rubbed to pieces and then put into the pipe, so peculiar that we cannot possibly derive all this from America, by way of Europe, especially as India, where the habit of smoking tobacco is not so general, intervenes between Persia and China. May we not expect to find traces of this custom in the first account of the voyages of the Portuguese and Dutch to China?"—Beckman's Technology.

Bass and Butterfly.

I was fishing for bass one day in a quiet pool on Elkhorn creek, near Frankfort, Ky., on the outer rim of what is known as Gault's bend. A few yards above where I was standing, knee deep in the water, was a broad shallow, where the current rippled over sunken and about exposed rocks—before subsiding in the deeper waters of the pool. As I drew my bait temptingly across the pool in search of a hungry bass, I noticed a yellow butterfly winging its zigzag flight across the shallow mentioned, and close to the surface of the water.

When half way across, a small bass, probably not over a quarter pound weight, suddenly leaped from the water, struck the butterfly with unerring aim, and fell back with a splash in the shallows. The butterfly was hit hard, as it fell dead or stunned in the stream about three feet from where the bass had intercepted its flight, but unfortunately the little gladiator failed to recover his prize, as it floated undisturbed down into the pool below.—Forest and Stream.

The Irish in Morocco.

A little over a hundred years ago—that is to say, in the year 1788—the then reigning sultan of Morocco took as his wife a red haired and blue eyed Irish girl, the young widow of a sergeant of engineers who had died in Morocco. This Celtic lady seems to have left a famous record behind her. She ruled the sultan and not infrequently rode into battle at the head of her husband's troops.

Her son, known as Mulai Yezzid, inherited much of her pluck and spirit, and was in open rebellion at the time of his father's death. It is a very open question how much of the blood of this Irish lassie runs in the veins of the present sultan of Morocco, Muleyel-Hassan, but it is at least interesting to assume that the known partiality of this ruler for the British nation is due to the romantic marriage which his ancestor made over a century ago.—London Figaro.

Becoming Left Handed Suddenly.

Three years ago a young lady of Fall River, Mass., was hit upon the left side of her head by a falling sign as she was walking along a street in Boston. This was followed by brain fever. After some weeks she was as well in body and mind as ever, but from a right handed person she had become so left handed that she could neither cut, sew nor write with her right hand, but found it easy to do all these things with her left. Her right hand was just about as useful as her left had been before she was hurt. What is strange is that, with so recent a change in the use of her hands, she never makes an akward motion, and is as graceful in the use of her left hand as if she had been born left handed.—Boston Post.

What People Talk About.

If people only talked about what they know a profound silence would settle upon society and a large reward would be offered for an answer to the conundrum originally propounded by Pontius Pilate, "What is truth?" Poor human nature likes to believe the worst of its kind, and there are those who feel personally injured at praise of others. One touch of scandal makes the whole world kin. Only exhibit the weaknesses of the great and a glow of satisfaction suffuses the faces of the little. It is proof positive of the whole democratic dogma, that "one man is as good as another—and better too."—Kate Field's Washington.

A SAND WAVE.

An Irresistible Roller that is Sweeping Across Cape Henlopen.

IMPOSSIBLE TO STOP ITS PROGRESS.

Neither Marshes Nor Forests Have Been Able to Check it.—Lighthouse Buildings Buried.

Without doubt one of the most interesting features of the Atlantic coast of the United States, and, in fact, one of the most interesting phenomena of the whole country, is the traveling hill of Cape Henelopen. A ridge of sand, more than a mile long, 50 feet high and 200 yards wide at the base, is rolling inland, like a mighty wave from the sea, and with a power that is irresistible. Formed at the water's edge, nobody knows certainly just when it began to move inland. Within the memory of men barely past middle age, it has traversed a space worth describing in detail.

In 1845, when Gen. Joe Johnson, as a government engineer, was engaged in surveying this part of the coast, he found on the north side of Cape Henlopen a great ridge of sand. It was in appearance like the ridges that divide the Great South Bay of Long Island from the sea, save that it towered seventy-two feet above high water mark. It was a ragged ridge, with coarse grass growing over a few parts of its surface and a few gnarled and stunted pines on its southern or land side. Behind it was a salt marsh or valley, where the water was from an inch to two or three feet deep at the lowest ebb tide. Inland from the marsh, and indeed on low ridges in this marsh, was a great growth of pine trees. Half a mile back from the beach trees were found from two to three feet in diameter, and tall in proportion.

In making the survey, Engineer Johnson noted that whenever the wind came in from north'ard it picked up the sand on the weather side of that great ridge in such clouds that no one could travel along the ridge except when the face was covered with a thick veil, and even then only with great effort and much pain. It was like facing a blast from the desert of Sahara, and sometimes almost like facing a charge of bird shot.

The sand thus picked up by the wind was carried up over the brow of the hill, across the narrow plateau on the southern side, where the wind formed an eddy that could not support the weight of the sand. The wind was very thorough in its work, for it gathered the sand from the entire face of the ridge to carry over to the rear. Thus, with every northerly gale, inch after inch was cut away in front and carried back. Inch by inch the face of the ridge receded; inch by inch the rear face advanced. The gnarled and twisted pines on the back surface disappeared under the wave of sand. The edge of the marsh was reached and covered. The little tree covered ridges were next buried out of sight. Then the great forest was reached. Where the trees stood thick and formed a solid wall of limbs and leaves the sand wave rolled up into a perpendicular wall before them, higher and higher, until level with the tree tops, and then curled over and broke on them as a wave of water might have done. Where the trees were far apart the sand flowed into and filled the opening. In one way and another it steadily advanced, and the people saw with wonder the forest buried before their eyes. The great trees, that seemed to be able in their strength to defy all that nature might bring against them, strove to put forth new branches above the rising tide, grew faint in the struggle, turned their green leaves to yellow, their yellow cones to gray and black, and died of suffocation.

As the years passed the receding wave began to uncover the old surface of the ground that had been buried. Old landmarks along the edge of the marsh reappeared. Even the little ridges themselves, with the old sod dead but easily recognized, appeared, and finally the wind scooped the sand out of the hollows of the marsh, and today the tide ebbs and flows there, and at low tide the water is about as deep as it used to be before the sand wave swept across, the chief difference between the marsh as it used to be and as it is now being that there are now no ditches in it.

Then, strange to tell, a new growth of pines sprang up on the little old ridges and a new ridge of sand formed along shore where the old one had stood. The new ridge along shore is only a small one—perhaps twelve or fifteen feet above the water in places, but it is growing as the new trees behind it grow, and it may possibly start inland as the big one that preceded it did.

As the big sand wave continued its way the old forest that had been buried began to be uncovered again, so that now the stranger that traverses the ridge sees on one hand the living giants of the forest gasping in the last throes of death, and on the other the bleached and decaying skeletons of those that had to succumb. It is a picture that is at once desolate and depressing.

The old road that once led through what was the heart of the strip of forest land between the beach and the creek that runs westerly through Lewes is now just about under the crown of the advancing sand wave. Could the wave by any means be stopped in its course, so that the old road would be forgotten after a hundred or two of years, some savant in digging there would reach the old milestones, and mayhap a piece of old buggy wheel or tire, and would stop to marvel. What untold millions of years, he would say, must have elapsed since these milestones and that old buggy wheel were made!

At its extreme eastern end the great wave has entered upon the domain of and made a deal of trouble for Uncle Sam. Uncle Sam's lighthouse stood right in the path of the sand roller. There was a comfortable old fashioned two-story house beside the tall white tower that held the lamp, and on the weather side of the tower a house used for storing oil. Back (south) of the house was a garden. At first the spray from the wave served merely to annoy the housekeeper; it was carried on the wind and dashed against doors and windows. No kind of weather strip could keep that spray from seeping in through cracks and crevices, and covering furniture and carpets and even filling bureau drawers. That was bad enough, but the wave was all the time advancing, and pretty soon drifts of sand for all the world like drifts of yellow snow began to accumulate at the house corners, and, worse still, to spread across the garden and interfere seriously with the cabbages and sweet potatoes.

Then the wave itself arrived. Rising like a comber on the beach, it towered for a time above the oil house, and then over it tumbled and buried the little building out of sight. Then it gathered about the old home of the light keeper, and in time that, too, was covered as the oil house had been, while all trace of the garden had disappeared long before the burial of the oil house.—Lewes (Del.) Cor. New York Sun.

ROSALIND UP TO DATE.

Without, Independent and Businesslike; Within, Very Womanly.

I met him on the Elevated the other day and he seemed depressed and out of spirits.

"What's the matter?" asked I.

He flushed in a conscious way, and said, "Oh, nothing." Then in the next breath he added: "Yes there is, too, and I'm going to confide in you. You impress me as the sort of woman a man could confide in."

I have always flattered myself that there is something in my face that inspires confidence. I was pleased to see that this expression was generally recognized.

"I'm in love," he continued, "desperately in love, and I feel sure it is a hopeless case. I don't mind mentioning her name to you. Indeed, any man might feel proud of himself to think he was in love with her. It's Miss Z. That's why it's so hopeless. You know what Miss Z.'s position is. So do I. I know she is a clever, capable, competent business woman. She fights her own battles with the world, and asks no odds of anybody. She is highly respected by her employers, who recognize her true worth and her value to them. She needs no help, no protection from any one. I don't dare to propose to her on this account. Why, she'd just laugh at me for my pains. She would want to know of what earthly use I could be to her.

"I came pretty near doing it once. I saw her at the opera one night, and she looked so girlish and dependent in her white frock, with her hair curled in childish rings about her face, that I made up my mind she did need a protector and that I would propose next day.

"Well, the next day came, and I happened to meet her in the morning on her way down town. It was raining. She had on a very mannish, double breasted, long caped mackintosh, a pair of stout boots, a storm hat and a very aggressive umbrella tucked under her arm. There were no babyish curls that day. Her hair was braided tightly all about her head, and looked as businesslike as possible. My courage failed me. I said to myself that it was all nonsense. That trim, alert, capable young person didn't need me or any other man to look after her. And so I didn't propose. That's all," he wound up gloomily.

It happened that the very next afternoon Miss Z. dropped in for a little chat and a cup of tea. I told her the story because it was too good to keep. She laughed a bit, and then she sighed.

"Yes," she said, "I dare say I give people that impression. I intend to, at least. I resolved when I first went out in the world to scramble for myself that I would never ask any indulgence from any one on account of my sex. I would put on a brave front anyway. Like Rosalind, I'd have a martial outside, though in my heart the woman's fear did lie hidden. Well, your story shows that I have succeeded. And yet I am a woman still at heart.

"I don't like to do things for myself. I'd rather be waited upon, cared for, watched over by some great, big, delightful man. I often look at other women with their husbands and sweethearts, and sigh to remember I have none. You would not have believed it? No, I dare say not. And probably poor young X. would not believe it now. But it is true; true of me and of every woman. No matter how brave and capable we may seem, we are all cowards at heart. We like a man to fight the world for us."

And when I looked at her there were two tears slowly rolling down her face.—New York Recorder.

Wonders of the Trance State.

Professor William James, a well known Harvard instructor, in speaking of the trance condition and trances in general, says: "I know a woman who in her trances knows facts which altogether transcend her possible normal consciousness—facts about the lives of people whom she never saw or heard of before. I make this statement deliberately, knowing the liabilities to which it exposes me. My own impressions are that the trance condition is an immensely complex and fluctuating thing, into the understanding of which we have hardly begun to penetrate, and concerning which any very sweeping generalizations are sure to be premature."—St. Louis Republic.

Lemons at Funerals.

In 1878 I was called upon to officiate (for a neighbor) at a funeral in a Lancashire town. The relatives, working people, but not poor, desired me to attend at the house before the procession left it. I found the company drinking lemon juice, mixed with warm water, sweetened and spiced. The vessel was a large two handled pot mug, and the rind of the lemon was wreathed from handle to handle. I found it would have been a great offense to refuse to drink of it.—Notes and Queries.

Effect of Quinine on Laborers.

Workmen occupied in the manufacture of quinine are said to suffer from a peculiar cutaneous eruption, which some claim is caused by the vapor from boiling solutions, and the statement is made that about 90 per cent. of those engaged are more or less affected.—Pharmaceutical Era.

IN EXILE.

A Young Polish Soldier's Horrible Experience in Russia.

FIGHTING AGAINST THE CZAR.

Captured and Sentenced to the Mines of Siberia.—A Desperate and Successful Attempt to Escape.

Pursuing the peaceful occupation of a brewery manager in this city is a well known citizen upon whose head a good price is set by the Russian government, and whose story has all the horrors of and more intensity than the narrative of George Kennan concerning the Siberian exiles.

Theodore Bender, manager of the Cooperative brewery, is a well known south side resident. He walked into Attorney Bander's office last week.

"Cold morning," he said by way of greeting.

"Yes," responded the lawyer. "There's a touch of Siberia in this."

"Siberia—ha, ha, ha!" laughed Mr. Bender. "I could give you a few points upon that."

He was urged to tell his story, and he did so.

At about the time the civil war was raging in this country the inhabitants of Poland made their last determined stand for freedom. Bender was a boy of eighteen years. In 1861 he entered the Polish army, and for a year and a half did not know what it was to sleep under a roof. In three great battles which were fought he received wounds. The troop of which he was a member was surrounded by the czar's forces and a siege began. The provisions of the besieged were exhausted, and they were compelled to kill their horses for meat. Mr. Bender says that young horseflesh is as sweet as chicken. After untold privations a break for liberty was made. A bullet struck Bender in the back of his head and he tumbled from his horse. He remembered nothing until he recovered consciousness in a hospital. When he had partially recovered he was confined nine months in jail.

A FIGHT WITH RUSSIAN GUARDS.

No trial was given him, but he was sentenced to twenty-five years at hard labor in the mines of Siberia. In the nine months of his imprisonment he was allowed very little food and barely sufficient water to drink. He asked for water to wash in but was refused, and the slime of the cell was incrusted over his skin and clothing. Finally he, with over 200 prisoners, men, women and children, were started for Siberia under guard of sixty soldiers. He tramped through the snow for seven months. Every day some of the weaker ones fell from exhaustion. They were placed on sledges which the other prisoners were compelled to drag.

At some of the villages the inhabitants took pity on them and gave the prisoners covering for their exposed feet, food and water. At other places the inhabitants pelted them with dirt and filth. The soldiers offered them no protection. At Miensk—civilization having been left behind and escape being deemed impossible—the chains by which the convicts had been bound in pairs were removed. In the prison pen at this point the horrors endured by the prisoners are scarcely describable. Vermin attacked them with the ferocity of hunger. Some of the creatures, it is declared, were as large around as an ordinary lead pencil and half an inch long, and they covered the ceiling, walls and bunks completely.

One night of such existence, added to the suffering of the exiles in the previous seven months, decided a number of the more hardy of the men. They realized that of those who endured the march few would survive the expiration of their sentence, and a general agreement was entered into to attack the soldiers and escape or die in the attempt. The exiles had no arms, while the soldiers carried rifles and other effective weapons. Sticks, stones, and even bare fists were to be employed by the desperate rebels to secure their freedom. They waited until the train reached a spot where the underbrush was thick. Then eighty of the men dropped their burdens and rushed upon the soldiers. Some were trampled down at once by the horses. Others fell under the murderous fire poured into their midst by the soldiers as soon as they could bring their guns to bear.

A REMARKABLE ESCAPE.

In all thirty or forty of the exiles were left dead upon the ground. About twenty, after alternately fighting and running for two hours, got into the brush and left their pursuers behind. The little band scattered to make pursuit more difficult. A half dozen, among whom was Bender, kept together. They skulked and starved for four months and seven days, avoiding the towns and picking up a precarious living until the German frontier was reached in safety. They were kindly treated by the German people, and Bender spent three months in the empire. Assistance reached him from friends in New York, and he took passage, arriving here July 4, 1865. Being well educated and intelligent, he found no difficulty in securing employment, and is now well to do. He has not, of course, ever dared venture back to Russia, where the police would enforce severe punishment upon him for his escape. He learned after his arrival that his father was a convict at the mines, and later heard of his death there.

Mr. Bender married after his arrival in this city. His wife was a Polish girl. She had been possessed of information concerning a plot to again rebel against the rule of the czar. She was arrested and required to divulge all she knew. She refused to give the information which would lead to the death or transportation of fifty or sixty of the conspirators and was sent to prison. For a year and five months she was starved and tortured in the filthy prison. Periodically she was subjected to examinations, but invariably professed her entire ignorance of any conspiracy. The Russian officials finally became convinced that she knew nothing and let her go. She was required to take an oath that she would return to her home, but did not hold herself bound by the extorted promise and came to America, where she met Mr. Bender.

Bender's experience is barely outlined here. The details are many of them too shocking for print. He declares that Kennan's picture of life in Siberia is not overdrawn.—Cleveland World.

Why the Wren Is King.

The wren is chased every St. Stephen's Day on account of it betraying the Saviour by chattering in a clump of furze where he was hiding. It is called the "king of all birds," because it concealed itself beneath the wing of the eagle when that lordly bird claimed supremacy by soaring highest. "Here I am," said the wren, mounting above the eagle's head when the latter could go no higher.—Irish Times.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 12 1892

The accounts of the hot wave which has just swept over the country from the Rocky mountains to the Atlantic ocean show an almost unparalleled record of death and prostration from the effects of the heat. Chicago has suffered terribly, and other large cities have had more than their share of the ill effects of the high temperature. We have frequently called attention to the fact that the thermometer is by no means an infallible guide as to actual heat or cold, that is, actual in relation to effects upon the human system. While people were dying in Chicago faster than at the rate of two an hour the thermometer indicated a temperature of only 92 or 94. Here in California such a degree of heat as that might cause discomfort or inconvenience, but that would be all. It would not drive a man from his work in the hayfield or orchard or vineyard, nor would it even deter him from the pursuit of any outdoor sport or pleasure.

The Call is authority for the statement that Andrew Carnegie is not "even a naturalized citizen of the United States." The Call must be mistaken. Carnegie has taken an active part in American politics for many years, and has been the most liberal of givers to the Republican campaign fund. Everywhere he has expressed the most enthusiastic praises of the "American system of protection," and has written a book called "Triumphant Democracy," eulogizing the United States. His wealth and so-called philanthrophy have been pointed at for years by the Republican press as object lessons showing the beneficence of the Republican tariff. If Mr. Carnegie is not a citizen both he and the Republican party have been practicing fraud on the American people.

Another master in the art of sophistry is Mr. Aldrich of Rhode Island, who is probably an attorney of the New England Screw company of Providence. With artic frigidity this gentleman stated the other day from his desk in the Senate, that the cost of living to a family in moderate circumstances has been reduced 3 3-10 per cent by increasing the taxes upon the necessaries of life. Now we do not feel like asking the senator from "Little Rhody" if he yawns whenever he tells a lie, but we feel like yawning ourselves at reading this statement. Why doesn't Mr. Aldrich move to so increase taxation upon the necessaries of life that it shall cost poor people absolutely nothing to live? This would beat Henry George and Edward Bellamy clean out of sight as an abolishment of poverty.

When you go to catch a thief and a gun-fighter, be sure that you "take the drop" on him. Don't let him take it on you or the services at the grave will be very interesting—to your friends. They will be singing hymns, of course, but you won't hear them. These remarks apply to Mr. Smith, of this city, who went to arrest one Evans at Visalia, for the Collis train robbery, but left Mr. Evans' residence so precipitately that a game of casino—cards, spades and all four aces—could have been played on his coat-tail. Mr. Smith has probably read of Vidocq and Jonathan Wild and thinks it is a nice thing to be a constable. He'll know better, after awhile.—Herald.

A Los Gatos piano forte maker is about to build one of those instruments entirely of redwood for exhibition at the World's Fair. And whatever grows up the sheep herders will burn down.

Two Kinds of Diamonds.

"Several years ago I chanced to stop at the same hotel in Dallas, where Alvin Joslin did," remarked an actor now filling an engagement in Chicago, "and I was astounded by his ostentatious parading of his diamonds. There were a number of ladies sitting upon the hotel veranda, and he seemed to take especial delight in dazzling their eyes with his jewels. After strutting past them several times he suddenly stopped, made a bow to the coterie, and said very brusquely: 'An, I see that you admire my diamonds. Permit me. This one is worth $2,000. This cost me $2,500. This cluster pin I value at $5,000. I have with me diamonds worth $30,000, and I own $10,000 worth which I have stored for safe keeping in a Chicago bank.'

"None of the ladies fainted or fled or went into ecstasies over the display, and not a word was vouchsafed in reply.

"That evening when Davis entered the hotel dining room he was seated at a table in the middle of the room and alone. A few minutes later a half dozen young men in full dress entered the dining room in a body and sat down at the same table. In the center of each immaculate shirt front shone a bit of plate glass as large as a marble, while brass rings bearing great settings of glass fairly loaded down the hands of the newcomers. Davis glanced about the table and his jaw dropped from sheer astonishment. Before he could recover himself, one of the young men arose and, walking around the table to Alvin's seat, said in a tone that was distinctly audible throughout the room: 'Ah, I see you admire my diamonds. Permit me. This one is worth eight cents a pound, retail. This cost me a nickel, just as it is. This one I value at a dime. I have with me seventy cents' worth of gems, and I own an interest in a glass works at Chicago besides.'

"Before that speech was ended the bediamond Joslin either lost his appetite or finished his supper, for he hastily arose and left the room, followed by a lively chorus of ahs and ohs."—Chicago Mail

Fly Fishing.

There is no doubt that certain flies are best adapted to different seasons, times of day and conditions of weather, but a dozen flies of different names will fully answer all of these requirements. An angler's flies resemble nothing when cast upon the water. They are simply a something which attracts the trout. Color has more allurement than form, and as there are not so many colors there is no use for many flies. The general rule is for light flies on dark days and dark or darkish flies on light days. Sizes are more to be considered than form and mixture in makeup. A large trout wants something worth his making an effort to secure. It is doubtless true that an arbitrary cast of flies cannot be made up which will be adapted to all waters.—Forest and Stream.

Looked Like Her Doll.

A little miss at the South End has a favorite doll, which is of Celestial outline and bears the name of Chum Chum. Until within a short time she had never seen a Chinaman, but the other day, while walking with her mother, one chanced into view. The young woman immediately recognized the similarity between the life and the facsimile at home.

"Oh, mamma," said she, "there's Chum Chum." But almost instantly the difference in size appealed to her and she corrected herself:

"No, no; Chum Chum's dad."—Boston Times.

Have you written me yet? If you haven't, wisdom and intelligent ambition suggest write to-day. I promise you my specific, personal attention. I undertake to briefly teach any fairly intelligent person of either sex, who can read and write, and who, after instruction, will work industriously, how to earn Three Thousand Dollars a year in their own localities, wherever they live. I will also furnish the situation or employment, at which you can earn that amount. I charge nothing and receive nothing unless successful, as above. Nothing difficult to learn, or that requires much time. I devote but one person from each district or county. I have already taught and provided with employment a large number who are making over Three Thousand Dollars a Year, each. All is new, solid, sure. Full particulars Free. After you know all, if you conclude to go no further, why, no harm is done. Address,

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of JAMES B. STEWARD, deceased.

The appraisers heretofore appointed by this Court to appraise and admeasure the homestead petitioned for by Annie Steward, the widow of said deceased, having filed herein a report of their proceedings:

It is therefore ordered by the Judge of said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the Judge of said Superior Court on Saturday, the 13th day of August, 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, at the chambers of said Judge, at the Courthouse, in the town of Independence, County of Inyo, State of California, then and there to show cause, if any they have, why said report should not be confirmed.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published in the INYO INDEPENDENT, a newspaper printed and published in said Inyo county, for two successive weeks before the said 13th day of August, 1892.

Dated July 27th, 1892.

GEO. M. GILL,
Judge of the Superior Court.

SUMMONS.

IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT OF THE Second Township in the County of Inyo, State of California.

EMMONS SPENCER, Plaintiff, vs. WILLIAM EVA, Defendant.

The People of the State of California send greeting to William Eva, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Justice's Court of the Second Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer before the Justice at his office in said Township the complaint filed therein, within five days (exclusive of the day of service), after the service on you of this summons—if served within the Township in which the action is brought; or, if served out of said Township, but in said County, within ten days; otherwise within twenty days.

This action is brought to recover of you the sum of One hundred and thirty-three and 75-100 ($133.75) dollars due from you to Plaintiff for services rendered to you by Plaintiff as collector and attorney between the 15th day of November, 1891, and the 20th day of May, 1892, as more fully appears in complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to so appear and answer said complaint as above required, said Plaintiff will take judgement against you by default for the sum of $133.75, together with costs of suit.

Given under my hand this 24 day of July 1892.

DENNIS J. HESSIAN,
Justice of the Peace of said Township.
EMMONS SPENCER, Attorney for Plaintiff.

ALIAS SUMMONS.

IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT OF THIRD Township, County of Inyo, State of California.

JOHN WELCH, Plaintiff, vs. JESUS ENSENAS, Defendant.

The people of the State of California send greeting to Jesus Ensenas, Defendant:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the Justice's Court of Third Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer before the Justice at his office in said Township, the Complaint filed therein, within five days (exclusive of the day of service), after the service on you of this Summons—if served within the Township in which this action is brought, or, if served out of said Township, but in said County, within ten days; or within twenty days if served elsewhere.

The said action is brought to obtain judgment against you for the sum of $38.60 alleged to be due Plaintiff upon an account for work, labor and services performed by one J. W. Murphy in the line of general blacksmith work and for materials furnished you in and about said work at your request, between the 25th day of August, 1890, and the 3rd day of May, 1892, and which said account was assigned to plaintiff herein on the 5th day of July, 1892, and before the commencement of this action, as more fully appears by the complaint on file herein, to which you are referred.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, said plaintiff will take judgment against you for the sum of $38.60, together with costs of suit.

Given under my hand this 12th day of July, 1892. IRV. H. MULHOLLAND,
Justice of the Peace of said Township.
F. E. DENSMORE, Attorney for Plaintiff.

Sheriff Gorman went to Keeler yesterday.

O. I. Mairs and P. H. Mack went to Big Pine yesterday.

Quite a number of Independence people are camping in the hills west of town.

G. P. Rixford of San Francisco has been spending several days in this vicinity.

If you have any shoemaking to do Davis is here and will remain for a few days.

H. Giles and Ed. Rose are training a string of horses on the old Taboose track.

W. A. Lamar, Esq., got back from San Jose on Tuesday, returning by way of Mojave.

The mercury shows a decided cooling of temperature. No more very hot weather this year.

W. H. Graham received the contract for fencing the new racetrack and is hard at work at the job.

The new racetrack is all leveled and ready for irrigating. It will be in condition to train on in about ten days.

S. G. Sneden has resigned as postmaster at Bishop and Frank K. Andrews has been appointed to succeed him.

There is less snow on the Sierras now than many years past at this season, consequently the water supply is unusually low.

The announcement of the Sixth Annual Fair of the Eighteenth Agricultural District will be found in the advertising columns this week.

Gomer Jones, an old-time prospector, came up to Independence on Sunday for medical attendance. He had been in ill health for over a year.

T. R. Hofer has been appointed Superintendent of the Mint at Carson to succeed S. C. Wright, deceased. Mr. Hofer had been Chief Clerk for some years.

Sheriff Gorman returned from Bishop on Wednesday. He has appointed a deputy at Laws, as it is reported that drunken Indians are plentiful in that vicinity.

Mrs. E. Johnson has moved her building on Edwards street back from the road and is remodeling the entire structure. It will be a fine property when completed.

Dr. I. J. Woodin was called to Olancha on Tuesday to attend Mrs. Wm. Walker. He got back last night and reports his patient to be quite ill, but was improving when he left. The doctor went to Big Pine to-day.

Geo. L. Drake, of Bishop, announces himself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the Republican nomination. Mr. Drake is an old-timer, and consequently well-known to the voters of Inyo. He has at various times acted as Deputy-Sheriff and has served several terms as Constable of the First Township. His claims for the nomination should meet with due recognition at the hands of his party.

Another Robbery.

Right on the heels of the news of the Ruggles' hanging comes the report of a train robbery in Tulare county, resulting in the death of one officer and the wounding of two others. Considerable interest is taken in the affair in this vicinity for the reason that the robbers are reported to be heading directly east from Visalia in this direction, and it is expected that they will make their escape across the Sierras, coming out near Independence. The two outlaws, Evans and Sontag, are well armed and most desperate men. They too, well know the result of their being taken alive and of course will fight to the last. The Southern Pacific Company and Wells, Fargo & Co. jointly offer a reward of $1,000 each for the arrest and conviction of the desperadoes, the above companies paying all the expenses of prosecution. The probabilities are strong, however, that if the men are ever arrested there will be no occasion for a trial.

A Big Mining Sale

ALBUQUERQUE (N. M.), August 3.—Last night the transfer of $200,000 was made through one of the Albuquerque national banks to Kingman, A. T., parties for California capitalists. The latter, representing Judge F. T. Baldwin of Stockton, Senator B. F. Langford of Lodi, Pat Reddy and J. C. Campbell of San Francisco, all of California, purchased a group of thirteen mines for the amount stated from Judge Henry Schafer, G. M. Bowers and John P. Benett of Kingman. The mines are reported to be the richest discovered on the coast range for a number of years. They are located in what is known as the Indian secret mining district and are a few miles north of Kingman. The new owners will commence development on an extensive scale in a few weeks.

Shall It Be Done.

The question has been discussed in town lately of moving the Fair pavilion from its present location to a more desirable one in town. Now that the fence is being removed it will be impossible to keep the grounds in order and the stock parades will of course not be held there. The Rhine estate offers to deed a lot to the Association in the center of town. It would certainly be far more convenient of access than in its present position, especially for attending the exhibition in the evening. An open discussion of the merits and demerits of the proposition should be had and there is no question but that the Fair Directors will acquiesce in the proposed change if found desirable. The cost of moving the building will be defrayed by contributions and by entertainments given by the townspeople, who will be mostly benefited.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that the Lone Pine Canal Company will not be responsible for any debts contracted by Mills, Austin & Co, or by any person or persons, for labor or for any other thing upon or in connection with extension of the ditch or canal belonging to the said Lone Pine Canal Company, and situated in Inyo County, California.

By order of the Board of Directors of Lone Pine Canal Company.

By P. H. MACK,
Secretary.

Fred Stoll, a deputy-Sheriff of Fresno county, arrived at Independence last Sunday, the object of his visit being the arrest of an Indian known as "Limpy." The noble red man recently visited Fresno county for the purpose of killing an Indian doctor, after the usual happy custom of his tribe. This he did most effectually and is now enroute to Fresno where he is quite likely to join his victim in the happy hunting grounds.

Yesterday morning a telegram was received at Independence stating that Frank Fitzgerald was very ill at Lone Pine. P. H. Mack, Esq., was telegraphed for to big Pine yesterday and he went through to Lone Pine last night. He has not yet returned nor no further particulars have since been learned.

A. D. Gilbert has a force of men at work on an irrigating ditch about a mile west of town to carry water onto a body of desert land south of Independence. He has run a tunnel into one of the lakes above Onion Valley and put in a head gate so that water can be turned on as soon as the ditch is completed.

Sheriff's Sale,

ON FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGES.

In the Superior Court of the County of Inyo State of California.

GOLDA EIBESHUTZ, Plff.
vs.
WILLIAM S. MORTON, and Friederike Rhine, as executrix of the Estate of Nathan Rhine, deceased, Dfds.

Order of Sale and Decree of Foreclosure and Sale

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN ORDER of sale, upon a decree of foreclosure and sale, issued out of the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, on the 9th day of August, 1892, in the above-entitled action wherein Golda Eibeshutz, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a judgment and decree against William S. Morton, and Friederike Rhine, as Executrix of the Estate of Nathan Rhine, deceased, defendants, on the 8th day of August, 1892, for the sum of $249.43, gold coin of the United States, which said judgment and decree was, on the 9th day of August, 1892, recorded in Judgment Book 1 of said Court, at page 369, I am commanded to sell, to satisfy said judgment and decree for the said sum of $249.43, all those certain lots, pieces or parcels of land situate in the County of Inyo, State of California, and bounded and described as follows, to-wit:

The South half of the North west quarter, South-west quarter of the North-east quarter, and the North-east quarter of the South-west quarter of Section Two, Township Twelve South, Range Thirty-four East, Mount Diablo Meridian, together with all water and water rights thereunto belonging or in anywise appertaining. Together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging, or in any wise appertaining.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that on Tuesday the 6th day of Sept. 1892, at 12 o'clock M. of that day, in front of the Court House in the County of Inyo, State of California, I will, in obedience to said order of sale and decree of foreclosure, sell the above described property, or so much thereof, as may be necessary to satisfy said Plaintiff's judgment, with interest and costs etc., to the highest and best bidder, for cash, gold coin of the United States.

Dated this 12th day of August, 1892.

JOHN S. GORMAN,
Sheriff of Inyo County.
By D. HOLLAND,
Under-Sheriff.

ALIAS SUMMONS.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.

FRIEDRICKE RHINE, Executrix of the will of Nathan Rhine, deceased, plaintiff, vs. W. L. HUNTER, CAROLINE HUNTER and J. L. PORTER, defendants.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and the Complaint filed in the office of the Clerk of said County.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA send greeting to W. L. Hunter, Caroline L. Hunter and J. L. Porter, defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, as such executrix, in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county, or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment of this Court for the foreclosure of a certain mortgage described in said complaint and executed by the said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L. Hunter on the 10th day of April, 1889, to secure the payment of a certain Promissory Note made by the said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L. Hunter to the said Nathan Rhine, now deceased, for the sum of $2,100 with interest thereon from the said 10th day of April, 1889, at the rate of 1½ per cent per month, described in the complaint, which by the lapse of time is now due, no part of which has been paid excepting $60 paid April 10th, 1889, $141 paid October 10 h, 1889, $140.25 paid May 10th, 1890, $75 paid September 20 h, 1890, $72 paid December 27th, 1890 and $66 paid November 28th, 1891.

Said note is dated April 10th, 1889, that the premises conveyed by said mortgage may be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of said note and interest thereon and costs of suit, and the further sum of 10 per cent on the amount of the judgment found due as counsel fees as provided in said mortgage, and in case such proceeds are insufficient to pay the same, that judgment be docketed against said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L. Hunter or the balance remaining due, and also that the said defendants, and all persons claiming by, through or under may be barred and foreclosed of all right, title, claim, lien, equity of redemption, and interest in and to said mortgaged premises, and for other and further relief, as will more fully appear by reference to the complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint.

Witness my hand, and the Seal of the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, this 10th day of August, A. D. 1892.

The Best Things In Cookery

Are always made with the ROYAL BAKING POWDER. It imparts that peculiar lightness, sweetness and flavor noticed in the finest rolls, biscuit, cake, etc., and which the most expert pastry cooks declare is unobtainable by the use of any other raising agent.

The ROYAL BAKING POWDER, besides rendering the food more palatable and wholesome, is, because of its higher leavening power, the most economical.

The ROYAL makes more and better food than any other baking powder because it is the purest.

People who experiment with all the new kinds of prepared foods are always invalids.

THE MEASURE OF OUR DAYS.

In all our walks, in all our ways,
Think not the measure of our days
Is ganged by figures and by rules,
As erst was taught us in the schools.
But, as we help a brother's needs
By noble acts and generous deeds,
By giving comfort where we may,
By lighting up a mourner's way;
The sum of means that we employ
To turn a fellow's ills to joy—
This is the measure of our days.

A veteran in the wars of life,
A prisoned soldier in the strife
Of soul with stingy, envious Time
Is he who makes his actions rhyme
To universal brotherhood.
Though long or short hath been his road
Centuries or decades his abode
Among his kind, it matters least
So fellows by him have been blest.
His life is measured by his plan
Of dealing with his fellow man.
This is the measure of his days.

And much methinks of time he gains,
For all his labors, all his pains,
For reaching outward far and near
To succor want and shelter fear.
No stingy paddock hems him in,
To mean desires and groveling sin.
A widow's blessing him avails,
An orphan's prayer some good entails.
While stretching outward over man
He converse holds with Nature's plan.
And solving life's deep mysteries,
He grasps eternal verities.
This is the measure of his days.

Two Spiders.

In an angle of a basement wall I knew a contented and plethoric hermit spider. In the opposite corner dwelt another. One was black and the other was the color of ashes. One was very fat and the other exceedingly lean. But their webs were as nearly alike as possible and they both caught flies that came through the same window. There was no social intercourse and I used to sit on the steps and imagine the rivalry in business that must exist and the consequent hatred. I meant in the course of time to discover what the consequences would be if they were made to exchange webs, but a predacious female with a broom came upon the scene, with a result whose details would not strike the reader as novel.

But I am convinced that Montague and Capulet are characters not unknown in the spider kindred, though they reverse the usual and natural order of enmity, and fight only when they are blood relatives and precisely alike. The gray and the black might live in distant amity in the same basement, but two grays or two blacks—abdomen, size and general family likeness agreeing—would not.—Belford's Review.

Drowning Half a Continent.

When the Panama canal was first proposed a great cry went up that such a "ditch" would endanger the lives of millions of human beings. It was argued that the waters on the Pacific side of the isthmus were hundreds of feet higher than they were on the Atlantic side, and that the great rush of waters to even up the difference in the level of the two oceans would drown out all southern North America, all the West Indies and most of Mexico and Yucatan. Would be engineers and sensational editors passed their opinions or wrote yards of scare editorials on the subject. It now turns out that the Atlantic and not the Pacific is the higher of the two oceans, and that in place of the difference being hundreds of feet, as had been affirmed, the surface of the water on the east side of the isthmus is exactly 6½ feet higher than it is on the western side.—St. Louis Republic.

Races and Religions of the British Army.

According to the annual returns of the British army, of the total strength of 196,569 officers and men, 151,311, or 76.2 per cent., are English; 16,538, or 8.3 per cent., are Scotch; 28,720, or 14 per cent., are Irish; Mohammedans, Hindoos, Jews, etc., number 667 all told and need not be considered. Of the total 68 per cent. belong to the Church of England; 18.4 per cent. are Roman Catholics; 7.6 per cent. are Presbyterians and 6 per cent. are Wesleyans. Out of 64,000 officers and men in the royal navy over 47,000 return themselves as members of the Church of England.—London Public Opinion.

Chaperons Must Go.

Electric Lights Help a Gardener.

Soon after the erection of an electric light near the residence of W. W. Rawson, a market gardener in Arlington, Mass., plants on that side of the house became more thrifty than before. He acted upon the hint, and now illuminates his lettuce and cucumber beds with electric lights. The result is bigger crops in a shorter time and an increase in his profits of fully 25 per cent. —Yankee Blade.

Talked Long, but Obeyed His Mother.

Dr. Sylvester F. Scovel was making an address at the commencement exercises of the Ohio university, of which he is the president. The big gymnasium where the exercises were held was packed to the doors and the air was hot and stifling. The audience had listened to college orators until it was surfeited. Everybody was warm and tired and waiting to make a dash for the open air at the first opportunity. The orator began. He sketched the history of the institution; he spoke of its many needs; he dwelt upon its success and predicted for it a brilliant future. He spoke of the trustees in terms of praise; he commended the faculty; he complimented the students, and tears glistened in his eyes as he told of the generosity and kindly interest of the dear public.

Over an hour went by. The corners of the hall grew dark, and the rays of the setting sun flashed upon the windows. The young graduates fidgeted in their chairs, and the audience looked longingly toward the door. All at once the speaker stopped, murmured a brief sentence, wheeled around and resumed his seat. A little white haired woman in the rear of the hall had waved her ear trumpet, pressed her finger to her lips and the fires of his oratory were quenched. She was the venerable mother of the president, and she exacted from her son the same obedience which he gave her in his youth.

"That's my son Sylvester," she was heard to say as the hall was slowly cleared. "That failing of his has been a great trial to me. My son Sylvester, he talks too much."—New York Tribune.

How to Treat Newspaper Men.

Don't tell a newspaper reporter, when he calls on you on business, things which you do not wish him to print. He does not call for information for the fun of it. He is there on business. When you meet a reporter socially, don't say to him every time you open your mouth, "This is not for publication."

If you really have information to give, either give it cheerfully and frankly or refuse with firmness, but don't try to be clever and attempt any "funny business." If you give the information frankly you will in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred be accurately reported and respectfully treated. If you refuse firmly and politely your reticence will be respected. If you try to outwit the reporter by an effort to mislead him or by direct misrepresentation, you are sure to make a mess of it and wish that you had been better advised.

Disabuse your mind of any foolish impression that the newspaper reporters are malignant persons, trying to stir up trouble in the world. They are, as a rule, the opposite of this and have as high an idea as other men of the relative advantages of contentment and strife.—Portland Oregonian.

The Mexican Frontier.

The extent of the Mexican frontier is not ordinarily comprehended. From Brownsville, Tex., to El Paso, with the windings of the river, it is fully 1,300 miles, and thence along the boundaries of New Mexico, Arizona and California to San Diego is several hundred miles more. This frontier is quite as long as the Atlantic seaboard from Portland, in Maine, to the southermost point of the peninsula of Florida. Some three hundred miles of country, where the Rio Grande river runs through deep canyons, is practically unexplored. This section comprises the counties Presidio, Brewster, Foley and part of Buchel.

And all along the border is a heavy undergrowth called chaparral. This word originally was applied, I believe, to cactus thickets; but recently in that country any kind of an undergrowth in which men can hide or find shelter is spoken of as chaparral.—Harper's Weekly.

Water in the Australian Desert.

When Mr. David Lindsay returned from his expedition across a part of the Australian desert a while ago, he said the whole of that almost waterless country was inhabited by natives who get their water supply by draining the roots of the malee tree, which yield quantities of pure water. This tree, absorbing moisture from the air, retains it in considerable quantities in its roots and thus makes it possible to live in an arid region, which would otherwise be uninhabitable.—New York Sun.

Look for the Key.

Don't get angry at small things. Look at vexations now as you will: view them thirty days from date. The angry man, who gets the wrong key and pushes and rattles the door till he breaks the lock, loses more time than if he had quietly gone for the right key, and pays for a new lock besides.—New York Recorder.

IT OBEYS THE LAW.

In view of the contradictory rumors circulated regarding the intentions of the Louisiana State Lottery Company and in order to accurately answer numerous inquiries, a representative of the Times-Democrat yesterday interviewed Mr. Paul Conrad, the president of the company, with the result expressed below.

Reporter—Mr. Conrad, it was asserted some weeks ago in the Northern newspapers, and the statement has since been revived recently, that the company is about to remove to Nicaragua, and there, under a government franchise, open up the business on a grander scale than ever.

President Conrad—I have heard something of this, but there is no foundation for it. The company has officially stated that it bows to the decision of the Supreme Court and will respect the laws.

Reporter—Then have you no plans of future action?

President Conrad—I cannot state the case more strongly than was done at the time the company decided not to attempt to obtain a renewal of its charter. I can only repeat that the company will continue in business until the expiration of its present charter and then cease to exist. I cannot understand, after all that has been said, why there should be any confusion in the public mind about the matter.

Reporter—Have you any objection to my stating this as a finalty for the satisfaction of the public?

President Conrad—None whatever.

Reporter—Some of the Eastern papers, Mr. Conrad, persistently assert that the lottery company continues to use the United States mails in the prosecution of its business; will you kindly tell me if that is true?

President Conrad—It is utterly untrue. We are obeying the law in its letter and spirit, and our agents everywhere are instructed to obey it. We are using the express companies only in our business, and in all our circulars are printed instructions to all persons dealing with us to avoid the mails.—Times-Democrat, New Orleans (La.), June 1.

Imposing on a Queen.

The benevolence of Queen Margherita of Italy is so well known and so spontaneous that not only do the honest poor and suffering among the Roman people frequently appeal to it, but an attempt is now and then made by the undeserving to take advantage of her sympathetic nature.

Not long ago there was at work, not far from Rome, a counterfeiter named Galloni. In the course of his criminal occupation, he counterfeited the notes of the Bank of France, and counterfeited them so completely to his own satisfaction that what seemed to him a happy thought occurred to him.

"I will send one of these to the good hearted queen," he said to himself, "and tell her that I am a poor citizen, who, having some doubts of the genuineness of the note, have resolved to throw myself on her majesty's generosity, and ask her to send me an Italian bank note in exchange for it."

Galloni sent his spurious note to Queen Margherita, with his appealing message. The queen received and read the letter, was touched by it, and enclosed a good Italian bank note to the man in place of it.

But she chanced to show the spurious note to an officer of the royal household, who asked for the letter, and, armed with it and the bank note, the police made a descent upon Galloni's house and captured both the man and his false plates.

It often happens in this way that one wrong deed, added to another, betrays the doer. Since Galloni was wicked enough to commit the crime of counterfeiting, it was not strange that he was also ready to impose upon the generosity of a kind hearted monarch. But it was his second crime which exposed the first.—Youth's Companion.

One Hundred Oysters.

Before oysters were sent from the east to be transplanted in the waters around California, the native bivalve of that country was exceedingly small; it took a great many of the home product to make a satisfactory meal. The story is told of a young lady, a resident of that State, who was stopping at a New York hotel. She wanted some lunch, and told the astonished waiter to bring to her room a hundred oysters. It was not for the waiter to question the taste, or rather the appetite of the young woman, who, of course, had in mind the diminutive bivalves of her native state. The order was soon filled by three waiters, each of whom carried a tray full of oysters, every oyster seeming to the young woman as big as her hand. They seemed to look at her with their horrid white faces and their one diabolical eye until they appeared to her like so many live babies ready to be carved up. They leered at her as if to dare her to come on to the attack. The young woman was afraid to swallow even one of the monsters, and yet she wanted to get rid of them, preferring to be thought by the waiters a glutton rather than a fool. Just outside her window she found a tin water spout with a small hole in it; she enlarged the hole and slid the oysters all down, one by one, they all the time eyeing her with what she described as "a cold, nasty look of malignity."—Harper's Weekly.

Authorized Murder.

The jury of the Seine assize court has once more virtually sanctioned murder, committed under certain circumstances, by the acquittal of a husband killer. The prisoner, who was brought up on the charge of murder, is a hard working woman, and it was her misfortune to have a husband who squandered the money their trade brought in and who was, moreover, by no means a model of conjugal fidelity. One evening, the wife, returning home, found him in the company of a woman whom she took, though wrongly it has since transpired, to be a rival, and in revenge she killed her husband. In a sense the verdict of the Seine jury in the present instance ought not perhaps to have been any other than a verdict of not guilty, seeing the number of cases in which husbands who have killed their wives in a fit of jealousy have been acquitted. The principle, however, gone upon is bad, whether it be a man or woman who benefits by it. Infidelity on the part of a husband or wife is distinctly reprehensible, but it is not a crime which the law punishes by death, and because a person has been deceived, and is consequently jealous, humiliated, or broken hearted, as the case may be, the right cannot be granted in civilized countries to avenge wrongs by taking the life of a fellow creature. French juries, however, are almost always guided by sentimental considerations.—London Standard.

The Windfalls.

The orchard which is properly thinned will have much fewer windfalls than the overloaded and neglected trees. But what windfalls there are will be better and well worth saving. To prevent bruising they should have a smooth surface of the ground to fall on. Scattered stones, where practicable, should be picked and drawn off. As the ground is to be plowed for several years while the trees are young, it should be mellowed by harrowing at the right time, and it is well to sow a thick crop of oats late in summer, the growth of which in autumn will make a soft bed for the apples to drop on, the crop of oats being destroyed by cold weather. If there are many small stones on the ground, a roller will sink them to the surface while the soil is mellow from plowing or harrowing. When the trees become old and the orchard is seeded to grass and top dressed, the removal of all surface stones will be important.—Albany Cultivator.

Carry Flaxseeds for Cinders in the Eye.

One of the simplest and most effective cures for that often serious affliction to a traveler, a cinder in the eye, is that of a common flaxseed. One or two of these may be placed in the eye without injury; they shortly begin to swell and exude a glutinous substance that covers the ball of the eye, enveloping any foreign substance that may be in it; then seed and irritant may be washed out. Keep a dozen of these seeds in a compartment of your purse, and they may prove an invaluable accessory.—Her Point of View in New York Times.

REMARKABLE INCIDENT.

A Lecturer Discovers His Danger and Loses His Life—A Terrible Warning to Others.

It is a scene in the lecture-room of a medical college in New Orleans. The professor is lecturing before an intelligent class of medical students. He is describing the human body, its defects and the danger by which it is surrounded. In order to illustrate it he has fluids from the human body, which he is subjecting to chemical tests.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I have described to you the appearance of the human fluid in a diseased state; I will now show you how the same fluid appears in a healthy state," and he subjected his own to the test. As he held it up to the light for a moment, his hand trembled, he caught his breath, he paled and exclaimed: "Gentlemen, I have just made a most horrible discovery; I myself have Bright's disease of the kidneys."

In less than one year he was dead.

The above dramatic and strictly true incident shows the terrible danger and mysterious nature of this modern disease, which may well be called the demon of the present century. It steals into the system like a thief, manifests its presence by the commonest symptoms and fastens itself upon the system before the victim is aware. It is nearly as hereditary as consumption, quite as common and fully as fatal. Entire families, inheriting it from their ancestors, have died, yet none of the number knew or realized the mysterious power which was removing them. Hundreds of people die daily by what is called heart disease, apoplexy, paralysis, spinal complaint, rheumatism, pneumonia and other common diseases, when in reality it is Bright's disease of the kidneys. These are solemn facts, but all the more serious because of their solemnity.

There has never been but one remedy known for the cure of Bright's disease, or even for its relief, and that remedy has become the most popular of any preparation known to the world. It is Warner's Safe Cure. It has taken men, and women, too, who were in the lowest stages and restored them to perfect health and strength. It will invariably check the first stages of this terrible disease, if taken in time. It is indorsed by physicians, approved by scientists and used by the best people in the land. It is a scientific preparation and owes its popularity wholly to its power. It can be procured of any reliable dealer, but great care should be exercised to secure the genuine and not permit any unscrupulous dealer to sell anything in its place.

PRELIMINARY WORLD'S FAIR EXHIBIT OF CALIFORNIA.

The work in connection with the Preliminary World's Fair Exhibit of California is progressing in a thorough and satisfactory manner. Already a number of special features are being considered, some of which have been practically decided upon. This display, as has already been announced, will be held in the Mechanics' Pavillion, in San Francisco from January 10th to February 25th next, and is under the joint supervision of the California World's Fair Commission, and the Mechanics' Institute.

The regular Mechanics' Fair for this year is thus abolished, and the Preliminary Exhibition of articles destined for display in the California State Building, and in the general Departmental Buildings of the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago, takes its place.

Arrangements are being made for a very complete mineral exhibit from different parts of the State, and it is expected that quite a number of valuable private cabinets will be placed on exhibition, as arrangements have been made to insure the safety of the specimens.

The art exhibit will be a feature in itself, and entirely separate and distinct from anything of the kind ever shown in San Francisco. It is intended that it shall consist almost entriely of the master-pieces of California artists, which will be gathered from the galleries of art lovers in different parts of the State.

The machinery display will, by no means be overlooked, but will consist entirely of California inventions.

Arrangements are being made by which it is expected that the Native Sons will become interested in the Exhibition and will provide a number of features, illustrating the history and development of the State in an artistic and striking manner.

Many of the Counties are making arrangements to make special County exhibits, recognizing the importance of displaying their resources in San Francisco before the displays are sent to Chicago, in order that the attractions and advantages of the several Counties may be thoroughly and properly set before the people of California.

The use of Ely's Cream Balm, a sure cure for Catarrh and Cold in head, is attended with no pain, inconvenience or dread, which can be said of no other remedy.

I feel it my duty to say a few words in regard to Ely's Cream Balm, and I do so entirely without solicitation. I have used it half a year, and have found it to be most admirable. I have suffered from Catarrh of the worst kind ever since I was a little boy and I never hoped for cure, but Cream Balm seems to do even that. Many of my acquaintances have used it with excellent results.—Oscar Ostrum, 45 Warren Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

DEAD SEA FRUITS.

They slay multitudes when they are the product of neglect of incipient disease. A "slight" cold, a fit of indigestion, biliousness or constipation each or any of these "minor ailments" advance in many cases with "league destroying strides." Give them a swift, early defeat with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters and avert the danger. Abercrithy administered an alarming rebuke to the man who informed him that he had "only a cold!" "Only a cold," repeated the doctor. "What would ye have—the plague!" Rheumatism and la grippe are easily extinguishable at the start. Why then allow them to get up a full head of steam? Put on the brakes with the Bitters. The Genial warmth which this superb medicine diffuses through the system, the impetus it gives to the circulation of the blood, its soothing and strengthening effect upon the nervous, specially recommend it to the enfeebled and sick. BRUTES OR FOOLS?

A Dentist and a Reporter Become Famous as Founders of a New Theory.—Senseless Driveling of an Ethical Dentist in Search of Free Advertising.

On the 23d of November last there appeared in the Sunday Examiner an assumed interview with a local toothsmith which betrays the absurd and wholly unwarranted egotism of the doctor or the surprising ignorance of an ambitious and irresponsible reporter—either or both—in an amusing effort to establish a new theory in regard to character-reading by means of the shapes and sizes of the human teeth. That there is nothing in it is so palpable a fact that no intelligent person can be deceived by the absurd statements contained therein. The high standing of the very respectable dentist who yielded to the interviewer's pernicious pump on this occasion lends color to my belief that he intended his ridiculous statements rather as a huge joke than as a serious presentation of facts. At all events, he secured a cheap and windy advertisement that, boomerang-like, must rebound upon himself, for every intelligent dentist knows that his reasoning is fallacious and without foundation. In fact, I, in common with every other dentist in this city, had thought that the learned doctor's rigid ideas of professional ethics would have restrained him from seeking even so humorous a pretext for flaunting his superior learning before an intelligent public. As an advertisement, pure and simple—for such it was doubtless intended to be—it was robbed of its value by the folly of its assumptions. As a unique specimen of ignorance it is without a parallel in modern journalism. The brutality of this new theory is shocking.

The article alluded to was illustrated with cuts designed to substantiate this insane theory, of which good Doctor Younger can scarcely be proud to stand accused, since there is nothing in the proposition that would withstand intelligent investigation. While I am free to admit that in the formation of the jaws—particularly the lower jaw—there is often an indication of character that the layman may read as he runs, I do assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that in the shape of the teeth there is nothing that will serve as a guide to correct judgement of the mental caliber of the possessor. Let the reader cast about among his acquaintances, and he will find that regular, white, handsome teeth are oftener the possession of a male scoundrel or feminine backbiter and shrew than the contrary. Some—many—of the sweetest and most lovely of women, and the most highly gifted in intellectual attainments and noble qualities of mind and heart among men are victims of malformation of the jaws that crowd the teeth into irregular lines. Again, differences in the bony structure of the parents may give to the offspring the small jaw of the one and the large, powerful teeth of the other, thus causing an inevitable malformation that the most skillful dentist can not correct. Thus a child, both of whose parents are honest, worthy, intellectual people, upon whose pedigree there is no taint of crime or folly, must, according to this theory of the "transplanter," be blooming idiots or precious rascals because of dental irregularities that are meaningless except as to the causes above referred to.

In thus attempting to establish a baseless theory upon a positively untenable assumption of facts the doctor and the reporter have concocted a sensational article that serves but to prove the enormous ignorance of the one and the gullibility of the other.

Hard to take

—the big, old-fashioned pill. It's pretty hard to have to take it, too. You wouldn't, if you realized fully how it shocks and weakens the system.

Luckily, you don't have to take it. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are better. They're sensible. They do, mildly and gently, more than the ordinary pill, with all its disturbance. They regulate the liver, stomach and bowels, as well as thoroughly cleanse them. They're the original Little Liver Pills, purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, the smallest and the easiest to take. One little Pellet for a gentle laxative—three for a cathartic. Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels are promptly and permanently cured.

They're the cheapest, too, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned. You pay only for the good you get.

LANDING IN THE BREAKERS.

Sailors in a Small Boat Must Fight Hard to Reach the Shore.

Selecting a landing place, the men wait for an opportunity. By lying outside and watching the breakers they find that after a certain number of heavy ones there is a quiet interval, and after several counts they know when to expect this interval and take advantage of it. If there are but two or three lines of bad breakers near a seemingly steep beach, a bold dash, bows on, during this interval of quiet, will probably land them high and dry.

Much more frequently, however, the water will shoal far out from the shore, and many lines of breakers will have to be passed. The quiet interval will be too short to allow a boat to reach the shore. Only courage, coolness, quickness and good judgment can save the men in the battle for life which must then be fought. They select a place where the breakers seem to roll in parallel to the beach and not slantingly, and then they row toward them as close as they can with safety, and turn the boat's bow out to sea. Next, they back in rapidly when the quiet time comes, but keep the boat's bow pointed squarely at the breakers.

The lull is too soon over, and the battle begins. A mountainous sea comes rolling in and mounting upward from a rounded crest to a thin green edge, which tumbles above them. Then the nearer side seems to pause, and from the green edge sweeps hissing backward a curling, feathery spray, as the farther side of the wave seems to rush over the nearer, and descend with a crashing roar in overwhelming volumes of whitened surf. If the little boat is caught in this deluge, she may be thrown end over end, or slued so far around that the next sea will roll her over and over; and even if skillful managemement should keep her head to sea she would soon be completely swamped. These points where the seas break must then be eluded as often as possible, but only experience and judgment can tell how to pass them with more than occasional success.

By pulling a few strokes toward the sea, a wave may pass under the boat just before it breaks. Then what a ride they have! More swiftly than by express train they are shot shoreward by a mighty power utterly beyond control. The roar around them is frightful, and the swirling, broken water terrifying; but while that speeding lasts they are safe. Every effort is always made to keep on the back of that shore rushing wave. It was an enemy a moment before, but now it is a guiding friend. The boatmen back in upon it with all their might, but watching all the time for the next wave to rise and form for attack.

When the welcome shore is close at hand the helmsman presses down the loom or shaft of the steering oar; otherwise the blade would suddenly catch in the sand, the boat would rush over it, and as it pivoted in the oarlock the oar would fling the man far astern. Lucky would he be if there was still water to fall upon!

When the boat touches bottom all hands spring overboard, and seizing her gunwales rush her high up on the beach; otherwise the waves would do this for them, probably broadside on, and in a very ruthless manner, perhaps breaking bones and crushing the boat, as if angry at the men's escape.—John M. Ellicott in St. Nicholas.

Common Names of the Lilac.

Even in so small a place as England, of which it is said that a man may land on one side in the morning and fall off the cliffs of the other side before night, the lilac is known by different names, traveling every few score miles. In one place it is called the May plant, in another it is the princess feather flower, in another it is called duck's bills, while laylock is a common variation in those localities where it should be known as lilac. Possibly if one were to search in other countries than England he should find it with a score or so of other names.

The great difficulty with English names for flowers is not that their English names are improper, but there is no authority as to which one should be generally adopted. No system for the general adoption of any one particular name has ever been suggested.—Meehan's Monthly.

An Awkward Mistake.

A handsomely dressed young woman stepped up to a clerk in one of our leading dry goods stores, and laying a package on the counter said with dignity, "I would like to have you exchange these goods." A moment later a soiled shirt and several pairs of stockings met the clerk's gaze. Before he could rally from his astonishment the young woman had gathered up the bundle and with a face of scarlet rushed from the store. The next time she starts out to exchange goods she will be sure she hasn't got her brother's laundry.—Springfield Homestead.

Meat the Most Expensive Food.

Twenty-two acres of land are needed to sustain a man on flesh meat, while the same amount of land under wheat feeds 42 people; under oats, 88 people; under potatoes, Indian corn and rice, 176 people, and under the plantain or bread fruit tree, over 6,000 people.—New York Journal.

INVENTIVE NEGROES.

A Colored Man's Discoveries in Electricity.

GRINDING MEAL BY WATER POWER.

New System of Telegraphy and a New Method of Running Street Cars.

Up to date it is said that but three colored men have gained recognition in the United States as inventors. One is referred to by Harriet Beecher Stowe in a footnote to her famous novel, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," as the designer of a cotton gin, and a second is responsible for the horse hayrake, one of the devices that help to render less laborious the life of the farmer. But the third man, whose name is Granville T. Woods, has placed himself squarely on a level with the brainiest inventors of the day, his specialty being new methods for the application of electricity.

Woods has never known anything of "slavery days" save by hearsay, for he was born of free parents in Australia. The father and mother came to the United States while he was still a child, and the future inventor started in to earn his own living at the age of ten as a blacksmith's apprentice. He next worked as fireman on a western railroad, and rose to the position of engineer. After saving some money he resigned and devoted two years to the study of the uses of electricity. Then he secured employment as engineer of an ocean steamer, but since 1880 he has been a Cincinnati manufacturer.

To Woods is given the credit for devising the induction means of telegraphing, by use of which moving trains can be communicated with. He has also invented a method of supplying the power of electric street cars from beneath instead of overhead, as in the trolley system. According to the Woods plan iron blocks or "heads" are laid between the rails twelve feet apart. They project nearly one inch above the surface, and are connected with distributing stations by an underground electric wire. "These distributing stations," says an observer who witnessed an experimental test recently at Coney Island, N. Y., "are built in the form of lampposts, and each one has from twelve to twenty batteries, each connected with a separate head and so arranged that only one can supply a current at the time. The car is supplied with brushes made of copper wire, and in passing over the 'heads' the current is transmitted by contact."

It is said of the negro who made the first horse hayrake that he evolved the idea because he was "too lazy to rake by hand." That may or may not be so, but what is decidedly a chivalrous black man's contrivance is at present extremely popular among the colored females in the sparsely settled agricultural regions of Brazil. The work of pounding corn into meal by means of a rude pestle and mortar is one of the hardest tasks imaginable for a woman. This is no longer necessary in the well watered districts of Brazil, for a machine is now in use which utilizes the power of running streams. It is thus described by one who has seen it:

An upright, forked at one end, is driven into the ground. Resting in the fork is a piece of timber, at one end of which is a large bowl, while from the other end depends a heavy weight. Water from a brook is conducted in a trough to the bowl. As the bowl is filled with water that end becomes heavier than the other and is accordingly depressed while the other end is elevated. As the bowl is depressed the water runs out, relieving the weight at that end, while the weight at the other falls with considerable force into the receptacle below it containing grain. Then the bowl is filled with water again and the process is repeated. The grinder falls into the grain about every thirty seconds.

In marked contrast with Woods and the unknown Brazilian is the case of Cary Logan, for fifty years a faithful and respected employee of the Bank of Kentucky, at Louisville, who has just been retired on a pension. Although his position was the humble one of messenger he handled millions of dollars and never lost a cent. He loved "de bank" more than anything else on earth and resented bitterly the slightest innovation in the manner of doing business or in the style of furnishing. He believed in the old order, and improvements to him were an abomination. Nothing new pleased him, and soon after the building was refitted, awhile ago, he applied for leave to retire. Cary Logan is a type of the faithful old servitor so numerous "befo' de wah." Granville T. Woods represents the ambitious and pushing type of the present day.

The Negro's Humor.

Among the old time negroes in middle Georgia was much of a humor very interesting. Their speech, by constant contact with the white man's, which it sought to imitate, had a curtness and vivacity never heard on large seaboard and river plantations. In the lightness of the negro's heart, with an imagination that never sought to be curbed, his words and his deportment often had a fun as racy as any lover of that article reasonably could wish to see. Even his complainings, oftener than otherwise, were put forth with a resentment so peculiar as to provoke as well laughter as sympathy. Witness the following anecdote of the return to his old master, not very long ago, of one of his former slaves after having served another person for a year:

"Why, Jim, how happens it that you quit Perkins?" asked the gentleman.

"Well, now, Marse Jack, I gwine up en tell you jes' how 't is. I wuck fer dah man all las' year, and I wuck hard, en I make him a good crop. Well, now, de troof is, I did git f'om him a few, but min you, jes only a few, merlasses en tobarker, en one hat, en a pa'r o' shoes, en one little thing en'nother. Well, den, Chris'mus come, en he say, 'Jim, I gwine make out our 'count.' En den he tuck he piece o' paper, en he pen, en he ink vial, en he 'gin a-settin down, and when he thoo wid dat job, he 'gin a-addin up, en a-put'n down, en a-kyar'n; en he kyar'd, en he kep' on a-kyar'n, ontwel, bless your soul en body, Marse Jacky, when he got thoo, he done kyar's off all what was a-comin to me! En so I makes up my min, I does, to leff dar, en pewoose myself back to you, whar I knows dey not gwine be no sich kyar'n as dem." Then he joined heartily in the laugh raised by what had just occurred to him as being a good practical joke.—Colonel Richard M. Johnston in Century.

Salvation Army Shelters in London.

The Salvation Army shelters make no claim to anything beyond decent cleanliness and comfort. Outside, the street lamps burn dimly through the fog. It is bright and light within. Outside, the wind cuts pitilessly through the thin garments. The Shelter is always warm. Outside, the clothing bears too often the mark of the gutter mud. It is always possible to "wash and be clean" within, for hot water and soap and towels are for use of the inmates without extra charge.

The women desiring lodgings may come in as early in the afternoon as they will. Many do come early and sit about and mend their tatters and gossip a bit, taking their bowl of soup or mug of cocoa with as much true neighborliness as enters in other hospitable quarters into the æsthetics of afternoon tea.

Rarely is there heard, either in the Women's or Men's Shelter, the sound of quarrels or ribald talk. Those in charge report but little difficulty in governing an element that in the streets and alleys would be almost beyond control.

The warm room, the comfortable meal, the sense of shelter and respite from wandering, all have their quieting influence. And when we add that every evening the Shelters are made the centers of an active religious meeting, we realize that the inmates are not left to the depression or the excitement of their own discouraged thoughts.—Mary Lowe Dickinson in Harper's Bazar.

Indian Courage.

The annals of no country can show any savage foe so formidable for his numbers to trained regular troops of the white race as the American Indian. The tales of the sepoy rebellion, replete as they are with heroic achievements of British soldiers, read like absurd fairy tales to Indian fighters of our army. The spectacle, repeated again and again, of a score or so of these Englishmen riding through as many thousands of opposing sepoys, disciplined and thoroughly supplied with the best of firearms, would be a very novel one to those accustomed to the temper of the savage of our own continent.

Had Captain Jack, or Joseph, or Geronimo, with such warriors as they led, been the sort of foes to attack the English power in India, the history of Delhi and Lucknow would have been written in far darker characters on the pages of English history. Self reliant, intelligent, fierce in battle, inimitable horsemen, armed with the modern rifle, our own Indians have often waged successful battle with regular troops unsurpassed in quality and far outnumbering them. It is doubtful if even the Cossack or Arab can be compared with them in partisan warfare.—Harper's Weekly.

How Blood Was Secured.

An anecdote is going the rounds concerning the manner in which a well known leading actor supplied the accidental absence of a necessary item of "makeup." He was playing Macbeth, and when he came to the murder scene he asked in vain for the blood with which he had intended to imbrue his hands. After abusing the property man roundly for his neglect, the actor, struck with a happy thought, suddenly hit that functionary on the nose, so that a good supply of crimson fluid was obtained, and in this the actor bathed his palms.

It is said that after the performance there was a "realistic" conflict between the "pro." and the property man in which more "claret" was "tapped"—this time not for stage purposes.—London Tit-Bits.

Every Animal is Fond of Bananas.

The leaves of the banana, often six feet long and two feet wide, are tender, and the strong winds of the tropics soon tear them in strips, thereby adding to their grace and beauty. The banana is a fruit that beast and bird, as well as man, are fond of, and the owner, when he lives in a sparsely settled country, must protect his plantation by a fence of some thorny plant.—Goldthwaite's Geographical Magazine.

ANCIENT MONUMENTS.

Famous Writing Rock and the Skeleton in Armor.

STRANGE HIEROGLYPHICS ON A STONE

Evidence That America was Discovered Eight Hundred Years Ago.

The visit of a number of Boston savants, armed with kodaks and ponderous volumes on archæology, to Dayton, Mass., has again directed attention to the famous Writing Rock, a relic which has puzzled philosophers since the earliest days of American habitation. The celebrated Writing Rock is situated on Taunton river, a stream associated with many an Indian tradition and event of colonial history. It is one of the most marked evidences that the coast of New England was visited by old time mariners long before the coming of the Spanish voyagers and the Pilgrims. It shares with the skeleton in armor at Fall River and the old stone tower at Newport the interest of students of the far distant past.

The three objects mentioned make it nearly certain that America was discovered long before the Northmen penetrated the more temperate latitudes of the sea, or the adventurous sails of Americus Vespucci were wafted amid the flower covered island of the Caribbean. It is also nearly certain that adventurers from the Old World made a temporary settlement along the coast of Massachusetts before the Pilgrims ever saw the wintry shore of Plymouth or bent their knees in worship upon taking possession of the, to them, new continent.

THE ROCK.

The Writing Rock is one of the strongest of the evidences in the case. It is often visited by antiquarians, and its inscriptions are well preserved. It consists of an insulated mass of fine grained granite lying on the sands of the river a few feet above low water mark, but covered with water at each flow of the tide. It is 11 feet long and about 5 high. On the water side it presents an inclined plane surface, the face of which, 11 feet by 5, seems to have been originally covered with inscriptions and sculptures. The inscriptions are hieroglyphic in character, and as the rock is very hard those that rise above low water mark can have undergone but little change from the action of the elements.

The rock was noticed by the Pilgrims, but received only a little attention from historians until 1834, when there was found in the neighboring town of Fall River a most remarkable relic, one that has not yet ceased to be carefully studied. In digging down a hill a mass of rock fell off and disclosed a human skull, which was found to belong to a body buried in a sitting posture and enveloped with bark.

This envelope was removed, and the astonished workmen found that the skeleton was incased in brass armor. The helmet which covered the trunk was thirteen inches by six inches and about one-eighth inch in thickness. It was evidently cast in a furnace and bore marks of skilled workmanship. It was very similar to that described by Homer as having been worn by Hector in the immortal battle and siege of Troy.

THE SKELETON IN ARMOR.

What was more remarkable about the armor was that it seemed to have no connection with the armorial customs and patterns of Northern or Eastern Europe, nor with any recent date. Below the breastplate, and entirely encircling the body, was a belt composed of brass tubes, each four and one-half inches long and about three-eighths of an inch in diameter, arranged longitudinally and close together. The tubes had been cast on hollow reeds, and were so arranged as to protect the body below the belt and breastplate. The contrivance was a most ingenious one, and proved that the maker must have had a most skilled hand and a comprehensive knowledge of the art of casting.

It is the opinion of learned men who have made a study of the skeleton in armor and other relics which have been found near it that it belonged to the crew of voyagers which left the inscription on the Writing Rock.

Both the skeleton and the writing on the rock are supposed to be of Asiatic origin. The most careful writers on the subject believe the Writing Rock to contain a representation of the Pillars of Hercules (Gibraltar), and that the mail clad hero was one of a crew of Phœnicians who crossed the western main, sailing through the Strait of Gibraltar, past the Pillars of Hercules, never to return.

The armor is the same as appears in drawings of sculpture found at Palenque, Mexico, which has led to the supposition that an Asiatic race transiently settled North America, afterward going to Mexico, where it founded those rock walled cities in the exploring of which such astonishing evidences of Asiatic civilization have been found.

READING THE HIEROGLYPHICS.

To this theory the antiquarians who have recently visited the rock subscribe. They have deciphered the hieroglyphics to their own satisfaction to read that the writer was familiar with the Mediterranean region, and that with his fellows he was discouraged and abandoned on the North American coast.

It is supposed that in the exodus to Mexico this band was forgotten, and the inscriptions are their mute record of the lonesomeness and discouragement of the situation. It is probable that the record is at least eight hundred years old, and so antedates the Columbus period by four centuries.

The Phœnicians were the most persevering of navigators, and their capital was once queen of the sea. Their history tells of bold sailors who pushed out beyond the Pillars of Hercules and found strange lands, rugged and rough. They may have been the American continent.

It is proposed to preserve the rock by removing it if possible to one of the great museums. There it can be studied more scientifically and the inscriptions deciphered with greater accuracy. Who knows but that they may, when fully understood, reveal a tale of early adventure and hardship never dreamed of? Those hardy mariners may have performed deeds of daring of which they were proud enough to immortalize in enduring granite, or they may have written the direction to some wonderful treasure which they had discovered. The latter many believe to be the true message contained in the hieroglyphics, and enthusiasts have puzzled much over them. It is possible that modern knowledge may find the actual message from the mediæval past.—Cor. Chicago Herald.

Jack—Yes, and a great deal better. You can't hug a mile.—New York Herald.

A Storm on the Coast of Chili.

In the southern part of the desert of Atacama a storm occurs only at intervals of many years. One of these rare storms was experienced by only one person, Mr. Joel Phillips, now of Cornwall, but then a mule owner and copper ore carrier, who lived in a rancho located on an insulated rock fifteen feet above the level of the bottom of a ravine in which it was situated and distant from the port of Pau de Azucar about twenty miles. He had just arrived at his home an hour before sunset when a heavy cloud appeared overhead, causing sudden darkness. But he was soon aroused from superfluous reflection by a shower of hailstones of dangerous dimensions and followed by a copious downpour of water, which continued for about eight hours, accompanied by loud peals of thunder. His terror was further aroused by the roar of flowing torrents of water around his lonely island home, as the ravine, one-half mile in width, was now filled to a depth of twelve feet and rolling down continuously thousands of huge bowlders with a pulverizing, rumbling noise along its bed down to the sea on each side of him.

Bewildered by the misunderstood occurrence and unearthly din created as the white foaming circle of water insidiously approached within two feet of his dwelling, and with faint hopes that it would rise no higher, he ceased reflecting, and after enduring hours of indescribable mental agony, he fell exhausted into a stupor, dreaming of a second deluge. From this he was benignantly aroused by his famished saddle horse devouring the vegetable materials his hut was constructed with, the animal having escaped from the stable in the ravine to the heights above and thence to his master's home for his usual breakfast. The storm was over, and the sun was shining brightly, as if nothing special had happened; the ravine was free of water and cleared out for another such deluge, which probably would not again happen for a century or two.—London Engineer.

He Had His Coat Repaired.

He was one of the army who are living and seeing life in New York on an attenuated income, and one cold morning he awoke to the realization that the overcoat would be a necessary part of his garb for that day. He looked at it. 'Twas unpresentable. He thrust his hands deep into his pockets. They were empty. Two direful facts, neither of them surprises, faced him, but he was not annoyed. He proceeded cheerily to a small tailor's shop and presented the overcoat for repairs.

"It will cost you a dollar," said Shears. "The price is no obstacle, proceed," replied the customer. Shears turned the coat over to a subordinate and sat down for a chat with the heaven-sent customer, for Shears was a Spaniard. And yet he was sufficiently Americanized to produce a deck of cards and propose a little game of poker. The heaven-sent assented. Vest buttons made admirable chips, and the cards flew for some minutes, until the coat was repaired. Then the customer paid his bill in vest buttons, and received from Shears fifty cents for the remaining buttons he had won. Then, equipped for the inclement weather, he went forth conscious of the rift in the clouds, and bought for himself a luxurious fifty cent breakfast.—New York Times.

He Is a Happy Boy at Times.

There is at least one boy in this city who is overjoyed by the news of every funeral the services of which are to be held in the church to which he is attached. He is only nine years old and is a very poor lad, the child of needy parents. He sings in the church choir, and whenever the choir is called upon to sing at a funeral he is paid the sum of one dollar for his service in it. Yesterday forenoon he rushed home to tell his mamma that there were to be two funerals in the afternoon. He laughed beyond measure as he shouted, "Good news, mam! two funerals!" He danced and was filled with bliss over the prospect. He had not sung at a funeral for nearly a week, and had been disconsolate. His mother, too, was happy over the news, for she needed money and her husband was out of work. When the lad returned home with two dollars after the funerals the household was cheered up and the family got a good dinner.—New York Sun.

An Anecdote of the Emir.

Mr. Pyne, an English engineer resident at Cabul, in the service of the emir, tells a good story about his highness and the Russians. Mr. Pyne is stated to have been told it by the emir himself. The Russian governor of Turkestan sent to the emir saying that it was proposed to exercise some 500 artillery and cavalry on the Afghan frontier, and expressing the hope that it would not give rise to apprehensions on the part of his highness. To this his highness replied that he had no objection, because as it happened that he was about to exercise 5,000 cavalry, artillery and infantry on his side of the frontier at the same place and there was plenty of room for both. The reply to this, after thanking his highness was that another more convenient site had been found for the proposed maneuvers.—London Times.

A Man with the Supremest Humanity.

Once I was warned by a well known statesman against putting ecclesiastics on my society's committee. I said, "But we have already one on it, Cardinal Manning." His reply was, "Oh, Manning; he is not an ecclesiastic; he belongs to us all!" That the supremest humanity is king among men, this is the lesson of the great life which the nation mourns and which it will see no more.—Contemporary Review.

Stating the Case Frankly.

The servant girl answered the door-bell and replied that her mistress was out. "Please tell her," said the caller, "that I would like very much to have her come over tonight to play whist." "Well, ma'am," answered her royal highness, the servant girl, "I know Mrs. S. can't go; it's my night out, and she's got to stay in."—Springfield Homestead.

MATRIMONIAL POINTERS.

Dr. Brooks Gives Some Good Advice to Young People.

PRESERVE HARMONY IN THE HOUSEHOLD.

Never Marry for Beauty Alone.—Avoid the Peevish Man or Woman.

"Marriage" was the theme upon which Rev. Dr. John A. Brooks discoursed at the Prospect Avenue Christian church. His text was from Ephesians xxii, 32, 33: "Wives submit yourselves unto your own husbands as unto the Lord, for the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church. Nevertheless, let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself and the wife see that she reverences her husband."

"Courtship is the most serious time for a man or woman," said Dr. Brooks. "Many bad unions have resulted from bad courtships. It is the time to be earnest, honest and truthful, not a time of smiling, sighing, pleasing and captivating. It is the time to study happiness, concord and congeniality.

"Marriage is either a blessing or a curse. Plutarch said, 'A man must eat a bushel of salt before I can take him for my friend.' How much more important it is when he is to be taken for life. There should be harmony in age between the parties marrying. A young person should not marry an old one. The one will seek life and its active joys, the other rest. There should be harmony in neatness and cleanliness. A clean man will not feel at home if he returns to a dirty house, nor a neat woman care to go out with a husband slovenly and uncleanly. There should be harmony also in physical temperament. Both should be strong and vigorous, and ought to have a temper as nearly equal as possible.

"A redheaded man should never marry a redheaded woman if he wants peace in the family. There should be harmony in social position. A man should never marry a woman whom he would be ashamed to take to his family and the society in which he moves. In intelligence there should also be harmony. A man does not want to marry a woman who cannot enter into his intellectual enjoyments. Above all, there should be harmony in religion. There can be no happiness in a family where a religious wife or husband has to associate with an irreligious wife or husband.

"Every young man should study the woman he is to marry with great care. He should study himself to know the traits he wants to match in his wife. Never marry a woman for personal beauty alone. Her beauty will fade after awhile and you will cease to love her. Beauty of soul is the thing to love. This will survive the failure of personal beauty and live on until death. Do not marry a fretful woman. Her fretfulness and peevishness before marriage will turn into quarrelsome and stormy invective after marriage.

"Never marry a fashionable woman. Instead of her home she will be ever thinking of fashionable society and of preparing for its enjoyment. She will burden you continually with expenses for her wardrobe, carriages and extra servants, and leave you always in your home desolated. On the other hand, select a woman who is a good housekeeper. Your home ought to be the most blessed and delightful place during life, and if she does not know how to make it such she is not fit to be your wife."—Kansas City Times.

Origin of the Tomato.

The English word of direct Indian origin most frequently in use is tomato. A native of tropical or subtropical America, it was cultivated by the subjects of the Incas and Montezumas, as well as by the other semicivilized natives, long before the advent of Europeans on this hemisphere, under the name of tumatl or tomatl. Though introduced into Europe almost as early as its congener, the potato, it is only lately that it has made its way into popular favor. There it was first known to the English as love apple, to the French as pomme d'amour and to the Italians as pomi d'amore, and these names are still in use, perpetuating the old, widespread notion that its use as food had an influence on the amatory passions.—Rural New Yorker.

Didn't Understand.

In the days of the old schoolship Massachusetts a Sunday visitor once addressed the sailor boys on board in what he probably thought was an effective manner. The next day in the school the question was asked, "What did you learn from the remarks of Mr. X. yesterday?" To the surprise of the teacher one boy gave this answer, "I learned that he was talking about two things that he did not seem to understand, sir—navigation and religion, sir."—Boston Advertiser.

She Couldn't Wait.

Lady—I'm sorry your mamma is out, my pet, for I wanted very much to see her, and I can't remain until she returns. She has gone shopping, I presume?

Little Pet—No; she's gone to make sixty-five calls.

Lady—Oh, is that all. Then I'll wait.

Without the Mousing Instinct.

A writer on natural history says: "There is a family of cats at my house that sustain the theory of heredity," said an amateur naturalist. "The first of the tribe that I became acquainted with was of obscure origin. The most diligent herald would have hard work to trace her family many generations back. But though she was of lowly birth and had no silver spoon in her mouth, when she first cried 'mew,' she had what in a cat was better—an insatiable longing for mice. Her appetite for such small deer was unappeasable, and in a week after she was brought home there was not a rodent in the house. Those mice that she did not catch fled from her as from the glance of destiny and were seen no more in her dominion. All you had to do to test her 'blood' was to make a scraping noise resembling the gnawing of a mouse, at any point, and she was on the alert instantly and ready for a spring. But in time she had all the mice eaten or banished, and her practice as a monster fell into innocuous desuetude. She was fat, lazy, luxurious and would scarcely eat any food less delicate than a sparrow, for which she developed a strong propensity. In time she presented her proud owner with a litter of young ones possessed of all their mother's beauty. The family survived the dangers of juvenile cat life, but when they grew up to the age of discretion, behold they were as ignorant of their duties in respect of catching mice as though they were lambs. No imitation of mouse noise stirred them to action; they never prowled, with cautious tread, in cupboard and other places where mice most do congregate. The whole lot of young ones are not worth a cent except to catch flies and sparrows. I lay it all to the fact that the mother had given up mousing before she assumed the cares of a family, and her progeny lost, or rather failed to inherit, the instinct."

No Angels in Theirs.

Early last summer a New Englander moved out to a small town in Arizona and announced his intention of opening up a first class grocery. He had a number of bills posted up dwelling particularly on the fact that the business was to be square and above board. Just as he was getting ready to open shop a deputation of citizens waited on him and asked the newcomer if the statements on the placards were made in good faith.

"You mought as well give us the hull truth about this thing," said the leader. "You mean to say there hain't going to be no water in the vinegar?"

"That's what I mean, sir!" replied the stranger, a little surprised. "Nor no sand in the sugar!"

"Ain't they goin' to be no beans in the coffee!"

"Most decidedly not, sir!"

"Nor chicory, nuther?"

"Never, gentlemen; I give you my word for it."

The crowd seemed nonplused for a moment, and the leader held a short consultation, at the end of which he turned and said:

"Say, stranger, we've concluded that you air a suspecious character. But first let me ask you if your cigars are goin' to be loaded—with cabbage, you know?"

"Not while I"——

"That's all we wanted to know. We gin you twenty-four hours to leave town, an' you better leave. When we're in need o' angels we'll drop you a postal card. Good day, stranger," and the deputation filed out.—American Grocer.

House Drains.

House drains, as a source of ground contamination, are even more dangerous than the common sewers, since they are so frequently located immediately under the house, where the results of any defect are more directly manifested. By unskillful construction, or by subsequent careless usage or want of repair, the filth is effused into the basement or cellar, and impregnates the soil under the house. In country districts isolated outbreaks of diptheria, traceable to cesspool effluvia, are not at all uncommon. In these cases, it is generally found that there is a water closet in the house, where there is little or no provision for any change of air, that the soil pipe is never ventilated and that the closet drain discharges into a cesspool which is completely covered up, and only cleaned at rare intervals. The consequence is that any gases generated in the cesspool have no outlet, except through the water closet into the house, and hence result attacks of diphtheria, ulcerated sore throats and other ailments. From an inquiry, instituted by the state board of health of Massachusetts, respecting the predisposing causes of diphtheria, its prevalence, etc., it is shown that this disease has been most severe in the rural districts where there are no sewers, and where the drainage is bad.—John McMullen, A. M.

Where Almost Everybody Smokes.

Everybody smokes, with few exceptions, here; the market woman puffs her cigarette; the peon laborers are unhappy without their cigarettes; men and boys smoke, and a few old fashioned ladies of advanced years. But it is untrue to say that Mexican ladies, as a rule, smoke, either cigarettes or cigars. I have never seen a Mexican lady, except, as I say, an elderly lady, smoke. Here one may smoke at one's ease in the street cars, and conductor and driver are pretty sure to be seen with a cigarette in their mouth. Priests smoke complacently, and post-office clerks as they sort the mails. Smoke fills the ante-chambers of the national palace and floats into the quiet churches by the open doors. I never see a poor man puffing his cigarette at a cent a bunch but I feel glad that this measure of comfort is his. Pipes are not used, except by a few foreigners. You step in to see your banker; he offers you a cigarette. Your doctor puffs as he feels your pulse, and you ask a man with ten cents' worth of cotton for a light, which he gives with a gesture of a gentleman of the old school.—City of Mexico Cor. FRIDAY, AUGUST 19 1892

Lord Chief Justice Coleridge of England recently delivered a judgment regarding right of way in an action in which the plaintiff, a workingman, sued the Duke of Rutland because the latter's game keepers were stopping traffic on a highway while they were driving grouse. His lordship in his deliverance said that the days of high-handed interference with the rights of the people had passed, and that if the duke could not conduct his shootings without meddling with the right of the public to use the highway he must select other places to hold his battues. The evidence given during the trial of the suit showed that the gamekeepers knocked the plaintiff down on the highway, and that when the plaintiff complained of this treatment to the duke's son, Lord Edward Manners, the latter replied: "Go to the devil. If you are shot your life will be on your own head." This, the Lord Chief Justice said, could not be tolerated from any person, duke or other. Lord Edward Manners, interposing at this point in the remarks of the Lord Chief Justice, said that his lordship's words seemed to hold him (Lord Edward) up as a prospective murderer. To this his lordship replied: "I only said what I considered it my duty say." Herein the Lord Chief Justice set the courts of democratic America an exemplary precedent. In this country a duke is no better than an honest pauper in theory, but if he is a rich duke or even a rich iron baron like Carnegie, the tendency of the scales of Justice is to weigh in his favor whenever he comes into court as plaintiff of defendant in a case involving the rights of a poorer man. Wealth is a power in this country and it is useless to deny the fact. Most men have their price, and the largest purse can frequently secure a favorable verdict in many of our courts. Coporations and trusts, fostered and fattened by iniquitous tariff are all-powerful, and unless the laws are speedily modified, we shall by a plutocracy more tyrannous than that which prevailed under the worst ruler of the Roman Empire, or that which cost Louis XVI his head and deluged the French nation in the blood of its people.

The spectacle of a candidate for the Presidency making statements for effect which he can hardly believe himself to be true is not inspiring. Should Mr. Harrison or Mr. Cleveland say that they felt confident of election the sincerity of neither would be questioned. Each has so much ground for hope that conviction would not seem an impossibility. But when Mr. Weaver says he is sure of an election it is hard to give him credit for sincerity. Well informed politicians who have no personal interest in the matter do not consider Weaver's chance of a single electoral vote worthy of consideration. No one, possibly excepting himself, believes that he will carry more than four or at the utmost five States. When, therefore, Mr. Weaver asserts that his party will carry the solid South and the solid West the conclusion is that he is talking for effect. Would it not be better for him to let the job to some speaker of less prominence in the party. It would look better after election.

The man who wrote the following wrote well: "If you have a little farm or business or steady employment, and out of debt, do not fret and work yourself and wife into the grave for the sak of making money. You have but the one life to live and that is very brief at best. Take a little comfort and plaasure day by day as you go along, and try to do a little good to others. A morbid insatiate desire to possess the earth, and to grab everything in sight, is at the foundation of more misery than any other one thing. Wealth alone will never keep your memory green after you are gone."

President Harrison signed the bill prepared by the labor unions providing for an eight-hour day on government work without consulting his running mate, Whitelaw Reid, who is opposed to labor Unions and their "demands" on "principle."

It is noted by the Republic of St. Louis that the average wages paid by protected corporations to the workers in their factories is one dollar a day and that the average wages paid by the protected corporatioes to their Pinkertons is $5 a day.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of JAMES B. STEWARD, deceased.

The appraisers heretofore appointed by this Court to appraise and admeasure the homestead petitioned for by Annie Steward, the widow of said deceased, having filed herein a report of their proceedings:

It is therefore ordered by the Judge of said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the Judge of said Superior Court on Saturday, the 13th day of August, 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, at the chambers of said Judge, at the Courthouse, in the town of Independence, County of Inyo, State of California, then and there to shew cause, if any they have, why said report should not be confirmed.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published in the INYO INDEPENDENT, a newspaper printed and published in said Inyo county, for two successive weeks before the said 13th day of August, 1892.

Dated July 27th, 1892.

GEO. M. GILL,
Judge of the Superior Court.

SUMMONS.

IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT OF THE SECond Township in the County of Inyo, State of California.

EMMONS SPENCER, Plaintiff, vs. WILLIAM EVA, Defendant.

The People of the State of California send greeting to William Eva, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Justice's Court of the Second Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer before the Justice at his office in said Township the complaint filed therein, within five days (exclusive of the day of service), after the service on you of this summons—if served within the Township in which the action is brought; or, if served out of said Township, but in said County, within ten days; otherwise within twenty days.

This action is brought to recover of you the sum of One hundred and thirty-three and 75-100 ($133.75) dollars due from you to Plaintiff for services rendered to you by Plaintiff as collector and attorney between the 15th day of November, 1891, and the 20th day of May, 1892, as more fully appears in complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to so appear and answer said complaint as above required, said Plaintiff will take judgement against you by default for the sum of $133.75, together with costs of suit.

Given under my hand this 24 day of July 1892.

DENNIS J. HESSIAN,
Justice of the Peace of said Township.
EMMONS SPENCER, Attorney for Plaintiff.

ALIAS SUMMONS.

IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT OF THIRD Township, County of Inyo, State of California.

JOHN WELCH, Plaintiff, vs. JESUS ENSENAS, Defendant.

The people of the State of California send greeting to Jesus Ensenas, Defendant:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the Justice's Court of Third Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer before the Justice at his office in said Township, the Complaint filed therein, within five days (exclusive of the day of service), after the service on you of this Summons—if served within the Township in which this action is brought, or, if served out of said Township, but in said County, within ten days; or within twenty days if served elsewhere.

The said action is brought to obtain judgment against you for the sum of $38.60 alleged to be due Plaintiff upon an account for work, labor and services performed by one J. W. Murphy in the line of general blacksmith work and for materials furnished you in and about said work at your request, between the 28th day of August, 1890, and the 3rd day of May, 1892, and which said account was assigned to plaintiff herein on the 5th day of July, 1892, and before the commencement of this action, as more fully appears by the complaint on file herein to which you are referred.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, said plaintiff will take judgment against you for the sum of $38.60, together with costs of suit.

Given under my hand this 12th day of July, 1892. IRV. H. MULHOLLAND,
Justice of the Peace of said Township.
F. E. DENSMORE, Attorney for Plaintiff.

THE CORRECT COLUMBUS DAY.

The executive Committee of the National Public School Celebration of Columbus Day, occasioned a bill to be introduced into Congress, instructing President Harrison to issue a proclamation making Columbus Day a general holiday.

In the interests of scholarly accuracy, this bill wisely authorized the change in date from Oct. 12th to Oct. 21st. It has passed both branches of Congress and received the President's signature. Above all dates every pupil in our public schools remember that Columbus discovered America Oct. 12, 1492. They will wish to know why the 400th anniversary falls on Oct. 21st 1892.

For many centuries the calendar instituted by Julius Cesar, known as the Julian Calendar, was accepted. This calendar assumed that there were 365¼ days in a year; but as this made the year 11 minutes and 14 seconds too long, it could not, without correction, very long answer the purpose for which it was devised. Consequently in 1582 it was found necessary to reform the Calendar, and the Gregorian Calendar was adopted. To correct the errors that the old calendar had made, ten days were dropped out, and Oct. 5 of 1582 became Oct. 15th. As the error was found to be exactly three days in 400 years, the Gregorian Calendar omitted the leap-year from every centurial year, excepting those that were divisible by 400. The years 1500, 1700, 1800, were not leap-years. As before stated this reformation took place in 1582 and 10 days were omitted from the calendar; but as Columbus discovered America previous to the year 1500, which reckoned by the Gregorian calendar would not be a leap-year, there would be but nine days to omit. On Oct. 12th 1892 the sun will occupy the same relative position to the earth as on the memorable October 12th 1492.

This change is announced as in the interest of scholarly accuracy. The public school stands for enlightenment and progress and it would not be in keeping with this spirit to compute the four centuries that will intervene between the date of the discovery and the date we are to celebrate by an erroneous calendar which had its day and was discarded more than 300 years ago.

All the precedents for celebrating American anniversaries are in favor of correcting the old calendar to the new, for instance, Washington was born on the 11th day of February "old style," but we celebrate the anniversary of his birth on the 22d day of Feb. "new style." This is the first effort that has ever been made fittingly to observe, by national commemorative exercises, the achievements of Columbus, and the right day should be celebrated.

The official program will not be ready until Sept. 1st, but will consist of the following features:

1. Raising and saluting the flag.
2. The song of Columbus day.
3. The address.
4. The ode.
5. Song—America.

As many more exercises may be added to this as the school desires. Until the program is ready each school should begin preparations for securing a flag. The best way is to have the scholars themselves give or raise the money, as in this way they will take a deeper interest in the flag. The scholars of Inyo should manifest a deep interest in this National celebration, as it will have a prominent place in history. "What's worth doing at all is worth doing up particularly Brown," is a thoroughly American idea. It applies alike to great expositions, gigantic feats of engineering, the founding of colleges, churches, schools and other public institutions, to political contests and patriotic celebrations. Scan the entire horizon of American activities and the truth of this assertion comes back to us with redoubled force.

We are in the Saturday evening of the fourth century of American discovery; we are nearing one of the great milestones of history—an epoch in American life is closing. In a few weeks we pass the day which rounds up the full measure of the 400 years that are gone. But it is not proposed that we stand even for a day on that great dividing line to speculate on American achievement and progress. We shall pause but for a moment and contemplate with wonder and admiration the grandest production and the most enduring monument of the first 400 years of American life—our public school system.

MRS. K. J. ROBINSON.
Georges Creek, Aug. 15, 1892.

Charley Turner and George Lewis had a brush with the Tulare county detectives on Bubb's creek the other day. Their camp was surrounded and the robber hunters came a-shooting. The boys finally convinced the warriors that they were not dangerous and never robbed as much as a watermelon patch; this, with their native looks of innocence, kept them out of the Tulare Bastile.

ALIAS SUMMONS.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.

FRED RICKE RHINE, Executrix of the will of Nathan Rhine, deceased, plaintiff, vs. W. L. HUNTER, CAROLINE HUNTER and J. L. PORTER, defendants.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and the Complaint filed in the office of the Clerk of said County.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIfornia send greeting to W. L. Hunter, Caroline L. Hunter and J. L. Porter, defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, as such executrix, in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county, or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment of this Court for the foreclosure of a certain mortgage described in said complaint and executed by the said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L. Hunter on the 10th day of April, 1889, to secure the payment of a certain Promissory Note made by the said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L. Hunter to the said Nathan Rhine, now deceased, for the sum of $2,400, with interest thereon from the said 10th day of April, 1889, at the rate of 1½ per cent per month, described in the complaint, which by the lapse of time is now due, no part of which has been paid excepting $60 paid April 10th, 1889, $144 paid October 10th, 1889, $110.35 paid May 10th, 1890, $75 paid September 20th, 1890, $72 paid December 27th, 1890 and $66 paid November 28th, 1891.

Said note is dated April 10th, 1889, that the premises conveyed by said mortgage may be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of said note and interest thereon and costs of suit, and the further sum of 10 per cent on the amount of the judgment found due as counsel fees as provided in said mortgage, and in case such proceeds are insufficient to pay the same, that judgment be docketed against said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L. Hunter for the balance remaining due, and also that the said defendants, and all persons claiming by through or under may be barred and foreclosed of all right, title, claim, lien, equity of redemption, and interest in and to said mortgaged premises, and for other and further relief, as will more fully appear by reference to the complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint.

Witness my hand, and the Seal of the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, this 10th day of August, A. D. 1892.

"August Flower"

"For two years I suffered terribly with stomach trouble, and was for all that time under treatment by a physician. He finally, after trying everything, said my stomach was worn out, and that I would have to cease eating solid food. On the recommendation of a friend I procured a bottle of August Flower. Odd Uses of Sea Snails.

"Snails that live in the sea are useful for many more important purposes than most people imagine," said a naturalist to the writer. "Some of them, known as 'winkles,' are used to a great extent for food in England, being sold at street corners in the cities, where they are esteemed a great luxury by the poor. On the North Atlantic coast we have certain species of whelks which might be made to serve admirably for eating, affording a cheap and nutritious diet. Even in the waters of the far Arctic these gasteropods are found in great numbers, where they sometimes supply a means of subsistence to castaway whalers and other voyagers who would otherwise perish of starvation.

On the other hand, some univalves do a great deal of damage by destroying oysters in beds, drilling through the shells with their filelike tongues and sucking out the occupants of the houses into which they have thus forced an entrance. The conch, instead of drilling like the whelks, seizes the unfortunate bivalve with its powerful "foot" and crushes it, by the sheer exertion of muscular power, as one would smash an English walnut in the fist. —Washington Star.

The Dog in Egypt.

In Egypt the dog was a friend and faithful servant. He lived in the house with his master, followed him in his walks, attended the public ceremonies, sometimes free, at other times held in leash by a slave or child, or in princely families by a favorite dwarf. At his meals he had his place marked under the benches of the guests. As in Greece and Rome, he was there to dispose of bones, the fragments of meat and the pieces of bread that were thrown down, and in a general way to keep the dining room clean. These were certainly not very refined fashions, and if our house dogs had to satisfy themselves in this way they would be likely to die of hunger.

The ancients did not feel the delicate tastes and disgusts in such matters that we experience; their life presented excessive refinements and rude features of which we have no idea, side by side. The house dog in Egypt was a domestic, working at his trade, only his trade was one in which we have ceased to employ him; it may not have been a great thing that he was lost, but it is in the kitchen or his kennel that he finishes up his master's dessert.—Nature.

When the Spoon Was First Used.

The spoon came into use at a very ancient date, and as it is still found among savage tribes that have never come into contact with civilization, it is evident that its use was suggested by the needs of the most primitive beings and not by any instinct of cleanliness or propriety. It was preceded in the process of mechanical evolution by vessels for carrying water and by calabashes or dippers of some sort for dipping water from rivers or springs or handling other liquids.

The habit of conveying these larger receptacles to the mouth in eating and drinking probably suggested the spoon as more convenient for such uses. How long these two simple implements preceded the dawn of civilization no one can ever know, but it must have been more than 4,000 years after they came into use before the fork appeared on the tables of civilized Europe, after which nearly 100 years were required to render its usage general.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Dressing "Fast."

The old custom of dressing oneself into a walking advertisement of one's profession is fast becoming obsolete. Some of my loudest dressing customers are lawyers and doctors who have grown tired of being branded with their avocation. I don't mean to say that ministers, too, are getting to be loud dressers, but even they are making concessions that were not dreamed of ten years ago. There's a wide margin for artistic and tasteful dressing outside of black, and a wide range of handsome and wholly desirable fabrics other than broadcloth, doeskin and farmers' satin, even for professional men to choose from. It's not so much the color or the cut of the garment that makes it quiet or loud, but the way it is worn.—Tailor in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

An extraordinary story of cannibalism comes from Zanzibar. A love match had been made between a couple of young Swahilis, and on the day following that of the marriage the bridegroom's friends called to offer the customary congratulations. They experienced some difficulty in getting into the hut and at last forced an entrance, when they found that the bride of a day had killed her beloved lord, had already had one feast off his body and was preparing the remainder for future use.

An Elephant's Affection.

Jumbo was so much attached to Scott, his keeper, that the man was forced to be always within reach. Once when a stampede of elephants belonging to the menagerie took place, Jumbo caught him in his trunk, and held him a prisoner between his forefeet until the danger had passed; and just as Jumbo himself was struck by the engine which killed him he seized Scott with his trunk, and pushed him to one side of the track.

Cato, an elephant belonging to a menagerie, was noted for his bad temper. He had killed three keepers and crippled others. One afternoon, as the performance was about to begin, Cato broke loose from the post to which he was chained, and began to tear and smash things. Among the performers was a boy of 11, named Scott. The elephant threw him from his horse, picked him up, held him high in the air, swung him backward and forward, and suddenly put him down, caressed him for a moment, and then went on with his work of destruction.

One of the men, knowing the nature of elephants, threw the driving hook to Scott, shouting: "The beast will mind you!"

The boy picked up the hook, ran to the elephant, who was tearing up the benches, and called him off. Cato obeyed, followed the boy to the post, and allowed himself to be again chained to it.

From that hour the boy had to be the elephant's keeper. So attached was Cato to Scott that the lad had to sleep with the beast, and for three years was never out of his sight for four consecutive hours. He would take food and water from the other men, but if any one but Scott undertook to command him, he would fly into a rage.

While the menagerie was going from place to place Scott was taken sick, and had to be left with a nurse. Cato missed him at once, and it was with difficulty that he was driven to the next town. During the show he was chained by the hind feet, and sulked all the afternoon.

A suit of Scott's clothes was placed before him and he grew calmer; but as soon as the menagerie moved, the beast, not finding Scott beside him, became angry, broke away, upset three wagons, killed a horse and a camel, and then rushed into a piece of woods.

All efforts to control him were futile, and after watching him for several days, during which he destroyed much property and blockaded travel on the highway it was determined to kill him.

As he was very fond of apples a man on horseback rode as near Cato as he dared go, and dropped in the road a basket of apples, several of which were filled with poison. In five minutes the elephant was eating them, and the next morning he was dead and stiff; but not for several weeks did they dare to break the news to the sick boy.—Youth's Companion.

Thieves Aided by Chance Remarks.

A cause of many of the successful robberies by sneak thieves, said a veteran detective recently, is the habit not a few New Yorkers have of unguardedly divulging secrets to chance acquaintances and to friends. "Would you be kind enough to tell me the hour. I've left my watch in my other waistcoat pocket in my room," and various similar remarks are common, particularly on street cars, and sneak thieves are always on the alert to hear such disclosures. They even ride on cars to overhear them. For instance, a man might be riding downtown on a car, and dive into his pocket for his fare, when he would suddenly remember that he left his purse on the dresser in his room, and would apologetically tell his friend so. There might be some thief in the car who, overhearing this, would follow him up, learn his name and address, and then all would be plain sailing. The thief would go to the house and tell whoever came to the door that the man had sent him for the purse which he left on the dresser. The wife, finding the purse in the place described, would be thrown off her guard and in nine cases out of ten would give it to him and pay him besides for taking it. The boldness of the plan allays all suspicion with even the shrewdest housewife.—New York Tribune.

Training of the Parisian Artisan.

In Paris the highest perfection of the building trade is attained. The city, as a building centre, is the queen of the world. Everything is artistic, from the beginning of the building to the last stroke of the painter's brush. Every artisan and mechanic in Paris is an artist. He has every opportunity to develop his taste for the beautiful in art, for on every side he sees everything done with a view to the artistic and the beautiful. For the Frenchman's benefit and education, the state maintains museums, art galleries and gardens which are free to all comers, and the Parisian workman avails himself to the fullest extent of these opportunities. As a consequence he becomes not only a better mechanic, but an artist. American methods of building compare favorably, however, with those adopted in Europe, with the exception, perhaps, that there the solidity of construction is greater, and that pains are taken to carry out the idea of the architect, even in the smallest detail.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Boy Character.

It is the greatest delusion in the world for a boy to get the idea that his life is of no consequence, and that the character of it will not be noticed. A manly, truthful boy will shine like a star in any community. A boy may possess as much of noble character as a man. He may so speak and live the truth that there shall be no discount on his word. And there are such noble, Christian boys, and wider and deeper than they are apt to think is their influence. They are the king boys among their fellows, having an immense influence for good, and loved and respected because of the simple fact of living the truth.—Child's Paper.

THE OLD BAND.

It's mighty good to git back to the old town shore,
Considerin' I've b'en away twenty year and more.
Sence I moved then to Kansas of course I see a change,
A-comin' back and notice things that's new to me and strange,
Especially at evenin', when yer new band fellers meet
In fancy uniforms and all, and play out on the street—
* * * What's come of old Bill Lindsay and the Sax-horn fellers—say?
I want to hear the old band play

What's come of Eastman and Nat Snow, and where's War Barnett at?
And Nate and Bony Meek, Bill Hart, Sam Rich'son and that air brother of him played the drum as twicet as big as Jim?
And old Hi Kerns, the carpenter—say, what's become of him?
I make no doubt yer new band now's a competenter band,
And plays their music more by note than what they play by hand,
And stylisher and grander tunes; but somehow—anyway
I want to hear the old band play

Sich tunes as "John Brown's Body" and "Sweet Alice," don't you know?
And "The Camels is A-comin'," and "John Anderson, My Jo;"
And a dozent others of 'em—"Number Nine" and "Number 'Leven"
Was favorites that fairly made a feller dream o' heaven
And when the boys 'u'd saranade, I've laid so still in bed
I've even heerd the locus' blossoms droppin' on the shed,
When "Lily Dale" er "Hazel Dell" had sobbed and died away—
I want to hear the old band play

The new band maybe beats it, but the old band's what I said—
It allus 'peared to kind o' chord with somepin' in my head;
And, whilse I'm no musicianer, when my blame eyes is jes
Nigh drowned out, and mem'ry squares her jaws and sort o' says
She won't ner never will fergit, I want te jes turn in
And take and light right out o' here and git back west ag'in—
And stay there, when I git there, where I never haf to say—
I want to hear the old band play

Polished Pecan Nuts.

Salesman at a fancy grocery store—Will you have the pecans with the hulls polished or just the plain, common every day pecan? No difference in the meat. The difference is in the polishing of the hulls and the price. You pay two cents extra on the pound for the polished hull. Why? Because it is a fad. That's all. Some folks like to have the polished pecans on the table because they look nice. How are they polished? Well, that is a Chicago trick. There is a place in this town that does nothing but polish nuts. A huge cylinder, operating on the same principal as the peanut roaster you see on the streets is put in motion. It contains a few pounds of brick dust. The nuts are put in the cylinder, and it gives a few revolutions. The dust gives the hull of the nuts the bright brown, polished appearance you see in these pecans. Some folks come in and ask where pecans come from. They come from the south, generally, but as good pecans grow right here in Illinois, near Alton, as in any other portion of the world.—Chicago Tribune.

Expensive Decorations.

The Buddhists in Burmah do not consider the question of expense in beautifying their temples. Here is a description of the new vane of the pagoda at Rangoon: The vane is about three by one and a half feet broad, and thickly crested with precious stones and lovely fans of the red Burmese gold. One ruby alone is worth 6,000 rupees, and there are several hundred rubies alone on this beautiful thing. On the tip of the iron rod on which works the vane is a richly carved and perforated gold ornament called the Semboo. It is somewhat egg shaped and a foot in height, tipped by an enormous diamond encircled by many smaller ones, crusted on like barnacles. All over this exquisite oval object are similar clumps of diamonds, no other stones being used for this part. Chicago Times.

The majority of sailors on the Atlantic ocean religiously believe that the frigate bird can start at daybreak with the trade winds from the coast of Africa and roost the same night upon the American coast. Ornithologists say that under favorable conditions the frigate bird will make 200 miles an hour.—St. Louis Republic.

PRELIMINARY WORLD'S FAIR EXHIBIT OF CALIFORNIA.

It has always been the unfortunate experience that when exhibits from California have been sent to the different World's Fairs heretofore, the people of the State have had no opportunity of inspecting the display. The California World's Fair Commission, who have been appointed to make the exhibit from this State at the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago next year, have decided to hold in San Francisco, as the center of population in the State, a "Preliminary World's Fair Exhibit of California." Thus our people who do not have an opportunity of going to Chicago can avail themselves of the chance of seeing what California will display by simply visiting San Francisco at a time when the ordinary labors of the country will not interfere with such a visit. This collection, which will be a complete exhibition in itself, and from all indications will be the most interesting exhibition which has ever been held in the State, will do much to inform the inhabitants of different sections regarding the resources and development of all parts of the State. It will be thus a great educational feature for our own people. As this exhibition will be held during the time the Legisiature is in session, and will of course be visited by the members of that body, it will give our law-makers an opportunity of thoroughly informing themselves in regard to the requirements of the different districts for which they will be called upon to legislate. This exhibition will thus materially benefit many sections and industries that desire to secure recognition.

Mr. Charles B. Turrill, who has been selected to manage this display, is in correspondence with a large number of exhibitors in different parts of California, and is at all times ready and willing to give any information or assistance in his power, to those who contemplate making displays for the World's Fair, in Chicago. These exhibitors, by first making a display at this Preliminary Exhibition, will have the benefit which always follows the first "setting up" of an exhibit, so that when they place their displays in the California building or in the different department buildings at Chicago, everything will be in perfect shape and complete in all details.

Very favorable arrangements have been made in regard to freights. The premium list, which is now being prepared, will have the effect of calling out a great variety of exhibits which are seldom displayed, but which are of great value to the State.

STARED AT BY THE DEAD.

A TWO DAYS' VIGIL KEPT BY A CORPSE.

Alone, Unattended, Desolate—An Experience Possible to So Many Others.

[New York Recorder.]

Early one morning recently the guards on the elevated road in New York noticed a middle-aged man apparently kneeling beside an open window. Although it was a raw and cold morning, his head was uncovered. His eyes seemed to be staring intently across the street. All day long, as the trains thundered past, the man seemed still to be watching, and even when night came on a glimpse of a white face could be seen staring out into the darkness. The next morning the guards were all on the lookout, and still the man could be seen with his chin resting on the back of his hand

Coroner Donlin, who chanced to be looking out of the car-window during the day, saw at once, that it was no common face that glared at him. He left the train, went to the house and there found kneeling by the window the stiffened corpse of a man. For two days he had kept the vigil of the dead. Awakening in the night, alone and oppressed, he had struggled to the window, and, gasping for breath, died. The Coroner's explanation revealed the fact that death had been caused by Bright's disease of the kidneys, which came unannounced, sudden and sure.

Sad? Yes, but how common have these sudden deaths become. They give no warning. There is a quick pain, a struggle, and all is over. Statistics show that 90 per cent. of these sudden deaths are caused by kidney disease. Slowly but surely these great organs have been decomposing, and when the climax comes it comes without warning. But there were warnings. The strange pains, peculiar sensations and unaccountable feelings were nature's warnings. They may have been considered only the symptoms of a cold, but all the while disease was working and death surely approaching.

Can nothing be done? Yes, exercise, care. Act promptly. Use something to sustain the kidneys. Do, as so many prominent physicians are advising their patients to do, take Warner's Safe Cure. It this great preparation which has saved so many men and women from death by Bright's disease were not a well-known household remedy and the most popular in America, we might hesitate to so warmly indorse it, but being the only absolute specific for this great modern disease, it is commended most unhesitatingly. This entire page could be filled with statements from prominent physicians in both Europe and America of what the Safe Cure has done to lessen Bright's disease, prevent female complaints, and check the great physical evils of a modern life. It is no ordinary medicine, but a scientific discovery which has received more commendations than any other discovery of the present century. The well-known Dr. James D. Bragg says: "Warner's Safe Cure has proved the best medicine for humanity yet devised."

When the uncertainty of life is remembered; when the certainty of disaster where care is not exercised is realized, the importance of the above truths should come home solemnly to all.

Dyes Made from Coal Tar.

There are hundreds of shades now made which are obtained from coal tar. When coal is heated in the manufacture of gas, benzine is one of the substances produced. From this an oily colorless fluid, called aniline, is made, and it forms the base of numerous dyes. These dyes are obtained by the oxidation of aniline, by means of nitric acid, arsenic and other agents. The colors produced include every shade and tint, except black. The so called aniline blacks are usually very intense blues or greens.

Aniline dyes are noted for their great coloring power; one part of rosaniline salt in a million parts of water still possessing a deep crimson color and instantly dyeing a skein of silk moistened with vinegar. The dyes are used for many purposes: Coloring toys, sweetmeats, wines, dress fabrics and other articles. The fugitive nature of some of them is rather a drawback. Germany is now the headquarters of the manufacture of these dyes. Large quantities are produced and used in this country also.—Brooklyn Eagle.

A Corean Superstition.

The Coreans are extremely fond of animals, and tell endless stories about them. Once upon a time, a courtly lady fell in love with one of the palace officials, a man named Kim. The intrigue was discovered, and she was put to death. But her spirit became an oriole, and this is why to this day the bird is always singing "Kim-pul-lah-go, Kim-pogo-sip-so," which means, "Call Kim; I want to see Kim." And Corean women and children always feel sad when they hear the oriole's plaintive note.—Montreal Star.

DEAD SEA FRUITS.

They slay multitudes when they are the product of neglect of incipient disease. A "slight" cold, a fit of indigestion, biliousness or constipation each or any of these "minor ailments" advance in many cases with "league-destroying strides." Give them a swift, early defeat with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters and avert the danger. Abernethy administered an alarming rebuke to the man who informed him that he had "only a cold!" "Only a cold," repeated the doctor. "What would ye have—the plague?" Rheumatism and la grippe are easily extinguishable at the start. Why then allow them to get up a full head of steam? Put on the brakes with the Bitters. The genial warmth which this superb medicine diffuses through the system, the impetus it gives to the circulation of the blood, its soothing and strengthening effect upon the nervous, specially recommend it to the enfeebled and sick. 'Tis the great specific for malaria.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. A DESPOT'S RULE.

Difficulties That Handicap the Man of Business in Turkey.

COMMERCIAL BANKING UNKNOWN.

The Sultan Reigns Supreme.—Despotism Prevents the Development of the Country's Resources.

"The American way of transacting every day business affairs and that in vogue within the realms of the territory ruled by the sultan of Turkey are as vastly different as the antipodes," said Siragan S. Costikyan, of Costikyan Freres, Constantinople, Turkey, who was at the Midland yesterday. Mr. Costikyan resumed: "In Turkey there are no banks as there are here. Each merchant is his own banker and whatever wealth he may possess is kept stowed away in the safe in his private office. The banking system is unknown. True, there are banks owned by the government, but Turkey is a despotism and should a merchant deposit his money in the sultan's bank he might awake some morning to find the bank closed and his money gone—where, you are not allowed to ask—because the sultan rules and the sultan accounts to no one for his actions, not even to the ruler of the universe. So it is that the merchant of Constantinople when he owes you money does not give you a check upon a bank. He takes you into his private office and pays in cash what amount may be due you. And, too, when the merchant gives a ninety days' note he pays you in cash taken out of his private safe.

"In the sultan's dominions there is no opportunity offered for the investment of capital or the development of the country's material resources. Turkey is rich in mineral wealth, but the sway of the despot allows no corporation or private individual to develop mines. The government allows you to develop a mine by it taking 90 per cent. of the profit. As a true subject of the sultan you are expected to be perfectly happy with the remaining 10 per cent. and you are further expected to return thanks to Allah for the honor of living under such a sovereign. In addition to this, your property is subject to confiscation, and should the mine you are working develop unexpected richness the government is very likely to relieve you of it, leaving you to stand the loss of whatever you may have invested. It is this system of government which has kept that country in the same rut for thousands of years and which is slowly reducing the people to poverty.

"The general stagnation in business circles pervades the real estate market and in this, too, is felt the withering influence of the despotic reign. Real estate can be bought for comparatively nothing. For $250 you may buy a splendid piece of property right in the heart of the city of Constantinople. Merchants are afraid to buy. Business men do not care to invest and real estate is comparatively worthless. One asks, why this state of affairs? But the answer is very simple. It is again the curse of the sultan's reign. You may have owned property for years. It may have descended to you, when, should you offend the government, the government records will be opened and you will be informed that the property belongs to some mosque. You must get out, and at once. No compensation is given you. Why? Does not the sultan rule?

"The subjects of the sultan are of course mostly Turks. He has, since the last war with Russia, about thirty million Turks, eight million Armenians, four million Greeks and two million Jews. The religions are divided in the proportion of the different races. A Turk is always a believer in Mahomet, the Armenians and Greeks are Christians, while the Jew is always a Jew. Of these different classes the Armenians and the Jews are the business races. The Turk is a soldier. He was born that way. He can't get down to the details of money making. It is a part of his religion to rob a Christian or a Jew, and he does not comprehend the principles of right and wrong. With these natural disadvantages the Turk is outstripped and the bulk of the wealth is rapidly passing into the hands of the Christian and the Jew. It will be so until the government is changed."—Kansas City Times.

A Lost Art Rediscovered.

Considerable progress seems to have been made of late in the manufacture of tough glass, most of the difficulties with the new discovery having been overcome. Recent developments at Pompeii have caused many to think it not a new discovery at all, but a rediscovery of an old art. Be this as it may, the process of manufacture has been made very simple, so much so as to make it possible to combine the operation with ordinary glass blowing. The new process admits of more perfect execution, and gives more regular forms besides diminishing expenses in a marked degree. Objects made of the liquid material in the usual way are, while at red heat, thrown directly into the tempering bath. Bottles, drinking glasses, lamp chimneys and other concave products of the art containing air are received on a curved tube, a kind of siphon, which at the moment of immersion allows the air to escape, the liquid entering the cavity. The air escape is believed to be the whole secret of the process; the inventor says otherwise.—St. Louis Republic.

Emile Zola's Working Hours.

Emile Zola's habits are extremely regular. He takes a walk every morning, usually leaving his house, whether at Medan or at Paris, about 9 o'clock. He lunches at midday, and writes from 1 o'clock till 6, receiving no visitors and transacting no business in the afternoon. He has a particular liking for large and massive pieces of furniture, so his writing table and his library chairs are of colossal proportions, as is also his inkstand, which is in bronze and represents a lion.—Paris Cor. Philadelphia Telegraph.

Ill Fitting Clothes Made Him.

A group of well dressed and prosperous looking business men sat about a table in a famous downtown restaurant after luncheon a few days ago, chatting on all sorts of topics and watching the smoke rings from their cigars float up to the frescoed ceiling.

The conversation drifted after a time into tales of business success, and the eldest and most imposing member of the party did his part by telling this story:

"I owe my present prosperity," he began, "to the fact that when I was a lanky youth of 17 my clothes did not fit me. To be more explicit, I was at that age in dreadfully hard luck. My people were dead, I hadn't a friend that I could turn to, I was able to make but $6 a week, and was half starved in consequence, and my one suit (a Cheap John rig) had shrunk until the lower edge of my vest and the band of my trousers were absolutely divorced.

"One Sunday morning in December I was trudging along Sixth avenue, principally because my room was even more comfortless than the streets, and I remember how I was railing and repining at everything and everybody. I was passionately fond of music, and I went into the first church I came to, attracted solely, I must confess, by the thought of the warmth and harmony I would find.

"I was too bashful then to sit still while the rest of the congregation stood, so I got up every time they did, and as my vest and trousers were, as I told you before, not on speaking terms, I was forced to lean forward in a most reverential manner to hide my zone of shirt front. As I turned to go out at the end of the service an old gentleman behind me slipped a card into my hand and said: 'I like to see reverence in a young man. You look as if you were having a hard time of it. Come and see me to-morrow. I may help you.'

"I went and got a good berth in his employ, and from that I worked myself to comparative wealth. Queer, isn't it?"—New York Times.

A Hotel Experience.

One day last week a guest at one of the best hotels—it is perhaps just as well not to be more exact—was awakened at an unearthly hour in the morning by a loud pounding on his door.

"Who's there?" he asked. That is not just the way he put the question, but that was its general effect.

"Wake up!" answered a voice. "It's 5 o'clock, and your train goes in forty minutes.

"It doesn't. I'm not going on any train. Go away and leave me alone!" This isn't exactly the language he used. As a matter of fact, it doesn't come within gunshot of it. But reduced to Sunday school English that is the meaning he intended to convey.

"Come along, now; come along," continued the voice. "Hustle or you'll get left. They all swear just so when they're sleepy."

"Get away from that door, young fellow, or I,ll break your neck," said the guest.

"I guess your wakin' up now," said the voice, cheerily. "Hurry up, or you'll miss your 'bus; she goes in half an hour."

With that the voice departed. Its victim communed vividly and picturesquely with himself until he dropped off to sleep. He had no more than fairly entered the land of Nod before the voice was back again.

"Hi, there? Ain't you up yet? Hump yerself now or you'll miss the train."

It wouldn't do even to hint at the wording of the reply. Suffice it to say that it was so earnest, so forcible, so circumstantial that even the bell boy was convinced that he had made a mistake. Again the voice departed, and again the guest dropped off to sleep.

Bang! bang! bang! It was the bell boy pounding on the door again. The language of the guest was quite shocking to hear.

"You needn't get mad," said the voice, pleasantly. "I ain't callin' you this time. I just come back to tell you you don't want no train, after all. It's the feller across the hall."—Columbus Sunday News.

Jabber of the Case.

"Hello!" said the quad, as the compo threw him in; "you're a hard looking case, did you know it?"

"No wonder," grunted the case; "I've been on the rack so long."

"You seem to be out of form, too," remarked a thin space, from its box.

"What if I am? Lead me alone!" snarled the quad.

"You're getting saucy," put in a hyphen, as it came along. "Thinking of the galley left behind him, I suppose!" at which the other types giggled.

"I'll be dashed!" cried the unlucky quad. "If you'd been locked up as long as I have"——

"I was just going to ask quad the matter was," inquired the period. "I thought perhaps you needed quoin."

"Stop!" said the exasperated quad. I've comma long way and I won't be insulted this way."

Things began to look squally, when the compositor shook up the case and made them all behave.—Lawrence American.

Unfortunate Marston.

The late Westland Marston is said to have been about the most unfortunate man of letters that ever lived in England. Misfortune pursued him throughout his life. He wrote poetry that was above the public, and prose that was too good for them. His plays were persistent failures. Endowed with great gifts and abilities he was hardly able to earn a poor living. In his domestic life he suffered bereavement after bereavement. His wife, his children, his grandchildren and his son-in-law successively died, leaving him solitary, the last of his unhappy race. He bore his afflictions with patience, but accepted death as a happy release. Who, under similar circumstances, would not?—Pittsburg Bulletin.

COAL OIL JOHNNY.

Most Eccentric of All Men Who Got Rich Quickly in the Oil Regions.

HOW HE SQUANDERED A FORTUNE.

Lighting Cigars and Decorating His Clothes With Greenbacks.—Fleeced by Sharpers.

The wealth of Mr. Steele, better known as "Coal Oil Johnny," has undoubtedly been overrated—that is to say, his wealth in cash. At the time the Pittsburg sanitary commission made an offer to donate a soldier's monument to the county making the largest contribution, the producers of this section agreed to set aside for that purpose the proceeds from their wells for one day. Mr. Steele's contribution for that day was $2,500, which was a fair gauge of what his wells were doing.

The farm and the conjunctive interests bequeathed to him by his grandmother he probably could have disposed of for $500,000 or more when the same came into his possession, but it is doubtful if at any time he possessed more than $100,000 in cash.

His expensive eccentricities were many, but did not include, as often reported, the purchasing and giving away of a hotel in Philadelphia. The story probably grew out of the fact that while in Philadelphia at one time he experienced some difficulty in securing a hack and finally bought one outright; that when he got through with the rig the driver asked him what to do with it and he told him to keep it. It was on that trip to Philadelphia that he, while with Slocum, the fellow who was "showing him the world," attracted so much attention by going about with bills of various denominations tied in the buttonholes of his clothing—by making small purchases with good sized bills, taking no change back, and even lighting cigars with his money.

Another of his eccentricities on that trip was the forming of a negro minstrel troop at random, for each of the members of which he bought a suit of clothes when he engaged him. He brought his troop here, and that was about all he did with it.

The details of his doings in Philadelphia, New York, Saratoga and elsewhere, including his experiences with sharpers, notably his $10,000 acquaintance with John Morrissey, have been written threadbare. Summed up briefly the main points in his life are these: When quite young he became an orphan and was adopted by his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. William McClintock. He was married two or three years before he became of age and worked at farm work until the oil excitement began. He then engaged in hauling oil down Oil creek and hauling coal back with a pair of old plugs. The result was the possession of a good team of his own. The McClintock farm became one of the most valuable along Oil creek. Mrs. McClintock survived her husband several years, and when she died, in 1865, the adopted son, Steele, became the sole heir to her property.

He soon concluded to see some of the world with his wealth, and he saw it. He sought notoriety and he got it. He spent his money like a man with Monte Cristo backing—was bled by leeches, fleeced by sharpers and in a few years, his oil interests in the meantime rapidly depreciating in value, he found himself again a poor man. But no one ever heard him express particular regret over the return he received for his money.

At one time when he was highest in his eccentric extravagances Captain J. J. Vandergrift, T. H. Williams and others sent for him and kindly expostulated with him on the point that he ought to save some of his money. He thanked them for their friendly advice, but said that he had made a living by hauling oil and could do it again if necessary. He couldn't rest until he had spent that fortune. Ultimately he got the required rest.

A cousin of Mr. Steele maintains that the estimates which have been put upon Steele's wealth have not, as a general thing, been exaggerated. He says that he personally knows that when Mrs. McClintock died Steele inherited $125,000 in gold and about $100,000 in other money. The income from his wells then was from $1,000 to $2,000 a day. The cousin says that from his knowledge of Steele's affairs he should say that at one time "Coal Oil Johnny" could have produced $1,000,000 in cash.

Mistaken Identity.

A Texas man is the owner of a very fine imported Kentucky jack, and stockmen are continually calling to see it. One day he happened to be up stairs when a friend called to see the animal. His little son called:

"Father, come down, a gentleman wants to see you."

"What did you say, my son?" shouted the father.

"I said, 'come down'—a gentleman wants to see our big donkey."—Texas Siftings.

One Way of Making Vinegar.

You can make your own white wine vinegar by adding five gallons of rain water to ten pounds of mashed raisins and letting the mixture stand in a warm place for a month.—Good Housekeeping.

THE SEWER YIELDS ITS TREASURES.

Workmen Find a Number of Coins and Other Valuable Articles in a Drain.

A party of sewer cleaners of the department of public works struck a bonanza last week in the sewer drift and sediment of a sewer in West Fifteenth street. An examination showed that there was a layer of sediment nearly a foot deep on the bottom of the drain, and indicated that the sewer had not been cleaned out for years and probably not since the war.

The sewer is about fifteen feet under the center of the street. It has a diameter of nearly five feet, and manholes are placed at every few hundred feet. The brickwork was found to be solid and in excellent condition, but the air in the drain was so bad that the manhole covers had to be left open for several hours before a workman could venture to enter them. In some parts, he said, the air was so bad that even the sewer rats could not live in it, but in other sections of the sewer they were found in droves. A party of six men, under the direction of a foreman, began the work of cleaning the drain early last week.

Two of the men were lowered into adjoining manholes and worked through the sewer toward each other, removing the sediment in buckets until they met. The buckets when filled were drawn up by the men at the manholes and emptied on the street to await removal. The first bucketful showed a mass of black sand and coarse gravel, which looked like coal. When the first bucketful was emptied into the street the workmen uttered an exclamation, and one of them began to spread out the contents with his shovel, while the other carefully examined the black mass, picking up every foreign object that appeared in the gravel. Even the foreman became interested when, on poking through the stuff with a stick, he fished out a part of a brass, copper or gold watch chain.

A group of spectators gathered around the manhole to watch the operations, but the workmen would not allow any one else to delve in the sediment. A great number of bits of old brass keys were scattered through every bucketful of the stuff, with other bits of metal. But those received little attention from the workmen, who searched for bits of jewelry and for coins. The number of pieces of money was remarkable. Every turn of the shovel as the bucket was emptied would show up an old copper cent, or some other coin, which the workmen seemed to detect at a glance. As fast as they were picked up the articles were handed over to one man, who placed them in a bag which he carried. Occasionally a ring or a bracelet or a piece of one or the other was found, and when a special coin which looked like gold or silver was turned up the foreman examined it himself before handing it over to the bag.

"Yes," he remarked rather reluctantly, "a good many pennies find their way into the sewers with rubbish, and they sink to the bottom and are not carried far. The men in their work always find a few dollars' worth of stuff, which they divide equally. Most of the articles are washed in from the gutters, but some come from the houses. I have known watches to be found, but they don't amount to much after their stay in this filth. There are some pieces of bone in that load, you see. You can't tell what they may have come from. Everything soft rots, you see, or the rats eat it, so we don't find many pocketbooks. This sewer hasn't been cleaned out for so long that there are a good many pennies in it, but it takes a good many of them to count for much."

The man with a bag had a good sized load to carry at the close of his day's work. No attention was paid to the old brass keys, but the carts that removed the sediment were followed closely to the "dump" by several Italian ragpickers who hovered around the scene of operations. There were rumors of some good finds by the workmen, but they declared that the contents of the bag are not worth more than a few dollars.—New York Tribune.

A Light Without Matches.

To obtain a light instantly without the use of matches, and without the danger of setting things on fire, is an easy matter. Take an oblong vial of the clearest of glass, put into it a piece of phosphorous about the size of a pea; upon this pour some pure olive oil heated to the boiling point, the bottle to be filled about one-third full; then cork tightly. To use the light, remove the cork, allow the air to enter, and then recork. The whole empty space in the bottle will then become luminous, and the light obtained will be a good one. As soon as the light becomes dim, its power can be increased by opening the bottle and allowing a fresh supply of air to enter. In very cold weather it is sometimes necessary to heat the vial between the hands to increase the fluidity of the oil, and one bottle will last all winter. This ingenious contrivance may be carried in the pocket, and is used by the watchmen of Paris in all magazines where explosive or inflammable materials are stored.—Chicago Ledger.

The Little Dog Told the Big One.

My two boys had each a dog. One of them was a bright, affectionate, long haired and long eared retriever named Hector. The other was a big mastiff named Tecumseh. One day a carriage with a dog under it was passing the house when the strange dog—a large one—seeing little Hector in the street, pitched into him in the most savage manner. In vain poor Hector cried and begged for mercy; his assailant had no compassion. As soon as Hector could escape he ran at the top of his speed into the back yard of the house, where Tecumseh happened to be, and rushing up to him put his nose to that of his big friend. Instantly both were running madly after the carriage with the dog under it. They both attacked him in the most ferocious manner, not leaving him until the punishment was thought to be sufficient, when side by side they trotted home.—Portland Argus.

THE STAMP CLERK

His Trials and Tribulations in a Metropolitan Postoffice.

QUEER ORDERS HE HAS O FILL.

The Hair-raising Experience of One of Uncle Sam's New Employees.—Lightning Calculations.

"I should think you have a pretty easy time in here."

"Well, pretty easy."

"You don't have much to do. Just stand at the window, count out stamps and take in the money."

"That's all, save the little item of making correct change every time."

"Oh, of course. But that isn't much."

"No, not much, though sometimes half a dozen people, all in a hurry, want stamps at the same moment."

"Yes, to be sure. You must be busy at times, say early in the day, or at Christmas and Easter. But most people could do the work with a little practice."

"Yes, practice is a great thing, but I've been a stamp clerk for ten years, and yet yesterday I made a mistake in counting out a small number of one cent stamps. Still, practice is a great thing."

"Well, I should like to have your place, that's all. It can't be very hard to sell postage stamps."

"I wish you had it, as you think it is so easy. But, should you try it a day, you might think differently."

This conversation between two acquaintances occurred in a city postoffice some time ago. The change which brought about a new administration removed the old postoffice clerk and installed another man in his place.

The new clerk entered upon his duties with a feeling that selling stamps was a diversion suited to his genial temperament. He hadn't been at the window an hour before he was a sadder and a wiser man.

A woman came up and wanted thirteen cents' worth of twos and ones, half and half, seven postal cards and a package of two cent wrappers. She had nothing smaller than a $5 bill.

When the clerk had recovered from the temporary slow fever into which this episode threw him there was a crowd waiting outside, and all he could hear was:

"Twenty-five cents' worth of twos, please." "Package postal cards." "Dollar's worth stamps, quick." "How much'll that take? Goin' to Canady." "Nuff stamps on that, hey?" "Gimme two twos and three ones, will you? I am in a hurry."

The young man nervously counted out stamps, weighed packages, consulted the printed shcedule for rates in foreign countries and perspired freely. Cold chills ran down his back, for he had a vague idea of giving somebody seventy-five cents' worth of stamps for fifty cents, and of selling a package of postal cards for half price.

The crowd at the window did not diminish, but grew.

A man finally came up in a great hurry and threw down a handful of loose silver and nickels and coppers and asked for—

"Twenty-seven ones, sixteen cents' worth of twos, two and a half packages of postal cards, and the rest in twos and one cent wrappers."

The new clerk choked down a big word or two, mopped his brow nervously with a sheet of stamps, and began counting out a package of stamped envelopes, government official size.

"How many did you say?"

"How many what?"

"Envelopes."

"Envelopes? I don't want any envelopes. Twenty-seven ones, sixteen cents' worth of twos, two and one-half packages of postal cards and the rest in twos and one cent wrappers. That's what I want and in a big hurry, too. Got to catch a train."

"Sixteen cents' worth of twos?"

"Yes, I said so."

"Oh, well, all—all right! There you are. And—and how many ones?"

"Twenty-seven. Come, hurry up."

"Twenty-seven; twenty-seven. Five times five is twenty-five and two is seven—twenty-seven. Twenty-seven. And now, the rest in envelopes, did you say?"

"Envelopes? I don't want any envelopes. One cent wrappers is what I want."

"How many?"

"How many? Well, give me just one. Perhaps you can count that out straight" (sarcastically).

"A one cent wrapper is two cents."

"All right! I can stand it if you can."

"How many packages of postal cards?"

"Never mind. I can't wait here all day. Besides, there's a crowd out here stretching way around the corner. Just give me my change and I'll get out of here."

When the clerk had recovered from the syncope into which this little transaction had cast him, he spied his old acquaintance, the former stamp clerk, at the window.

"Ah, you seem to be having a pleasant time in here. Please let me have $2 worth of twos and sixes, $1 worth of each. And just weigh that little bundle. Going to Honduras. Needs two more stamps, I think. Should think you would have a good time in here. Not much to do but to stand up and sell stamps and give back the right change, hey? You must enjoy your place here. Of course, it will be a little busy early in the morning or at Christmas or Easter times. Most people could do it with a little practice."—United States Mail.

JUVENILE ATTENDANT CAVALIERS.

A Mighty Useful Being for the Fashionable Married Woman.

Among the products of modern society there is none more remarkable than the juvenile attendant cavalier. A dozen rich and highly respectable New York matrons now provide themselves each with what she is pleased to call "a useful boy," and, to do her justice, it must be acknowledge that she compels the young man to earn his qualifications. Mrs. Grundy has accepted him, and the husband heeds him not. Indeed, he is rather regarded by that individual in the light of an understudy, as he relieves monsieur of many of the social duties which would otherwise interfere with his own engagements, whether of business or of pleasure. There was a time when a married lady of personal attractions would scarcely have ventured to go about anywhere with a good looking young man who was not her husband.

Nowadays we look for the harmless, necessary "tame cat." The fashionable matron takes much pride in the appearance of her cavalier, and to qualify for the position he must in a measure be ornamental as well as useful Furthermore, he must in no wise be awkward. He must be able to put a cloak around madam's shoulders as well as her maid, and to adjust her opera hood without ruffling her hair. It being part of his duties, too, to attend to her fans, bouquets, opera glasses, programmes, dogs and all such impedimenta, it is necessary that he should not indulge in the old fashioned occupation of wool gathering, while on no account must he permit himself to cherish the usual masculine aversion to "shopping," for when he is not dispatched alone to execute my lady's orders, which may range from a box at the opera to a box of pearl powder, he is required to be in attendance when she makes the round of dry goods emporiums,

To the onlooker the value of his presence on these occasions appears limited, for it seems that he does nothing but balance himself on the edge of chairs, adjust his tie in every available mirror, and occasionally make mildly facetious and frequently impertinent comments on the goods. At the restaurants he secures luncheon, and being well drilled in madam's likes and dislikes he thus saves her the trouble of choosing her own fare, and the infliction of getting what she detests.

He is useful, too, in finding the carriage after the theatre or afternoon party, and added to all these serviceable if not exactly intellectual qualities are the advantages that he can be snubbed at will; that he never dare grumble like husbands; and that he never bores with the wearisome attention of older men. To what end do these perfumed dandyettes run errands and act as footmen if not to play at being gay Lotharios? Their reward is that they get taken everywhere, and everybody has to treat them with some degree of civility. Then there are in the train of a pretty, or at least, of a popular woman, a distinction which all youths envy. They live on the metaphorical milk and honey of the land, they bask in luxury, and revel in all the best entertainments, pick up "good tips," and eventually, if they are smart, secure a rich bride. —New York Letter.

Recreation on the Deep.

A large brick was heated to a red heat in the galley fire and a piece of asbestos packing was wrapped around it as quickly as possible. The brick with its covering was incased in a piece of pork that was tossed overboard, along with several other morsels which the sharks were made ready to devour, and it had no sooner touched the water than it was swallowed. It took a few minutes for the heat to come through its covering of asbestos and pork, and during those few minutes the shark swam among his companions and attracted no special attention. But very soon his movements showed the pain he was feeling; he darted violently about, sprang out of the water, dived, rose again and was evidently suffering intensely. This continued for perhaps half an hour, and ended with the creature turning on his back and dying in the most horrible contortions. The other sharks showed their tender feelings by attacking him before he was fairly dead; they had no compunctions about eating him, or at any rate displayed none, for he was devoured before our eyes, to the great delight of the sailors.—Thomas W. Knox.

A Plucky Little Fellow.

A little boy, only 8 years old, the son of a laborer named Malbarxy, living at Francesdnest, was sent by his mother to fetch a loaf from the baker's on the opposite side of the railway. On his return, when passing a level crossing near the Farretimes station, he saw a train approaching, and in his hurry stumbled and fell. He nevertheless had the presence of mind to fall into the space between the rails and the sleepers. Unhappily, the clearing iron caught his blouse and dragged him along till the train stopped at the station; the wheels had meanwhile passed over one of his arms and cut it nearly off. When he was set free, looking at his mangled arm, he said: "Pray do not tell mother," and he asked the bystanders to fetch his loaf. It was found necessary to cut off the arm, and though the chloroform did not make him insensible, he bore the operation with the utmost courage, and only asked once or twice if the surgeons would soon have done. His arm soon healed, and the little fellow returned to school as gay and as cheerful as his companions.—Montreal Star.

Cinnamon is the bark of a tree, and is grown most largely in Java and Ceylon. Only the young branches are stripped for the cinnamon bark, but very small branches are not peeled. The bark is removed in strips and scraped on both sides, and afterward sun dried, when it is ready for commerce.

A METROPOLITAN WILDCAT.

A City Woman's Remarkable Experience with a Strange Pussy.

A New York woman had an experience a few nights ago which she will not soon forget—one which, considering her environment, was very surprising. Her home is a ground apartment, occupying two floors, however, in one of the high class apartment houses in Fifty-ninth street overlooking the park. The library is on the second floor, and in this room she was seated one night when a peculiar noise from the family parrot, who was in his cage in an opposite room, attracted her attention.

Thinking the bird was merely restless and wanted his cage covered, she picked up a soft woolen couch cover and started across the hall. At the threshold of the second room she saw crouching on the top of the parrot's cage a gray cat, which had succeeded by his weight and clawing in inclining the cage almost to the tipping angle, poor Poll meanwhile traveling up and down the upper side in a frenzy of fright. The unequal struggle could not have lasted many seconds longer, and, urged by the crisis, though really alarmed at the unusual size and fierce appearance of the cat, Poll's mistress advanced into the room shaking the couch cover and attempting, after the manner of women, to "shoo" the cat away.

She had half crossed the apartment when the animal made a spring at her, and but for her quick movement in covering her head with the couch cover which she held her face would have received the brunt of the attack. As it was, the cat clawed violently for an instant at the mass of woolly material in which he was enmeshed; then, aided by the desperate push which the now terrified woman gave him, leaped to the floor and dashed into the library.

Mrs. —— recovered her senses and closed the door between herself and the cat, then violently rang the bell for assistance. The maids responded and, after carrying Poll to a place of safety in a remote room, an attempt was made to dislodge the cat from the library. At sight of her pursuers the creature began to rush about, jumping through a brass screen with force enough to break it, knocking over bric-a-brac and loose books, and ending by scaling the window casing as if it were a tree and running out on the bare curtain pole. From this high perch he glared down at those beneath him until Mr. ——'s arrival shortly afterward. He was then prodded down and leaped through a window opened for him to the pavement below, darting off to the park as soon as he reached the ground.

Policemen and others familiar with Central park say that stray city cats often find homes in its sequestered nooks, growing wild and raising progeny that become almost as fierce and terrible as a genuine wildcat. In this instance the animal was doubtless driven from its haunts by hunger, and, getting in on the ground floor, was attracted up stairs to the parrot's cage by the scent of the bird and its food.—Her Point of View in New York Times.

Curiosities of Superstition.

When Egypt was in the height of her power, when she was most highly civilized and delighted in being called the "mistress of the land and sea," her people worshiped a black bull. There was some discrimination, however, even in this form of worship. In order to be an object of mad adoration it was necessary that the bull calf be born with a circular white spot in the exact center of his forehead, and the advent of such a creature in any herd was the signal of wild demonstrations from the Mediterranean to the border of the Lybian desert. Even as late as the time of Cleopatra, "star eyed goddess, glorious sorceress of the Nile," such animals were shod with gold and had their horns tipped with the same metal. Herodotus tells of a man who died with grief because he sold a cow that soon after became the mother of a black bull calf marked with the sacred white circle in his forehead.—St. Louis Republic.

Preliminary to the Baptism.

When Bishop Goe, of Melbourne, was a curate a famous pugilist in the parish, who went by the name of Jim the Slogger and who had never darkened a church door, called at the parsonage asking him to baptize the baby. Accordingly the bishop repaired to Jim's house, but was surprised on being admitted to see Jim lock the door and pocket the key. "Be you the parson come to sprinkle my kid?" he asked. On the bishop assenting, he continued, "Yer can't sprinkle that kid till you and me has had a fight, parson."

The unfortunate parson protested, but finding protest useless "stood up" to Jim. The battle went for the bishop, and Jim, pulling himself from the floor, muttered, "He's the parson for me." The baptism was proceeded with and, as the story goes, Jim took to church going from that day.—Pall Mall Gazette.

At a Feast.

There is a new shape for the dinner table—a triangle. The host is seated in the middle of the shortest side and the hostess at the meeting of the two longer ones. This arrangement brings the entertainers and the entertained nearer together than at the ordinary square or round tables. A single cloth is not used on these triangular tables, but rather narrow scarfs of heavy open work. Between the scarf and the center piece the space is filled with bonbon and salted almond dishes.—Food.

A Gas Burning Grate.

In a house stove introduced in England the grate is swung on trunnions and can be reversed. After fresh coal has been added at the top the reversal is made, and the green coal is thus brought to the bottom in an easy manner. By this means the gases from the coal, passing upward through the red portion of the fire, previously at the bottom, are almost entirely consumed before reaching the chimney.—New York Journal.

When the Indians Were Paid.

Farmington presented a gala appearance Monday after the bank officials had cashed checks of the Indians to the amount of $200,000. Every hitching post was surrounded by ponies. Those already possessing vehicles drove directly to the livery stables. Much curiosity was felt as to how the Indians would spend their gold. Their first purchases were made at the fruit and confectionery stores. One squaw quietly bought a generous allowance of candy, fruits, nuts, crackers and fifty cents' worth of chewing gum. Every Indian, large and small, was soon seen eating or carrying oranges. In a short time many of the men had bought and donned new suits of clothes. They exhibited a marked preference in these selections for navy blue. The squaws meanwhile were fast reducing the merchants' stocks of blankets, calicoes, etc.

By noon the agricultural implement houses had sold every style of vehicle in their possession, and one merchant had orders enough for a carload of spring wagons or "hacks." Harness men soon found their stocks nearly cleaned out by the Indians. Several of them paid high prices for horses in the morning, and during the afternoon many farmers brought horses to town, which they disposed of at terms far beyond their expectations. At noon the Indians eagerly sought the hotels for dinner. The squaws seemed to retain complete control of the purses. The black eyed maiden purchased the highest priced hat in a millinery store.

An old squaw selected a new cart, and paid $160 for a horse. She then purchased a new harness and stored away numerous packages under the seat, after which she tied the poor, little, fagged cayuse pony (on which she had come to town) behind, spread a new blanket over her lap and turned her high checked spirited horse toward the mission. By 4 o'clock a long line of new buggies, wagons and carts well laden with every conceivable article of merchandise wound its way over the mountain to the mission. The Indians were quiet, orderly and dignifiedly polite. Their confidence in the townspeople was evident, as when they emerged from the bank with their large sacks of money they sat on the street corners to count it. The happy father of several pappooses retired with his abundant supply to an alley, where he sat composedly counting it out.—Cor. Seattle (Wash.) Post-Intel.

The appraisers heretofore appointed by this Court to appraise and admeasure the homestead petitioned for by Annie Steward, the widow of said deceased, having filed herein a report of their proceedings:

It is therefore ordered by the Judge of said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased appear before the Judge of said Superior Court on Saturday, the 13th day of August, 1892, at 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, at the chambers of said Judge, at the Courthouse, in the town of Independence, County of Inyo, State of California, then and there to show cause, if any they have, why said report should not be confirmed.

It is further ordered that a copy of this order be published in the INYO INDEPENDENT, a newspaper printed and published in said Inyo county, for two successive weeks before the said 13th day of August, 1892.

Dated July 27th, 1892.

GEO. M. GILL,
Judge of the Superior Court.

SUMMONS.

IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT OF THE SECond Township in the County of Inyo, State of California.

EMMONS SPENCER, Plaintiff, vs. WILLIAM EVA, Defendant.

The People of the State of California send greeting to William Eva, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Justice's Court of the Second Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer before the Justice at his office in said Township the complaint filed therein, within five days (exclusive of the day of service), after the service on you of this summons—if served within the Township in which the action is brought; or, if served out of said Township, but in said County, within ten days; otherwise within twenty days.

This action is brought to recover of you the sum of One hundred and thirty-three and 75-100 ($133.75) dollars due from you to Plaintiff for services rendered to you by Plaintiff as collector and attorney between the 15th day of November, 1891, and the 20th day of May, 1892, as more fully appears in complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to so appear and answer said complaint as above required, said Plaintiff will take judgement against you by default for the sum of $133.75, together with costs of suit.

Given under my hand this 24 day of July 1892.

DENNIS J. HESSIAN,
Justice of the Peace of said township.
EMMONS SPENCER, Attorney for Plaintiff.

ALIAS SUMMONS.

IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT OF THIRD Township, County of Inyo, State of California.

JOHN WELCH, Plaintiff, vs. JESUS ESSENAS, Defendant.

The people of the State of California send greeting to Jesus Esenas, Defendant:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the Justice's Court of Third Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer before the Justice at his office in said Township, the Complaint filed therein, within five days (exclusive of the day of service), after the service on you of this Summons—if servedwithin the Township in which this action is brought, or, if served out of said Township, but in said County, within ten days; or within twenty days if served elsewhere.

The said action is brought to obtain judgment against you for the sum of $38.60 alleged to be due Plaintiff upon an account for work, labor and services performed by one J. W. Murphy in the line of general blacksmith work and for materials furnished you in and about said work at your request, between the 26th day of August, 1890, and the 3rd day of May, 1892, and which said account was assigned to plaintiff herein on the 5th day of July, 1892, and before the commencement of this action, as more fully appears by the complaint on file herein to which you are referred.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, said plaintiff will take judgment against you for the sum of $38.60, together with costs of suit.

Given under my hand this 12th day of July, 1892. IRV. H. MULHOLLAND,
Justice of the Peace of said township.
F. E. DENSMORE, Attorney for Plaintiff.

DIED.

MAIRS—In Independence, August 24, 1892, Fred., youngest son of O. I. and Laura J. Mairs, aged 6 months and 17 days.

COURT NOTES.

Geo. M. Gill, Superior Judge.

TUESDAY, Aug. 23, 1892.

Mary E. Hutchings vs. James Hutchings Filed decree of divorce.

August Stecker vs. Andrew Fife et als.—Entered decree of foreclosure and order of sale.

WEDNESDAY, Aug. 24, 1892.

Estate of John Lucas, deceased—Filed petition for an order authorizing, empowering and directing Administrator to mortgage real estate. Entered order. Filed return and account of sales of personal property and petition for approval.

THURSDAY, Aug. 25, 1892.

Estate of Francisco Paderas, deceased—Filed final account of Administrator and petition for discharge.

Geo. F. Willis of Bishop visited Independence early in the week.

Mr. J. C. Crocker passed through town early in the week on his way back to Bakersfield.

Billy Smith arrived from Modock on yesterday's train and is enjoying a holiday here.

D. B. Cartis arrived at Independence yesterday after a lengthy visit through the southern counties.

A. E. Janvier will open the fall term of the Independence public school on Monday, September 12th.

Wednesday's train did not get here until three o'clock Thursday morning. A broken engine accounted for the delay.

Hon. Trenmor Coffin of Carson spent several days in this vicinity recently in the interest of the Eastside Canal.

Charley Turner will teach the coming term of school at Camp Independence. School opens a week from Monday.

W. R. Johnsan has resumed his former position in the store of A. W. Eibeshutz. He came up from Keeler yesterday.

The names of George Storey and John Barnes are mentioned as probable candidates for the Democratic nomination for Sheriff.

The Soda Works at Keeler were to commence harvesting their crop yesterday. The work of taking up soda requires quite a force of men.

Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Collins of Poleta were at Independence last Wednesday. Mrs. Collins had been visiting at Los Angeles for some time and was on her way home.

John Shepherd has about finished his hay harvest at Georges Creek. The quantity cut is about seven hundred tons; a large proportion being red top and timothy, and all of it of excellent quality.

We have received a copy of the premium list for the coming Fair. It is very liberal as to prizes offered and invites good competition. The pavilion display should this year exceed anything yet seen here.

Governor Booth of California was a bachelor until a few months preceding his death when he married the widow of his deceased partner. Now a 38-year-old daughter comes to the surface and will probably contest the will of her putative father.

Owing to unforseen circumstances the management find it impossible to give the proposed entertainment next Friday evening. A social dance will be given, however, to which all are cordially invited to attend and a good time assured.

John D. Lewis Esq. intends locating at Bishop where he will succeed to the law practice of James Hutchings Esq. Mr. Lewis has been admitted to practice in the Supreme Court and is a promising young lawyer.

Mr. John Kispert of Georges Creek is delivering hay at Lone Pine station for the soda works at Keeler. The hay is all red top and timothy and a higher price is paid for it than for any other hay, alfalfa not excepted.

So far as one may judge by only looking from the road, Mr. Fred Albers at Georges Creek will have a good crop from a field of corn on his place. It would appear that all the more tender plants do better upon the upland than out in the open valley.

About two weeks ago Mr. J. J. Gunn received a telegram announcing the death of his father at Ottawa, Canada. Mr. Gunn was greatly surprised at the news as he had just returned from a visit with him and the old gentleman was improving in health and bid fair to live for several years. A letter received recently, however, states that Mr. Gunn, Sr., was drowned in the Rideau canal, a large stream traversing the city. The unfortunate accident shortened a long and honorable life, the deceased havidg arrived at the ripe age of 78 years.

Making a Home.

A little less than three years ago any one passing from Independence to Lone Pine could have seen a dwelling house being built about a mile west from the school house. Those who did see it at that time wondered why any man should locate in such a place. Nothing but bare sand and sagebrush all around; nothing that would lead an ordinary observer to imagine that any useful thing could be grown there. Any one visiting the same place now will wonder far more at what has been accomplished in that short time. An orchard of as fine young apple and other fruit trees as can be seen anywhere; a thrifty vineyard; vegetables of all kinds in great profusion; large beds of strawberry plants; handsome shade trees about the house; flowers and much else for usefulness and beauty. Without any capital but intelligent and patient labor this comfortable home has been made in that brief time. In the mean time a comfortable living has been provided for a family of eight children, most of them small. The parents as soon as possible began growing vegetables for market, and from the proceeds were able to pay for all things necessary to buy for the family, and every day some improvement is made upon the place. The father if living in a large city would not be able by his labor to provide more than a scant supply of the bare necessaries of life for such a family. His children have an abundance of such fruits and vegetables, milk, butter and eggs, as only the rich in large cities can afford to buy for their families. No better example can be seen of what a poor man can do in Owens Valley than is afforded at the home of H. Glade, at Georges Creek.

Obituary.

The first birth in a family brings joy to the hearts of the fond parents, but the first death crushes those hearts with a grief none but parents can know. Yesterday Mr. and Mrs. O. I. Mairs laid away in the grave their baby boy, the youngest of five sons born to them, and the first death in their family. In all the years to come though no other shadow of grief should come to them, the remembrance of that sweet baby will be a sad recollection to both father and mother. The funeral was attended by a large gathering of friends of the family. An abundance of beautiful flowers made a fitting couch for the little human flower they covered in the grave.

ALIAS SUMMONS.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.

FRIED RICKE RHINE, Executrix of the will of Nathan Rhine, deceased, plaintiff, vs. W. L. HUNTER, CAROLINE HUNTER and J. L. PORTER, defendants.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and the Complaint filed in the office of the Clerk of said County.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIfornia send greeting to W. L. Hunter, Caroline L. Hunter and J. L. Porter, defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, as such executrix, in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county, or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment of this Court for the foreclosure of a certain mortgage described in said complaint and executed by the said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L Hunter on the 10th day of April, 1889, to secure the payment of a certain Promissory Note made by the said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L Hunter to the said Nathan Rhine, now deceased, for the sum of $2 400, with interest thereon from the said 10th day of April, 1889, at the rate of 1½ per cent per month, described in the complaint, which by the lapse of time is now due, no part of which has been paid excepting $60 paid April 10th, 1889, $144 paid October 10th, 1889, $110.35 paid May 10th, 1890, $75 paid September 20th, 1890, $72 paid December 27th, 1890 and $66 paid November 28th, 1891.

Said note is dated April 10th, 1889, that the premises conveyed by said mortgage may be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of said note and interest thereon and costs of suit and the further sum of 10 per cent on the amount of the judgment found due as counsel fees as provided in said mortgage, and in case such proceeds are insufficient to pay the same, that judgment be docketed against said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L Hunter for the balance remaining due, and also that the said defendants, and all persons claiming by through or under may be barred and foreclosed of all right, title, claim, lien, equity of redemption, and interest in and to said mortgaged premises, and for other and further relief, as will more fully appear by reference to the complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint.

John and Mary Ann.

In one of the towns of Lincoln county there formerly lived a couple known to the surrounding country as John and Mary Ann. Did fortune smile upon their humble birth? It must have been a very sickly smile, if indeed fortune changed countenance at all, for it frequently happened that their larder, like that of the venerable Mrs. Hubbard, was bare of anything of an osseous character even, to say nothing of bread and butter. One thing, however, they always contrived to have on hand—tobacco, and two very black pipes, for Mary Ann shared her husband's joys as well as his sorrows. John would come home at night and interrogate his spouse as to the prospect for internal refreshment.

"What yer got ter eat, Mary Ann?"

"Nary a crumb, John."

"Ain't ary 'taters?"

"Nary a 'tater, John."

Then the man of the house would heave a sigh of resignation and say, "Wall, Mary Ann, full yer pipe 'n' less hev a smoke."

John's spiritual condition was a source of some solicitude to his wife, who one day persuaded him to accompany her to a prayer meeting that was to be held in a school house some miles away. Arriving there John, the sinful soul, drew the line at entering the house, and persisted in sitting down outside under one of the open windows, where he could enjoy a peaceful smoke and get the benefit of the meeting at the same time.

The service within was progressing uneventfully when Mary Ann arose and, after dwelling upon the lost and undone condition of her lord and master and the great distress which this condition caused her, asked the prayers of the audience for the unregenerate John. A hush fell upon the assembly, during which the head of the gentleman in question slowly appeared above the window sill. Resting his elbows upon this, and holding his pipe in an easy attitude between his thumb and forefinger, he cast a benevolent look upon those within which finally rested upon his wife, to whom he remarked in a deprecatory tone, "Speak fer yerself, Mary Ann, but don't say nothin' about I'se!"—Lewiston Journal.

Butterflies That Bathe.

In The Victorian Naturalist G. Lyell, Jr., of South Melbourne, notes that while walking along the edge of a mountain stream in Gippsland he observed a peculiar habit of the Victorian butterfly, Papilio macleayanus. One of these butterflies was seen to alight close to the water, into which it backed till the whole of the body and the lower part of the hind wings were submerged, the two forelegs alone retaining their hold of the dry land. After remaining in this position for something like half a minute it flew away, apparently refreshed.

"During the morning," says Mr. Lyell, "I noticed quite a number doing the same thing. In one instance no less than four were seen to be within a space of not more than three yards, and to make sure that I was not deceived I captured several as they rose from the water, and found in each case the body and lower edge of the hind wings quite wet. While in the water the fluttering of the wings, so noticeable at other times, was suspended, and so intent were the butterflies in the enjoyment of their cold bath that they would hardly move, even when actually touched by the net.

"Apparently the heat of the weather drove them to the water, as immediately they emerged they flew up again to the hill sides. I have often noticed butterflies of the Nymphalidæ family settling near the pools, and apparently imbibing the moisture from the damp sand round the edges, but never before have I seen butterflies enter the water. Possibly it may be a peculiar habit of this particular species or genus. Numbers of the white butterfly, Pieris harpalyce, were flying about at the same time, but I noticed none alight near the water."

Facts About Worms.

"Worms are very interesting animals," remarked a friend who has given some attention to the subject.

"The worms we used to go fishing with when we were boys?"

"Yes, they will do as a type. The common earth worm is covered with bristles, which in reality are in the form of recurved hooks. These hooks extend from head to tail, and may be felt by pulling the worm backward through the fingers.

"The mouth of a worm is placed in the second segment, near the apex of the body. Worms feed on earth, filling themselves with a generous supply thereof, for the sake of the nutritive particles contained therein. The common belief is that if you cut a worm in two the separate parts will grow into worms. This is not strictly true. Worms are propagated from eggs. To cut a worm in two means that the hinder segment will die, the forward part live."

"What are those little horse hairs found in pools and creeks? The boys call them worms and snakes. What are they in reality?"

"They are what are termed 'round worms.' The round worm is a remarkable animal. It begins life as a larva in mud or in a water pool. When well developed it becomes aquatic. It multiplies very rapidly, so rapidly in fact that many people say 'it rained worms.' If you cut one of these wiggling worms into a dozen parts the probability is that each separate part will live."—Detroit Free Press.

Public Office in China.

The Chinese system of government lacks entirely the progressive and unifying element of popular election. The people have no voice in the choice of their rulers, and the rulers consider the people as so many sheep to be fleeced. The officials are paid starvingly low salaries, and many offices are openly bought. Corruption and extortion may therefore be said to be almost sanctioned, the only restraint being the dread of insurrection and the power of guilds, clans and secret societies. There is imperfect protection from robbers and pirates, many villages preferring to subsidize robber bands rather than to have to deal with the worse form of robbery practiced by the officials.

Washing Little Indians.

We were camped at the Hot Springs on the Lo Lo trail, made famous in Indian annals by the escape of Chief Joseph and his band of Nez Perces. Just above us was a large camp of Flatheads who were making their fall hunt. One morning we were awakened by shouts and cries. Evidently there was great excitement somewhere, and we promptly jumped up. It was just after daylight and cold clouds of steam were rising from the big basin shaped pool at the foot of the granite wall, from which poured a thick stream of boiling water. The pool was so large that at the lower edge the water was almost cold. The nearer you approached to the place where the water burst from the rock the better chance you stood of getting boiled.

At the edge, at a point where the water was of a comfortable temperature, stood two Indians, one on the bank and the other on a stone in the water. Near by were a dozen other Indians guarding a number of little Indian boys and girls who had nothing on and were howling and crying.

When we looked out of the tent the two Indians at the pool had an Indian boy, one holding him by the feet the other by the hands, and were gravely swinging him backward and forward through the warm water, while he yelled at every dip. As soon as they had finished with him he was set upon the bank, and ran to the willow brush near by.

Then the noise redoubled, for each child in the group guarded by the Indians feared that it was his turn. They all tried to escape to the brush, but their elders pursued and caught them, until the very last one had been put through the cleansing process.—New York Sun.

Big Field Guns and Their Effect.

If you insist on high velocity you have to add so much additional machinery to your gun carriage and have to so greatly strengthen its construction that you destroy its mobility, while even if you gain a long range you are still unable to make use of your most efficient projectile at it. Moreover, since the remaining velocity of its shrapnel is a truer measure of the value of a gun than its initial velocity, and the two are by no means directly proportional, it does not follow that we benefit as much as we might expect by submitting to these disadvantages. Thus, the 12-pounder has an initial velocity of over 1,700 feet per second and a remaining velocity at 3,000 yards of 862 feet; while the 13-pounder, with an initial velocity of only 1,560 feet, has at the same range a remaining velocity greater by six feet per second than that of its rival.

One of our highest authorities on field artillery has, indeed, recorded his opinion, that, as regards the efficiency of shrapnel, we gain nothing by the increased muzzle velocity of "the best field gun in Europe" at all practical ranges. Moreover, it is the attempt to squeeze out the last few extra feet that does all the harm.—London Saturday Review.

Modern Education.

With all its novel modern powers and practical sense I am forced to admit that the purely scientific brain is miserably mechanical; it seems to have become a splendid sort of self directed machine, an incredible automaton, grinding on with its analysis or constructions. But for pure sentiment, for all that spontaneous Greek waywardness of fancy, for the temperature of passion and the subtler thrill of ideality, you might as well look to a wrought iron derrick.

Science found education blundering peacefully along, cultivating half of the mind with charming results and letting the other die of disuse; it worked the startling miracle of electrifying this dead half into life and bringing it to perfect activity, and straightway, satisfied with this remarkable achievement, it proceeded to neglect the ideal half which the classics had made so much of and caused it to perish. It has substituted a new sort of half man for the old one.—Clarence King in Forum.

Skill in the Wrist.

It is wonderful what a part the wrist plays in exercises in which physical skill and delicacy are required. After a man learns to play billiards well enough to be familiar with the cushions and the English, the important thing to cultivate is his stroke. It is the hardest thing about billiard playing to get a good stroke, and sometimes the greatest players "fall down" because they lose control of it. Now, the stroke wholly depends on the action of the wrist. Jake Schaeffer, or any good player, will make a shot of seven cushions with less apparent force than a beginner will exert in getting three. This is due to the superior wrist movement.

It's the same way with violin playing. The quality and touch all depend on wrist manipulation. So with curving a baseball. Great pitchers always work a strong wrist movement on the ball as it leaves the hand. If they didn't it wouldn't curve at all.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Just What She Needed.

She was a stout old woman, with a red face and two wisps of gray hair that were draped back over each ear from the sprouting place, like hawsers.

"We don't want any," she said, as she opened the door and saw a thin young man on the stoop.

"But, madam"——

"Never mind."

"I merely want to explain to you, madam"——

"Don't want any. Get along wid ye."

"Just let me tell you"——

"Don't. I have a broom in my other hand, and if you're working Annie Rooney soap or books or subscriptions I'll whack you."

"I understand you take boarders, madam?"

"Yes."

"I am introducing a little book entitled 'Appetite Breakers, or the Landlady's Friend.'"

"Got one with you?" inquired the guardian of the doorway anxiously.

"Yes."

"Come in."—New York Tribune.

Pressure of Water.

Water serves to convey any pressure or power which may be given to it, whether that pressure is a pumping engine at the end of a main or by means of a column or weight of water above the main contained in a lofty tower or high storage reservoir. One cubic foot of water weighs 62½ pounds, and if the height of the column is increased the pressure upon the base is increased for every foot thus added a further 62½ pounds. A column of water one square inch in area at base and 2.3 feet high weighs exactly one pound, so that for every increase of height of 2.3 feet a pressure of one pound per square inch is added to the base.—American Engineer.

TWO BABY FEET.

Only two baby feet, so pink and fair;
So small I hold them both within my hand,
And bending low I kiss them tenderly,
With thoughts which none but mothers understand.
I note each line of dainty baby grace
Which those dear feet unconsciously possess;
Dear dimpled feet! how long or short a way
You have to journey; who can tell or guess?

Dear little feet, that lie yet all unstained
By contact with a world by sin defiled;
My mother-heart prays God most fervently
That she will guide those restless feet, my child.
And bending o'er thy peaceful couch I ask
Unanswered questions of thy future days;
I long to know if these dear feet will tread
Upward or down, through rough or pleasant ways.

I cannot tell; it is not mine to know
What God, in wisdom, for my child hath planned,
And it is best, dear one, that it is so;
For human reason might not understand.
But he who guides the timid sparrow's flight
When it has fluttered from its sheltered home
Will not forget my child by day or night
Where'er or far those baby feet may roam.

—Mrs. Mary Felton in Good Housekeeping.

PAUPERS BECAUSE OF THE CHURCH.

A Case Showing How Charitable Women Are Sometimes Imposed On.

Nancy A——, aged 30, can wash, iron, clean house, sew, cook—"almost anything that will earn an honest living," she says. A crippled brother, a blind grandmother, a widowed sister who has the asthma and three children under 8 years of age. "Seven people to be supported by one pair of hands." Tears in her eyes as she says it. Children partly clothed by "Sunday school of your church, ma'am, and oh, the kindness of your church ladies to me I can never, no, never, forget!" It seems that they give her cart loads off cast off clothes and provisions, always employ her to wash dishes, etc., at church entertainments, and "never let her suffer for anything." Nancy is recommended to me by one of our Dorcas society as a capable and willing washer woman. Thus runs the original entry.

Now I needed a washerwoman as little as I needed a belvedere on the roof of my house, but I wanted to help Nancy, and I would be consistent to my principle of not making honest workpeople into paupers. So I invented work for her. I hunted up some dozens of "white things" that were yellowing on my linen shelves and packed them into a hamper. Nancy could not do them up in my laundry. "There were children at home, and nobody but them three invaleeds to get their meals and keep the pore things out of the fire."

She looked askance at the hamper when it was offered. The water arrangements in her flat were very "oconvenient." But a lady on the next floor would help her bring up the water if 'twas allowed in the bill.

I readily engaged to allow it. Otherwise thoughtful women are too often inconsiderate in the matter of "water arrangements" in tenement houses. It is not as easy to keep clean when every drop of water must be lugged up two flights of stairs as when you have only to turn a faucet to get all you want. Nancy next suggested modestly that the wet clothes would have to be carried up to the roof to be dried. But the lady down stairs would help her with the baskets for twenty-five cents. She didn't like to risk straining her back. If anything should happen to her what would become of her three invaleeds and the children?

I "allowed" the additional quarter of a dollar. With seven people dependent upon her Nancy's back must be respected. She kept the linen ten days, but it was done up beautifully. I paid her all she asked with cheerful alacrity, and threw in at her (modest) request some flannel to make undervests for the grandmother. She was unduly grateful, and promised to come to morrow for the next week's supply of work.

On the morrow I had, instead, a badly spelled note—in pencil, of course. Nancy had "meant to tell me yesterday that she could not do my washing no more, but did not have the heart to disappoint me, seeing I was so set upon having her do it, and what with fetching up the water from below and the clothes on to the ruff sech work didn't pay. She was sorry to disobleege me, for nobody need wanter work for a nicer lady, and would I please remember to mention her name to the ladies at the strawberry festival next week?"

I waylaid her in the lobby of the hall when the festival was over. She had a big basket on each arm full of cake, bread, sugar, etc., bestowed with her supper, over and above $3 in money. She was in a hurry to get home to her "invaleeds," but paused amiably to hearken to my query as to her engagements for the house cleaning season. "You're the fourth person what's asked me that to-night"—affable and complacent. "The church ladies has been so good to me that I hate to seem unobligin'. But I really don't see how I'm to leave home all day, or even half a day. There's my three invaleeds, you know."

Can you do some plain sewing for me? Would you undertake a weekly job of mending to be done in your own house?

"I'm afeered to promise, ma'am—on account of my invaleeds, you know. They takes up all my time."

"But your grandmother is not a cripple and your brother is not blind, and your sister has the use of her eyes and limbs. Couldn't they help one another for a few hours of the day?"

"Oh, ma'am!" with a smile of superior pity for my ignorance, "you can't imagine how much waitin' on them poor invaleeds requires. If 'twasn't for the Sunday school and the blessed church ladies we should a' gone to heaven together long ago. The Lord ought to reward 'em."

"A worthy creature," remarked the president of our Dorcas, who chanced to pass as Nancy and her load moved on, "and so grateful. One of the Lord's poor."

In the ten years that have passed since that particular strawberry festival Nancy has not, I think, missed a single church entertainment or failed to stagger home under the weight of the fragments gathered up by generous hands. In that time I know she has never done a day's work if she could help it.—Marion Harland in New York Herald.

Jewels of a Woman's Life.

There are so many jewels that may be worn day and night, so many gems that are always and only your own, that you need not grieve for those that show their brightness only by day. There is the jewel of Consideration, that you may wear just over your heart; there is the moonstone of Hope, that may glitter over your brow, filling your eyes with brightness; there is that brilliant stone of Sympathy the emerald, that makes you put out your right hand of help; and there is the beautiful one of loving Kindness, that makes the left hand help the right. But above all, overshadowing all, pinning down your tresses, is the diamond of true Love—love which endureth all, suffereth all, hopeth all. Are not these better than jewels dug out of the earth? For, indeed, these jewels come from heaven above.

Images from Easter Island.

In the ethnological collection in the University museum are two carved images from Easter island. They are made of hard native toromiro wood, with eyes of bone and obsidian and breastbone and ribs sharply defined. These figures have been called household gods, but it is said they were never worshiped, although they are regarded as representations of spirits. It is said they were meant to represent deceased chiefs and persons of note, and were given a place of honor at feasts and ceremonies.—Philadelphia Ledger.

FASCINATION.

Why so Many Ladies Who Should be Attractive Fail to Please—A Brilliant Woman Reveals the Secret.

[Ladies' Home.]

"Dress is everything."

"Is it? Some beautiful women cannot be improved by a dress, no matter how artistic it may be made."

The speakers were two lady reporters for society papers. They had attended balls, receptions and parties for years. They had studied the effects of costumes, the lines of beauty, and had faithfully written upon them in the papers they represented. They were masters in their art and yet they differed.

"You cannot prove your assertion by any lady of high standing and authority."

"I can," replied her companion. "Within two days I will show you an interview with the leading woman on dress of America." And the two friends parted.

Last Wednesday they met at the same place, when, producing a neatly-written manuscript, the lady read the following remarkable interview:

"Mrs. Annie Jenness-Miller is the acknowledged authority in America upon the subject of dress. An attractive woman herself, she knows how to render other women attractive in the highest degree. I sought an interview; it was granted, and I give you the results:

"'Do you think, Mrs. Miller, that women are made more attractive by their dress?'

"'That depends upon what you mean by attractive.'

"'Pleasing, fascinating if you choose—more charming to men and other women.'

"'A simply beautiful woman is seldom attractive; a stupid one never. It is the soul, the life, the brilliancy, which render women attractive.'

"'I'll admit that, but what makes women brilliant?'

"'Vivacity, brightness and good health. Did you ever see a sickly woman able to entertain a dinner party of bright people? On the other hand, did you ever know a cultivated and refined woman, overflowing with animal life and spirits, who was not fascinating?'

"'So you believe perfect health is the secret of fascination, do you?'

"'Most certainly. Artistic dressing is proper, fine curves attractive, but life, such as comes from healthy throbbing blood, is alone fascinating. It is a great mistake, however, to think that health is preserved by dress alone. Women must have proper food, freedom from care, and a good friend in need.'

"'What do you mean by that?'

"'Some assistance physically. All women feel depressed at times, and all pleasure seems gone out of life. On all such occasions, and indeed whenever blue or worn out, she needs help. I know, because I have been in that condition myself.'

"'And what do you do when in that condition?'

"'One thing, and one thing only. I am assisted by the best friend that any woman ever had. It is Warner's Safe Cure. I mean it, and I have good reason to speak as I do. You think I am a perfectly healthy woman; so I am, but I take several bottles of this great cure every season just as I take additional care in the selection of tonic-giving food. As you know, there are certain times when every woman needs assistance. At such times, and before such times, there is, so far as I know, but one thing that can help, and that is the great cure I have named.'

"I bade Mrs. Miller a reluctant good-by, for I felt that I had met a woman who knew women, what their trials and troubles were, and what they required."

Washington's First Love Affair.

George Fairfax was the companion of Washington on his surveying tour for Lord Fairfax. Washington first met Mrs. Fairfax at Belvoir, near Mount Vernon, when she was brought home as the bride of George William Fairfax. Miss Mary Cary accompanied her sister Sarah to Belvoir, and there met George Washington. She was then but fourteen years of age. Washington was only sixteen. He had never visited the low country near Williamsburg prior to this, and therefore could not have met Sarah Cary until her marriage. It is said that he fell in love at sight with Mary Cary, and went so far on his first visit to Williamsburg as to ask Colonel Cary for the hand of his daughter.

The big rawboned lad found scant favor in the eyes of the patrician planter. He was dismissed in terms so curt that we must bear in mind paternal pride and other extenuating circumstances if we would keep intact our idea of a fine old Virginia gentleman.

"If that is your business here, sir, I wish you to leave the house! My daughter"—the swelling emphasis rumbles down the corridor of years—"has been accustomed to ride in her own coach."

Tradition asserts that the chagrined suitor took the choleric parent at his word, and that the next time he looked upon the face of his early love was when he passed through Williamsburg on his return from Yorktown after the surrender of Cornwallis.—Marion Harland in Harper's Weekly.

Wash Fruit Before Eating It.

The following curious instance is reported by M. Schnirer of the ease with which consumption germs may be disseminated. While at work one day in the laboratory of Weichselbaum, he sent for some grapes to eat. The fruit had been kept for some time in a basket outside the lavatory and was covered with dust, so that the water in which it was washed was black. On examining it he reflected that, inasmuch as the neighboring street was traversed by consumptive patients going to the clinic, the dust probably was charged with tubercle bacilli. To settle this, M. Schnirer injected into three guinea pigs ten cubic centimeters of water in which the grapes had been washed. One animal died in two days from peritonitis, the two others died on the forty-eighth and fifty-eighth days, respectively, presenting marked tuberculous lesions, especially at the place of injection.

The water in which the grapes had been washed was taken from the faucet, and the glass containing it had been sterilized; neither the boy who had bought the grapes, nor the merchant who had sold them, was consumptive. The cause of the infection was, beyond doubt, the dust on the grapes. This experiment illustrates the danger arising from the dissemination of desiccated tuberculous sputa in the air.—Hall's Journal of Health.

DEAD SEA FRUITS.

They slay multitudes when they are the product of neglect of incipient disease. A "slight" cold, a fit of indigestion, biliousness or constipation each or any of these "minor ailments" advance in many cases with "league-destroying strides." Give them a swift, early defeat with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters and avert the danger. Abernethy administered an alarming rebuke to the man who informed him that he had "only a cold!" "Only a cold," repeated the doctor. "What would ye have—the plague!" Rheumatism and la grippe are easily extinguishable at the start. Why then allow them to get up a full head of steam? Put on the brakes with the Bitters. The Genial warmth which this superb medicine diffuses through the system, the impetus it gives to the circulation of the blood, its soothing and strengthening effect upon the nervous, specially recommend it to the enfeebled and sick. 'Tis the great specific for malaria.

A fellow is never too old to learn, especially if he begins late in life to trade in horses.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

Deaths in London Streets.

London is full of Fulton streets and Broadways, and at them and in all the other streets the cabs and hansoms fly about in such a hot and apparently reckless way that I always felt while I was there that the only reason I did not read of a hundred thousand "runover" accidents every morning in the papers was that it would be doing violence to the organic principles of the London press to print the news. I confess I was more than half afraid to cross the crowded streets, and with a fear which is engendered in New York in few places and on few occasions. I was assured by the citizens that they are all so accustomed to project their coat tails at right angles to their bodies, and to invoke divine aid between the flying hoofs of horses whenever they need to cross a street, that they are as adept at it as an American lightning rod man is at dodging missiles.

Yet I observed that Dickens in his "Dictionary of London" thinks it worth while to suggest that the only way to go from curb to curb is to make up your mind what course you will take and then stick to it, because then the London cabbies will divine your intentions. To change your mind while en route is to confuse the cabmen, and cause you to make your return journey to America in the form of freight. Then again I found that in the western end of the strand—that is, down by Temple Bar and the law courts—200 more or less mangled bodies are sent to the Charing Cross hospital every year.—Julian Ralph in Harper's Weekly.

A Barber's Funny Freaks.

"Yes," said the proprietor of an up town barber shop, "Jim was a good workman, but I had to get rid of him."

"What was the trouble?"

"He was too absent minded and forgetful. One old fellow with a head like a billiard ball he never failed to ask if he didn't want a shampoo. Another bald headed old chap got mad because Jim insisted upon sellin' him a bottle of 'elixir' that was warranted to keep the hair from fallin' out, an' a young man fell asleep in the chair an' Jim shaved off his mustache. I had to call a policeman then. He cut one man's ear nearly off while watching a dog fight in the street, an' sometimes he would rub hair oil all over a customer's face instead of his head, an' fill his ears full of lather and forget to wipe it out. Jim didn't mean nothin' wrong, but as I said he was absent minded. You remember when old Deacon Jones died?"

"Yes."

"Well, the family sent for a barber to shave him, an' I told Jim to go up. It was that job that lost him his situation. He did the work all right—nobody ever found fault with Jim's work—but when he had put on the finishing touches an' pulled the towel off the poor old deacon he turned 'round an' shouted 'Next!' so that people heard him a block away. So I told Jim that I guessed I'd have to let him go."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Artificial Ice.

Ice made by these machines is the nearest to being absolutely pure of any used. It is made of water condensed from steam, which is poured into large galvanized cans. These cans are set in a brine bath chilled far below freezing point by coils of pipes, through which anhydrous ammoniacal gas is forced by powerful pumps. The water in the cans is congealed into ice by the same power, cold, that converts the water of a creek, lake or pond into a frigid substance. There is a theory that water purifies itself in freezing, but it is true to a very limited extent. No cold, no matter how intense it may be, will purify water containing decayed animal or vegetable matter. The makers of ice machines claim that they can make ice at a cost of less than $1.25 a ton, but this is doubtless far too low. The time is fast approaching when ice making machinery will be simplified and cheapened, and then it will come into much more general use. The great need in this respect at present is a safe machine, reasonable in cost, which will be small enough for use in residences.—New York World.

One of Washington's Widows.

There is a widow belonging to this corps of legislative quorum breakers who is credited with more influence than has ever been exercised over public men by any other woman. She is a woman of remarkable intellectual force and is very highly connected. For a number of years she has occupied a position in one of the departments and has gone into society to a considerable extent. She has a matchless wit and the subtlety of a serpent, and is altogether such a brilliant woman that her society is sought by many of the most distinguished men in public life. Many more beautiful women in society find themselves deserted by the gentlemen when she appears to charm them with her wit, and it may not be surprising that a member should prefer a chat with her to listening to a roll call in the house. So popular is she that she sometimes seems to be holding a reception at her office, callers coming in one after another.—Cor. Philadelphia Telegraph.

Knew Himself.

It takes more than a knowledge of arithmetic sometimes to do a "sum in subtraction."

"Do you know anything about figures, Uncle 'Rastus?" said a merchant to an applicant for work.

"Yes, sah."

"Well, if I were to lend you $5, and you promised to pay me $1 a month, how much would you owe me at the expiration of three months?"

"Five dollars, sah."

"I'm afraid you don't know much about figures."

"No, sah; but I specs I knows all about Uncle 'Rastus."—Youth's Companion.

CATTLE STAMPEDE

A Tenderfoot's Thriling Experience on the Plains of New Mexico.

A WILD RACE IN THE DARKNESS.

Riding at Breakneck Speed and Only Half Clad.—Lost in the Prarie.—Horse Instinct.

After weeks of "rounding up," "cutting out," branding and marking we had gotten together 1,700 head of the finest steers to be found on the banks of the muddy Pecos, in New Mexico. Two days later the "boss" rode into camp, consulted with his foreman, and eight men, including the writer, were chosen to drive the snorting, bellowing herd to Springer, N. M., a distance of 250 miles.

The evening of the sixth day was cloudy and cool, and indications of an approaching storm were visible.

The writer was on first guard. The cattle were restless, showing a decided disposition to run, and instead of walking our horses around the herd we were compelled to travel at a sharp trot. This continued until the arrival of the second guard, when the increased forces succeeded in quieting them somewhat, and the writer and his mate started for camp guided by the light of the camp fire, which shone like a star on a little elevation about a half mile away.

We had scarcely turned into our blankets, fully dressed, as usual, with the exception of our boots, when a rumble and shaking of the ground was heard, mingled with hoarse shouts.

"They're running!" yelled the foreman, jumping from his blankets. "Mount! mount! every one of you!" running to his horse as he spoke, which was picketed a short distance away.

Not waiting to don boots the writer sprang to his horse, vaulted into the saddle and tore off after the foreman, the flickering light of the camp fire, fast being extinguished by the rain, revealing the remaining men hurriedly preparing to follow.

Guided by the thunder of hoofs the herd was soon overtaken, and in obedience to the foreman's yell I strove to "get in front of 'em."

The confusion of the scene was indescribable. The terrified snorts of the cattle were almost drowned by the clashing of horns, thunder of the hoofs and shouts of the men. My oil coat was strapped to my saddle, not having had time to unfasten it. I tore at the leather straps, succeeded in loosening them, and turning in my saddle shook it before the leaders, adding my shouts to the din around me.

As well try to stop the torrent of Niagara. The wild race was unslackened, and, from traditions, I knew that a misstep of my horse sufficient to throw me or his fall meant that I would be cut to pieces by the sharp hoofs of the cattle.

Then an unexpected event occurred. The herd divided into two sections, one of which I was the sole leader of, while the other portion galloped off at right angles, led by my two companions. For a few minutes I could hear their shouts, then they grew fainter and fainter, and were finally lost in the gallop of hoofs around me.

On we thundered. My throat was raw and swollen from shouting, and my "slicker" had fallen from my hand. The rain had ceased, but I was wet to the skin and numbed by the cool air. I thought the sound of hoofs was not so deafening, and as the clouds blew away so that I could see a few yards in front of me I found that I was leading about a dozen steers that had become separated from the herd. I had just made this discovery when they slackened speed and finally stopped, panting and quivering, all the run knocked out of them. Of what use was a handful of steers out of 1,700? Riding off a few yards I listened, but could hear no sound of my companions. Becoming conscious of a severe pain in my left foot I reached down and found that I was literally pincushioned with the sharp needles of a cactus, having ridden through a bed of the prickly stuff, my foot unprotected by boots.

In the excitement of the run I had not felt it, but now the pain was intense. I plucked such as I could and then deliberated what was best to do. My lone dozen steers had wandered away and I made no effort to overtake them, knowing the uselessness of the undertaking.

Here was a predicament. In the middle of the prairie, shoeless and shivering with cold, not knowing in what direction to go to reach camp, and my horse blown with his fearful run. Knowing the instinct of horses, I dropped the bridle reins and suffered him to go where he would.

He promptly wheeled around and started off on a slow trot, which he kept up for about fifteen minutes. I knew we were camped on the bank of the river, and supposed that he would go in that direction, but wishing to test his instinct I turned him from his chosen course, and to my dismay he complied and started off in the new direction just as willingly. I tested him from every point of the compass, and he seemed to go in any direction just as willingly.

I gave up in despair then, and concluded to keep him moving until daylight, when I knew I could find the river. On he trotted, while I began to curse the fate that ever led me to become a cow puncher. After riding, I should judge, an hour I was delighted to find myself on the river bank, but then a new question arose, Was the camp before me or behind me? Again I tested the horse. He would go up or down, just as I pleased. I peered through the darkness trying to look for anything that might serve as a guide, when afar off in the distance I saw a faint light which grew to a tiny blaze and then died out. Where there was a light there must be life, and with renewed hope I galloped off in that direction, and about ten minutes later had the satisfaction of seeing the canvas top of the mess wagon looming up before me.

We were the only two of the outfit who reached camp that night. The others, like myself, had chased the cattle until they scattered, and had spent the night in a vain search for camp. Daylight found many of them traveling in an entirely opposite direction, and one nearly ten miles from his destination.

Messengers were dispatched to a ranch across the river and to another twenty miles away. Men were sent to our assistance, and with a force of twenty cowboys the scattered cattle were rounded up in two days, and we continued our journey, having lost but six head in the wild stampede.

Evidences of the wild rush of the cattle were plentiful in the broken horns, and two carcasses were found almost trampled to a jelly. The poor brutes, exhausted, had fallen to the ground, only to be cut to pieces by the sharp hoofs of their companions. Four times they stampeded before Springer was reached, but the stampedes fortunately occurred on clear nights, and were stopped with little difficulty.—Galveston News.

Kissing.

A correspondent who describes himself as "a man of mature years, but limited social experience," wants to know:

"If there is any trustworthy record as to the origin and practice of kissing. I have been told," he says, "that every tribe of people that have been found anywhere in the world are addicted to the practice. I should like to know if that is so, and also who were the first people to begin kissing."

So far as our investigations show, the first kiss on record is the osculatory salute between Isaac and his son Jacob, mentioned in the 27th chapter of Genesis; but it is not unreasonable to suppose that Isaac had kissed the mother many times before he exchaned kisses with the son.

The ancient Hebrews seem to have reduced kissing to an exact science, and to have given it a nomenclature. We find from the Old Testament that they had the kiss of homage, of subjection, of reconciliation, of approbation, of welcome, of love and joy, of sorrow, of peace, of idolatrous worship, of valediction, of gratitude and many others. We also read in the Scripture of hypocritical kisses, like that bestowed by Joab on Amasa when about to slay him; and worst and foulest of all, of the traitorous salute by which Judas betrayed the Saviour.

The primitive Christians interchanged kisses before receiving the communion, as a token of religious fellowship. An attempt was made some years ago at a certain place of worship in New York to revive the practice, but owing to "modern degeneracy," or some other cause, the "kissing church" was far from being a moral and religious success. Scandal's envenomed tongue soon began to wag against the brothers and sisters, and the experiment was given up.

It is not true that every tribe of people indulge in kissing. Some of the lower tribes do not seem to know anything about that "token of affection" which is so dear to the more enlightened races. But among people who have risen a little above the savage state, it seems that kissing, as Dogberry says of reading and writing, "comes by nature."—New York Ledger.

The Flea.

This is a small animal, but mighty industrious. It has no settled place of abode. Like the Arab, it is a nomad. It has a seeming preference, however, and that preference is in favor of the yellow dog. Why this is so is immaterial.

The flea is a great jumper. It can ride along on the back of its favorite dog, and should you be five feet away, with one bound it can clear the distance and alight on your coat collar, and then with a dexterous handspring it drops down behind your collar and is lost to sight. It is an old saying that "a thing must be seen to be appreciated." It is not so with the flea. If it was, the flea is so small that it would never be appreciated. "A man is known by his works;" so is a flea. You look at the delicate tracery in the sculptured marble shaft; that is a man's work. All at once you feel an excruciating bite in the middle of your back; that is a flea's work. It is easy to tell what's biting you.

Of course the flea is carniverous, but it never kills its prey. It bites out what it wants and leaves its victim to suffer. It never takes two bites in the same place. It leaps merrily from one spot to another, browsing as it goes, its agility saving it from instant death in many cases.

The humble little flea teaches us to exercise patience under the most trying circumstances and not to despise small things. It is not the easiest thing in the world to smile and look pleasant and chat vivaciously while a flea is doing just as it pleases on your spine. Then is when you feel that you were not built right.—Texas Siftings.

The Outlook for American Plays.

In a letter which lies before me, I find this sentence from the pen of Mr. A. M. Palmer, manager of the Madison Square theatre, New York: "I am sorry to say that the numerous plays submitted to me every year are all, or nearly all, totally defective in construction." Critics of a pessimistic turn of mind may find here food for lugubrious rumination upon the decadence of the American drama, the decay of art, the corruption of taste, and the general decline and fall of the creative imagination; and I cannot find it in my heart to deny them this sweet sorrow. Yet I may be permitted to remark that, to me personally, the sentence above quoted seems the most hopeful sign of a renaissance in our drama that has so far appeared on a very dark and lowering horizon. If Mr. Palmer had said, "these plays show no originality," or "the characterization is feeble," or "the plots are all stolen from the French," then there might have appeared just reason for lamentation and despair; but a knowledge of construction, as everybody knows who has had any practical experience in writing plays, is something that almost any one can become proficient in by a reasonable outlay of time and studious application. It sustains to the art of play writing much the same relation that grammar sustains to oratory.—Professor Albert Hennequin in Forum.

French Fancies.

They recognize American celebrities in Paris after a truly French fashion. They invent something at which nothing imaginable could persuade the celebrity to look twice, and then they call it by his name and are happy. For instance, the Buffalo necklet and bracelet, named for Hon. William F. Cody, are narrow bands of gold, whence depend fringes of crystals vaguely and sweetly called "Mexican stones" by the Parisians. Then there is the Edison trunk, a fat little box with a carved cover strapped down with ribbons, and with big rosettes set on wheresoever a rosette will cling, and filled with sugar plums, about as suggestive of Edison as a palm tree would be.—Boston Transcript.

WITHOUT ORDERS

Midshipman Hunter's Method of Appropriating Perry's Laurels.

HE CAPTURED A MEXICAN TOWN.

The Envious Commodore Orders the Middy's Arrest for Disregarding Instructions.—Congress Interferes.

Charles G. Hunter, or "Alvarado" Hunter, as he was called in the navy, was one of the passed midshipmen during the Mexican war, and had been fifteen years in the service before he had an opportunity to show the stuff of which he was made. The operations of the naval squadron in the Gulf of Mexico, under the command of Commodore Matthew C. Perry, known as "Bulldog" Perry, extended from Tampico on the north along the whole line of Mexican coast south, blockading, bombarding and capturing the several seaport towns.

After the surrender of Vera Cruz it was reported to the gruff old commodore that munitions of war were running the blockade up the river to Alvarado, a very important fortified town held by the Mexicans. The commodore gave Passed Midshipman Hunter command of an army transport about as large as a common coal barge, which was armed with two brass howitzers and manned by fifteen seamen. He was given strict orders to go down the coast and blockade the town of Alvarado and its harbor by night and day, and to continue to do so until the commodore arrived with his fleet to shell the place into submission.

Away went Hunter, the first independent command he had ever had. When he was off the harbor he began to shell the beach, then gradually approaching the town and finding no resistance commenced to shell the place itself. To his great delight and still greater surprise, after four or five hours' shelling the Mexican flag was lowered, and a flag of truce announced the surrender of the town. Hunter immediately landed all of his force of fifteen men, leaving the steamer in charge of the engineers and firemen, and formally took possession of the town and fortifications.

In a few days Commodore Perry arrived with his grand fleet, prepared for a long siege, and his mind inflated with the idea that the capture of the place would add greatly to his laurels. Soon, to his infinite disgust and surprise, he saw the small steamer that was in his van signal to the flagship, on whose quarter deck he stood in supreme command, "that the American flag was now flying over the fortifications of Alvarado." Swelling with indignation the commodore sent a boat with orders for Hunter to repair immediately on board of the flagship and report to him.

Hunter obeyed the order at once, and all the officers of the vessel knowing Hunter well, and anxious to learn how the episode would end, crowded around the excited commodore. When Hunter stepped on the ship Perry forebore the usual courtesy of receiving him in his cabin, and ordered him to the quarter deck. As soon as he reached the spot where the commodore stood the latter, in an indignant tone, asked Hunter, "What is the meaning of all this, sir?"

"It means that I have captured Alvarado," replied Hunter, "because we are at war with Mexico."

His answer so exasperated the commodore that all formalities ended and he roared out:

"Go below! Consider yourself in arrest; I'll have you court-martialed. You have disobeyed orders. Who ordered you to take Alvarado. I told you to blockade it only!"

Hunter remained in his room a week, and, seeing no court in view, wrote a letter to the commodore demanding his immediate release from arrest or a trial. The commodore did neither, but sent him to the United States under charges.

The newspapers got hold of the facts and published a full account of the affair, and Hunter went to Washington and demanded an investigation. Public indignation was aroused at Commodore Perry's unwarranted course, and congress, taking up the matter, passed a vote of thanks to Hunter for his gallant action. He was at once given command of a schooner called the Shark and sent up the Mediterranean, where he remained three years. There he was known to the inhabitants of Port Mahon as "Capt. Alvarado Hunter, of the Big Fish." Hunter died in the Naval hospital in New York in 1854.—Kansas City Star.

The Force of Incongruity.

"Have you ever noticed what delight half the human race find in pure incongruity?" said one spectator to another the other night at a variety performance.

"I do not understand you."

"Well, take for instance that comic man on the stage. He is amusing a lot of respectable and presumably intelligent people by playing a violin first over one shoulder, then over the other, then behind his back, above his head, under his knee—in fact in every position except the natural and convenient one. The music is bad as music, the contortions are too simple to be of any acrobatic value and there is no relation between these two ideas by which one can add significance to the other. Why will people be amused by the simple association of two unrelated things, either of which they would find insufferably tedious by itself?"—Kate Field's Washington.

Culture in Boston.

The vicinity of Harvard college perhaps has its effect on the language of the Hub. Thus a young collegian lately entered a shop in Boston, and wishing to adapt himself to the standard of English common, as he supposed, among tradesmen, asked the attendant for some pants. "Certainly, sir," replied the person addressed. "William, this gentleman wants to see some trousers." I regret to say that in New York shops of a similar grade the salesmen will sometimes tell you that "this is an elegant pant for boys' summer wear."—Jenness-Miller Magazine.

Too Lazy to Live.

The laziest man in Scotland is said to have been the joiner who, after repeated dismissals from his employment by his master, was at length forcibly laid in a coffin by his shopmates and carried off for burial by way of a joke. On the way they met a farmer, who asked if the man was dead.

"No," was the reply, "but we intend to bury him; he is that lazy that he should not be allowed to live."

At the farmer's request they took off the lid, when the farmer asked the lazy one if he thought he could eat two or three boiled taties.

"Are they peeled?" inquired the man.

"No," returned the farmer.

"Ah, weel, let the funeral gang on."

Medical Nomenclature.

Judge, jury, lawyers and spectators were treated to an exhibition of professional priggishness in division No. 2 of the circuit court the other afternoon that was decidedly refreshing. The case of H. G. Bouham against the Kansas City Railway company was on trial before Judge Slover. The case is one for $30,000 damages for injuries sustained in an accident, and considerable medical testimony had to be taken.

A young doctor was put on the stand who was determined to display his learning, and he was successful. When he started off he did so with the easy gait of one who feels he has the nomenclature of his profession at his tongue's end, for every sentence he uttered was so mixed with technical terms that an ordinary person could scarcely understand him. When he took the witness stand he glanced patronizingly at the jury and the rest in the court room, and in answer to the first question rattled off a lot of medical terms that drew the attention of every one in the room. Judge Slover looked at him a moment and then said:

"Use plain English, doctor; I know you can if you try."

The witness looked around and said, "Yes, sir; certainly, sir."

"Now, doctor, where did you say Mr. Bouham was injured?"

"On the posterior portion"——

"Speak plainly, doctor," admonished the court.

"Well, he suffered a severe contusion of the posterior of the abdomen" (turning to the jury with a familiar wave of his hand). "He was bruised in the rear of the stomach. In other words, his back was hurt."

Judge Slover looked worried while the witness continued to answer another question.

"When I examined him I first removed his clothes, you know, and in feeling him I could determine that the abdominal wall was baggy and tender, and he appeared to be suffering from a touch of the" (here followed a name as long as one's arm), "and the dorsal vertebræ were severely contused. In other words," again turning to the jury with a wave of his hand, "his backbone had been rubbed."

When the witness left the stand every one looked relieved and Judge Slover mopped his brow, for the ordeal made the perspiration flow freely.—Kansas City Times.

Postoffice Detectives' Gallery.

There have recently been many complaints to the postmaster concerning the loss of registered letters in the Philadelphia office, and the officials have been greatly worried by the charges that there were thieves in the service. It has been decided to erect a gallery along the roof of the working room, from which watchmen can look down upon the entire force without being seen from below. This gallery will be eighty feet long, and will depend from the glass and iron ceiling by iron supports. In it there will be frequent small windows with swinging sashes, from which the watchman can see every part of the great room where the stamping and distributing is all done. Here there are 300 men at work at times, and it is impossible to oversee all of them from any other point than above.

The watch is to be kept not alone for the purpose of watching for thefts, but also to see that men do not shirk their work or disturb other clerks by conversation. The gallery will be reached by an iron stairway at its southern end, and at its northern end another iron stairway will ascend to the glass roof. There are two of these roofs, one above the other, and it is necessary for workmen to ascend to the lower one to clean it of dust. There is now no way to reach there except by putting up a ladder. It is said that it is purely for this purpose that the gallery goes up, but there is another use. There has been talk of having such a structure for nearly two years. Assistant Custodian George Painter has been agitating the matter, and has finally succeeded in getting the work done.—Philadelphia Record.

Porpoise Shooting.

Porpoise shooting is the newest sport at Cape May. The seaward end of the pier is the favorite rendezvous for those who want to get a shot at the swiftly moving fish. The marksman must have a steady hand and always be in readiness to shoot, because the movements of the porpoise are so uncertain that one does not have time to raise the gun to the shoulder before they are out of sight beneath the water. The women take as much interest in the sport as the men, and quite a number are out every afternoon perched on the lower deck of the pier, rifle in hand, and waiting for a good chance to shoot. The sport seems to lie more in the attempt to capture big game than in successful results, as it is quite rare for one of the fish to be killed and washed up on the shore.—Exchange.

No Peaches This Year.

A letter from Dover, Del., to The Baltimore American says: "A drive through what ought to be the center of the peach belt—lower Kent and upper Sussex counties—will convince any one that the much abused peach liar of this peninsula will have no chance this season, for the reason that there are no peaches to lie about." There are miles and miles of thrifty looking peach orchards wholly destitute of fruit. The buds were killed by cold, sleety rains in the spring.

Midsummer Recreation in Philadelphia.

A big crowd gathered around a Ridge avenue oyster saloon yesterday watching a basket of clams in the role of fly catchers. Hungry flies were attracted by hundreds, but venturing too near the open mouths of the bivalves the shells closed on them in an instant.—Philadelphia Press.

Notice to Insurance Companies.

This is the time when insurance companies should rank the driver of the trotting horse as an extra hazardous risk. If he is not being killed by a railroad collision, or by somebody taking off the wheel of the sulky on the track, he is being "dumped" in the pools.—Detroit Free Press.

THE SEA PUSS.

Human Sacrifices Claimed by this Terrible Monster of the Deep.

FRUITLESS FIGHTS WITH DEATH.

The Bather Who is Once Caught in the Toils Rarely Escapes to Tell the Story.—Cause of the Puss.

Few persons as they sit on the shore and gaze on the ocean realize the whole truth of the waves. Fewer still comprehend the many dangers that lurk along the sands within two or three hundred feet of the shore. The white caps chase each other in roricksome frolic, the waves in their undulating motion give a restful and quieting feeling to the spectator, and the fascination of plunging into the surf and toying with the breakers grows apace.

Who would suspect, much less suspicion, that there could be any danger within a hundred feet of the shore? Why, the water scarcely reaches to one's hips. There are hundreds of people in the surf, and a suggestion of peril would be treated with derision. And yet the very moment the sense of security seems greatest, that moment the "sea puss" selects for its work. A swish of water, a sinking of the sand under one's feet, a sudden current of mighty strength, and the "sea puss" has seized the bather for its own.

A BATTLE WITH DEATH.

Those who have seen a victim succumb to the "sea puss" never forget it. The scene beggars description. The victim sportively and wantonly plunges and plays in the surf, entirely unconscious of danger.

The shore is only a little distance away. Suddenly a cry of danger is heard. The victim is seized by a mighty force, and finds himself powerless to reach the beach. Every effort to do so not only exhausts his strength, but sends him further into the ocean. In the awful excitement of the moment despair comes upon him. Suddenly he sinks once, then twice, and now all is over.

The "sea puss" has claimed its tribute—a human sacrifice. Lifeboat and lifeline seem too slow to effect a rescue. The victim has passed beyond the pale of human assistance.

The "sea puss" is an outward current of great power between two sand flats. This current carves a channel of greater or less depth in its course, which extends to the bar or ocean proper. The channel is almost always at right angles to the shore, and serves as a sluiceway for a great volume of water. The "sea puss" has several points in common with the wind—you cannot tell whence it comes or whither it goes. It appears without the least warning, stays a few hours, a few days, perhaps a few weeks, and it has been known to linger in a vicinity for even a whole year. The bather usually takes a liking to some particular spot where the shores slope easily, the bottom is sandy and the small waves roll in with musical cadences.

On a day, even while he is standing on the spot, he feels the ground under his feet cut away, and lo! the "sea puss" is at hand!

Again, the bather will go into the surf day after day, and thinks himself perfectly at home. What is his surprise on entering the ocean a little later to find that a great channel has been cut through his accustomed place, and that one misstep will perhaps send him to eternity. The "sea puss" seems to be here and there and everywhere, and safety to the bather is only to be had at the price of eternal vigilance.

AN EXPERT OPINION.

A reporter talked with several persons along the coast regarding the "sea puss." Perhaps the best account was received from Capt. Lambert Edwards, of the Deal Life Saving station, at Loch Arbour. Capt. Edwards is a veteran in the service, and has a crew of seven men under him to man the life boat.

"The 'sea puss' is one of the worst enemies of the bathers," said he, "and claims more victims than even the tiger of the beach—the undertow. The reason so few escape from its clutches is that its operations are so sudden and unexpected that few recover from their fright at its appearance in time to save themselves. People go in bathing on the sand flats and bars near the shore, and think themselves out of harm's reach. They move hither and thither, driven by the big waves or the undertow, when suddenly they find themselves in a strong current, and at the same time the water becomes quite deep. The current has carried them to a channel whose depth is over their heads, while fifteen or twenty feet on either side the water's depth is only to the waist. Of course the bather becomes frightened beyond measure at this sudden turn of affairs, and loses all presence of mind. He wildly strikes out, vainly endeavoring to make headway against the force that is driving him seaward. If he understood the nature of the 'sea puss' and would keep cool he might save himself. But it almost invariably happens that he loses his head and does the thing which most surely hastens his destruction—namely, tries to oppose his strength to that of the current. The best swimmer is powerless in the arms of the 'sea puss.' His only salvation is to swim along with it, but at the same time to head for the flats on either side. In this way he gets out of the dangerous channel, and consequently the tremendous strength of the current, and soon lands on one of the sand bars.

"Our experience with the 'sea puss' covers many years, and we know no more about it now than when we first saw its workings. It appears suddenly along our strips of beach, stays maybe a few hours, and then disappears, only to turn up again at an unlooked for moment and in an unexpected place. We have known it to remain in one spot all summer—yes, all the year—and then, again, to tarry hardly an hour.

"It seems to be caused by flats of sand, like a gridiron, over which the waves dash as they plunge toward shore. The volume of water in the intervening spaces must find an outlet to the sea. Accordingly, all the eddying currents north and south unite in one grand channel with which to return this vast volume of water to the sea. The 'sea puss' is, in fact, nothing more than a mighty undertow concentrated in one small ditch leading seaward.

"As a general thing a 'sea puss' is not more than fifty feet wide, so that if you were ever caught in the center of the channel you would have only twenty-five feet to swim on either side."—Spring Lake Cor. New York World.

THE QUEEN'S YACHT.

Features of the Floating Palace in Which Her Majesty Makes Cruises.

The exquisite cleanliness of everything strikes one forcibly on board the Victoria and Albert. The deck is laid with cork floor cloth, over which, when the queen is on board, a carpet is placed, and everything else that is to be seen is of pure white, with gilded relief work and silver mountings.

There are very comfortable little sitting rooms on the promenade deck and behind the paddle wings, and there is also a dining room on the promenade deck which has three big windows and a skylight. It is furnished in green morocco and the ceiling is painted in white and gold. The state apartments below are placed on either side of the corridor and they are furnished with a very pretty chintz. The queen's cabins are on the starboard side, and her sleeping apartment contains a large and old fashioned but very comfortable looking bedstead with pillows and canopy, and next is the dressing room, which was formerly Prince Albert's cabin, and it remains as he left it, his little writing table and wardrobe never having been moved.

Large maps hang upon the walls. The cabins occupied by Princess Beatrice (or any princess who happens to be traveling with the queen) are all of her majesty's quarters, and on the other side of the corridor are the cabins of the princess and a large bath room. The breakfast room is in the after part of the vessel, and is hung with all the portraits of all the officers who have commanded the royal yacht.

The drawing room is forward on the port side and is furnished in bird's-eye maple, with a piano and several beautifully carved side tables. It is hung with portraits of members of the royal family, and in this room is a small library. The yacht is now lighted with electricity, except in the queen's own cabins.—London Truth.

Polishing Wood with Charcoal.

A method of polishing wood with charcoal, which is much used by French cabinet makers, is described in a Paris technical journal. It is only applicable to things made of carefully selected woods, of a close and compact grain. They are first covered with a coat of camphor dissolved in water, and almost immediately afterward with another coat, composed chiefly of sulphate of iron and nut gall. The two compositions, in blending, penetrate the wood and give it an indelible tinge and render it impervious to the attacks of insects. When these two coats are dry, they rub the surface of the wood at first with a very hard brush of couch grass—chien dent—and then with charcoal of substances as light and friable as possible, because if a single hard grain remained in the charcoal this alone would scratch the surface, which they wish to render perfectly smooth. The flat parts are rubbed with natural stick charcoal and the indented portions and crevices with charcoal powder. Alternately with the charcoal the workman also rubs his piece of furniture with flannel soaked in linseed oil and essence of turpentine. These pouncings repeated several times cause the charcoal powder and the oil to penetrate the wood, giving the article of furniture a beautiful color and a perfect polish, which has none of the flaws of ordinary varnish.

Rich Men's Sons.

Examples of this law of heredity are plentiful among the financial leaders. The Astors and Vanderbilts of this generation have shown themselves well worthy to uphold the great monetary dynasties founded by their ancestors, and there is not in either family a spendthrift or an unworthy member. W. W. Astor has done some creditable literary work. Jay Gould's sons are likely to carry out his projects and increase the magnitude of his fortune. Robert Bonner's heritage is well cared for by his sons. The Ames family, which started its fortune by making shovels and increased it in Credit Mobilier, has an able member in Oliver Ames, who has twice been governor of Masachusetts. "Old Hutch's" son in Chicago is at 30 the president of a bank and director of a score of financial institutions. James L. Flood, son of the bonanza prince, and most prominent of the scions of mushroom wealth, has been at the head of the great Nevada bank.—Epoch.

Why the Students Smiled.

A famous college president, a clergyman, was addressing the students in the chapel at the beginning of the college year. "It is," he said in conclusion, "a matter of congratulation to all the friends of the college that this year opens with the largest freshman class in its history." And then, without any pause, he turned to the Scripture lesson for the day, the third Psalm, and began reading in a voice of thunder:

"Lord, how are they increased that trouble me."

This, however, was hardly more unfortunate than the choice of the hymn: "Return, ye ransomed sinners, home," as the closing selection of a certain American board meeting.—Syracuse Christian Herald.

Women Who Cultivate Mustaches.

The Portuguese women accept the mustache and cultivate it as young men do, curling the ends. On a very delicate face the little feminine mustache is not always disagreeable; but to one who has passed the blossoming hour this heavy dark masculine belonging becomes almost an offensive feature—to foreign eyes at least. But it is said to be agreeable to Peninsular eyes.—New York Telegram.

That a private fortune is a public purse and that Socialism is something more than a dream of the masses has been practically demonstrated by the will of the late M. Chauteloup, of Montreal, the owner of a large brass foundry. His entire fortune of $500,000 is distributed among his 500 workmen, and the works are to be carried on as before under the direction of his foreman.—Washington Critic.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 2 .....1892.

There are certain political analogies that are almost conclusive, and we think that we have one in hand that will be accepted as instructive by most people. Nearly every one whose memory goes back for sixteen years, remembers the presidential contest in which Tilden, though elected, was cheated out of the presidency by the eight to seven bunco game. As a result of a phenomenal campaign, in which every expiring energy of the Republican party was put to the test, under the supervision of the grim Grant himself. When the result was disclosed, Tilden needed only one electoral vote to be declared president, while the republican candidate, Rutherford B. Hayes, needed nineteen—this exclusive of the votes of Louisiana, South Carolina and Florida, which really, one and all, declared their preference for Mr. Tilden, with a possible doubt as to the alectoral votes of South Carolina. There was no possible moral doubt as to the seven votes of South Carolina, because that state was really under a military duresse, and the cap sheaf of the structure was negro domination, and under such African leaders as the celebrated Governor Moses, at that. Even Republicans however, now admit that Louisiana and and Florida went Democratic against all carpet-bag and scalawag and military domination; and that, consequently, Mr. Tilden was elected president, with at least ten or eleven electoral votes to spare, and with a large popular majority. Now, we do not indulge in these reminiscences to recall the melancholy eight to seven iniquity in which the manhood of the American nation went down. Our object is to call attention to the fact that the Demoratic tidal wave of 1874 was strong enough to reach to and insure success in 1876 if the eight to seven fraud of that year had not been consummated. The popular sentiment in favor of the Democracy was so strong that year that a congress which was three-fourths Republican was converted into one that was two-thirds Democratic. Just here comes in the analogy. The present congress, which is so overwhelmingly Democratic in its membership, and which contains a Democratic majority of nine counting by states, was elected in 1890 as a protost against the McKinley bill, just as the congress of 1874—the forty-fourth congress—was elected as a protest against the Credit Mobilier and the pack pay steal. The one popular wave lasted two years and elected a Democratic president. The second will elect a Democratic president and see him seated. "The caaes being altered. that alters the case." There is no longer any possible machinery of fraud thanked be the gods of high and low degree.

SUMMONS.

IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT OF THE SECond Township in the County of Inyo, State of California.

EMMONS SPENCER, Plaintiff, vs. WILLIAM EVA, Defendant.

The People of the State of California send greeting to William Eva, Defendan: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Justice's Court of the Second Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer before the Justice at his office in said Township the complaint filed therein, within five days (exclusive of the day of service), after the service on you of this summons—if served within the Township in which the action is brought; or, if served out of said Township, but in said County, within ten days; otherwise within twenty days.

This action is brought to recover of you the sum of One hundred and thirty-three and 75-100 ($133.75) dollars due from you to Plaintiff for services rendered to you by Plaintiff as collector and attorney between the 15th day of November, 1891, and the 20th day of May, 1892, as more fully appears in complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to so appear and answer said complaint as above required, said Plaintiff will take judgement against you by default for the sum of $133.75, together with costs of suit.

Given under my hand this 24 day of July 1892.
DENNIS J. HESSIAN.
Justice of the Peace of said Township.
EMMONS SPENCER, Attorney for Plaintiff.

ALIAS SUMMONS.

IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT OF THIRD Township, County of Inyo, State of California.

JOHN WELCH, Plaintiff, vs. JESUS ENSENAS, Defendant.

The people of the State of California send greeting to Jesus Ensenas, Defendant:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the Justice's Court of Third Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer before the Justice at his office in said Township, the Complaint filed therein, within five days (exclusive of the day of service), after the service on you of this Summons—if servedwithin the Township in which this action is brought, or, if served out of said Township, but in said County, within ten days; or within twenty days if served elsewhere.

The said action is brought to obtain judgment against you for the sum of $38.60 alleged to be due plaintiff upon an account for work, labor and services performed by one J. W. Murphy in the line of general blacksmith work and for materials furnished you in and about said work at your request, between the 26th day of August, 1890, and the 3rd day of May, 1892, and which said account was assigned to plaintiff herein on the 5th day of July, 1892, and before the commencement of this action, as more fully appears by the complaint on file herein, to which you are referred.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, said plaintiff will take judgment against you for the sum of $38.60, together with costs of suit.

Given under my hand this 12th day of July, 1892. IRV. H. MULHOLLAND.
Justice of the Peace of said Township.

Social dance to-night at Mairs' Hall.

B. F. Gray came up from Keeler yesterday morning.

Mrs. John Lubken of Lone Pine visited Independence on Tuesday.

From October 1st, 1891 to August 15th, 1892 Mono county collected $11,066.50 for licenses.

All over the Pacific Coast water is scarcer this year than has been known for many years.

County Clerk Yandell visited Bishop during the week. He returned home Wednesday evening.

The Carson river is said to be lower than at any time within the memory of the white settlers.

Bob Stewart is a candidate for re-election for Sheriff of Esmeralda county. Mr. Stewart is a pleasant, courteous gentleman and has made a good officer.

A terrible outbreak of cholera has occurred in Germany and spread to England. It is feared that dreadful scourge will yet reach the United States.

There are ten horses in training at Independence for the coming Fair, and report says there are as many more at Bishop. The races should be very good this year.

A. W. Eibeshutz will start for san Francisco to-morrow morning. He expects to be gone about ten days and while in the city will buy a fine stock of fall and winter goods.

Don't forget the social dance to-night. Come out and have a good time and at the same time get a little practice for the grand Fair Ball.

John F. Davis, Republican nominee for Congress from this District will make a campaign tour through Mono and Inyo counties. He will orate at Independence on Monday, Sept. 12th.

The Smith Brothers' threshing machine has been busy for several days past in this vicinity. It pulled into town yesterday and put up at Robinson's place. They report the crops generally as being very light.

James McCarty and Henry Malone came down from Fish Springs yesterday with a broken casting from the arastra. It will be necessary to send to Carson and have a new one made and this will delay work for about three weeks.

A comparison of the purses offered by the 16th District for the coming races with those of Bakersfield and other far more pretentios fairs reflects to the liberality of our Lone people. Our purses average larger than any of them.

Mr. Fred Eaton left Lone Pine Sunday for Los Angeles. We are informed that he made a proposition to the Lone Pine Canal Co. which was accepted by them. He is expected to return.

Professor H. C. Hampton will teach the following term of the Big Pine school. Mr. Hampton bears an excellent reputation in Mono county and the Big Pine school trustees are to be congratulated on having secured the services of an able teacher.

Dr. I. J. Woodin announces himself as a candidate for Coroner and Public Administrator subject to the action of the Republican County Convention. Dr. Woodin is well qualified for the position and his claims should meet with due consideration.

Social dance to-night at Mairs' Hall

J. White Smith arrived at Independence yesterday on his way home from a visit to San Francisco and the San Juaquin Valley. J. A. Bacon expected to return with him, but the day before he intended to start he was thrown from his horse and severely injured. Billy Mitchell and the remainder of the party will return in a few days.

John Barnes of Keeler announces himself as a candidate for the Democratic nomination of Sheriff. Mr. Barnes is an old time resident of this county and has a host of friends. During the many years he has been in the hotel business at Lone Pine and Keeler he has shown that he possesses qualifications necessary in a man who deals with the public. He will make a "strong, hard fight."

The Stockholders and Directors of the Big Pine Canal Co. met Saturday and decided to complete their canal. It is estimated that $2,500 will pay all expenses, and an assessment of 20 cents per share was levied. Work will be commenced on the 12th inst. The canal covers some of the best land in this county and when completed will be valuable property. The vacancy in the Board of Directors caused by the death of Jas. B. Steward was filled by the appointment of J. W. McMurry.

The Cunning Little Index Man.

The local railroad hand-organ is getting wofully short of music. But the C. & C. monkey must don his little white jacket and cut some sort of antics to prove to his railroad employers that he is worthy of his hire. In this week's issue he publishes two articles from the INDEPENDENT bearing dates of a year and a half apart. Both articles are strictly and literally true; and the incident mentioned in the latter article is but the exception which proves the rule of the former. It seems to be beyond the Index man's ability to rise above a form of low and contemptible cunning. His mind is too much warped by a life of petty trickstering to grasp a large and sound idea. It is quite possible that two or three, or perhaps even a half a dozen families as industrious and thrifty as that of H. Glade could make a comfortable living in various parts of Owens Valley; but to suppose that large colonies could do as well with the present limited market is preposterous. In the same article, of which the Index so cunningly publishes only a part, Mr. Yering is quoted as saying:

"If we hauled your farm produce over over our road entirely free of freight charges you could not compete at Reno even, and if what you say of your farming operations be true, your county is not worth a dollar a mile."

So much for the owner of the monkey. The same article also contained the following:

With a high rate of taxation and $60 per ton freight on all goods, wares and merchandise brought into the county, it is at once apparent that prosperity is an impossibility. No intelligent man ever visited Owens Valley without being impressed with its great natural resources. It is the best watered valley in the State. It contains not less than half a million acres that could be irrigated and made to produce fairly good crops. All of the fruits of the Temperate zone do well, and with access to market fruit growing would be quite profitable. But the fact that these resources exist, and yet the country is not prospering, is proof enough that there is need of a change somewhere. The more fully and truthfully the facts are stated, the sooner will the needed change be effected.

And the INYO INDEPENDENT has always declared, and time but adds to the truth of the assertion, that so far as natural conditions are concerned, Owens Valley cannot be surpassed. Such little monkeyshines as the Index is only capable of cause but a smile that is in itself proof of the contempt in which the producer of it is held.

A Distinguished Lecturer.

John Dickenson A. M. delivered a most interesting lecture at the M. E. Church last Sunday evening. Mr. Dickenson has been elected Professor of Natural Sciences and mathematics of the Throop University, Pasadena. He is a native of Philadelphia, educated in the West Town Friends School and Wesleyan University. He came to California in 1854, and taught mathematics and sciences for three years in the University of the Pacific. He then returned to the east and spent three years in the Sheffield Scientific Schoool, after which he gave twenty years of service to the ministry, chiefly in New York, Brooklyn and vicinty. Returning to California in 1886, he has since been a member of the faculty of the University of Southern California, and has been known throughout the State as a brilliant lecturer.

Leahey's Murderer

A Mexican has been arrested at Los Angeles supposed to be Rivada who murdered Leahey at Mono Lake. He tallies with the description, admits he has been in Mono county, says his mother is dead, but that she had lived in San Bernardino county. He gave his name as Sotello. Sheriff Cody has received no telegram or letters in regard to him and is in the dark. He may hear something by to-nights mail. —Chronicle Union.

In connection with the Conference at Bishop a "grand educational rally" was held on Monday evening. Bishop Vincent gave a magnificent address on "General Education". After the address the meeting was taken charge of by Dr. Van Deventer, and under his wise generalship the the noble sum of $4,700 was subscribed in about an hour. By this action the Academy is placed in a safe position. The enthusiasm of that large meeting speaks well for the future of the institution.

T. C. Boland came up from Keeler on yesterday's train. Several days ago his right hand began swelling, the inflamation extending up the arm. He does not know what caused the ailment, but it appears to be the bite or sting of a venomous insect, and as it became extremely painful Mr. Boland came up for medical treatment.

Mono county is having a hard experience with drunken Indians. The natives refuse to divulge the secret of the whisky supply and continue to have a lively time. Thanks to Sheriff Gorman Inyo county is but little troubled with drunken Piutes.

ALIAS SUMMONS.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.

FRIED RICKE RHINE, Executrix of the will of Nathan Rhine, deceased, plaintiff, vs. W. L. HUNTER, CAROLINE HUNTER and J. L. PORTER, defendants.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and the Complaint filed in the office of the Clerk of said County.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIfornia send greeting to W. L. Hunter, Caroline L. Hunter and J. L. Porter, defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, as such executrix, in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county, or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment of this Court for the foreclosure of a certain mortgage described in said complaint and executed by the said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L Hunter on the 10th day of April, 1889, to secure the payment of a certain Promissory Note made by the said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L Hunter to the said Nathan Rhine, now deceased, for the sum of $2,400, with interest thereon from the said 10th day of April, 1889, at the rate of 1¼ per cent per month, described in the complaint, which by the lapse of time is now due, no part of which has been paid excepting $60 paid April 10th, 1889, $144 paid October 10th, 1889, $110.35 paid May 10th, 1890, $75 paid September 20th, 1890, $72 paid December 27th, 1890 and $66 paid November 28th, 1891.

Said note is dated April 10th, 1889, that the premises conveyed by said mortgage may be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of said note and interest thereon and costs of suit and the further sum of 10 per cent on the amount of the judgment found due as counsel fees as provided in said mortgage, and in case such proceeds are insufficient to pay the same, that judgment be docketed against said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L Hunter for the balance remaining due, and also that the said defendants, and all persons claiming by through or under may be barred and foreclosed of all right, title, claim, lien, equity of redemption, and interest in and to said mortgaged premises, and for other and further relief, as will more fully appear by reference to the complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint.

Witness my hand, and the Seal of the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, this 15th day of August, A. D. 1892.

[SEAL] J. N. YANDELL, Clerk.

All Experts Use Royal Baking Powder

Perfect and uniform success in making finest food is more certain with Royal Baking Powder than with any other. Use it in every receipt calling for a baking powder, or cream of tartar and soda, and the best results in pure, wholesome, appetizing food are assured. Experts use it because it adds to their success. Physicians and Health Officers recommend it because it adds to the wholesomeness of the food.

MARION HARLAND: "I regard the Royal Baking Powder as the best in the market. Since its introduction into my kitchen I have used no other."

M. GORJU, late Chef, Delmonico's, New-York: "In my use of Royal Baking Powder, I have found it superior to all others."

A. FORTIN, Chef, White House, for Presidents Arthur and Cleveland: "I have tested many baking powders, but for finest food can use none but 'Royal.'"

"August Flower"

"One of my neighbors, Mr. John Gilbert, has been sick for a long time. All thought him past recovery. He was horribly emaciated from the inaction of his liver and kidneys. It is difficult to describe his appearance and the miserable state of his health at that time. Help from any source seemed impossible. He tried your August Flower and the effect upon him was magical. It restored him to perfect health to the great astonishment of his family and friends." John Quibell, Holt, Ont.

AN EXPLANATION AND ANSWER.

WHAT IS WINTERILLA?

Why, it is a pleasant and effective remedy for the positive cure of Chapped Hands, Poison Oak, Salt Rheum, Eczema, Sun Burn, Tan; positively removes Freckles, and is one of the grandest luxuries for gentlemen after shaving. This is an exquisite article prepared with the greatest care by scientific experts. Its component parts are perfectly harmless, and the ladies toilet is not complete without it. One trial will convince the most skeptical that what we say of WINTERILLA is true. For sale by all druggists in 25c and 50c bottles.

THE LAST DECADE.

When murky clouds that pall a summer day
Do, ere its close, dissolve and drift away,
What joyous smiles break o'er the sunlit plain,
How stirs the dormant pulse of life again!
And in the afterglow of fading light
There breathes a promise of a morrow bright:
So at this century's eventide—whose years
Vain hopes have wrought to merge in darkening fears—
Doth man rejoice; for from a rifted west
Assuring rays beam 'cross his weary quest,
Dull, leaden skies now change to gladdening hues;
The waiting heart its cherished song renews:
That song divine!—not less its power than when
'Twas first heard—"Peace on earth, good will to men."

—Gilbert S. Fletcher in New Nation.

Music, Welsh and Basque.

Having two American friends stopping with us, we brought a nice Welsh girl from Dolgelly one evening to sing to them the national songs. Miss Madge Roberts, a sweet, pretty young lady and excellent singer, went over an immense repertory of Welsh music, and Miss S. who is a very scientific musician, made many remarks on the peculiarities of the Welsh scale, etc. Suddenly she exclaimed: "I cannot think what music it is that I know that these Welsh tunes so much resemble. Stay, it is Basque!" and she proceeded to hum three or four typical Basque songs. Miss Roberts and all of us instantly recognized the similarity of these with the Welsh, especially the oldest Welsh, songs which she had been singing.

Miss S. was very much surprised when I told her that Professor Boyd Dawkins believed in the original identity of the Basque and pre-Celtic Welsh, a theory of which she was quite ignorant, so that her testimony to the similarity of the national music was entirely spontaneous.

I am not musical, and my opinion is of no value, but there does appear to me to be in the old Welsh music, as in a great deal of the Welsh character, a distinctly non-Aryan spritelike character irreducible to the order so dear to the Saxon soul. The music goes on for a few bars with even, exaggerated emphasis on time as in a soldier's march, then suddenly, as if tired of it, bounds off among the bushes, hop, skip and jump and never comes back!—London Academy.

Stopped the Miracles.

The tomb of Saint Etienne de Muret canonized in 1088, in the Abbey of Grandmond, was so great an offender on account of the number of miracles that the religious were completely worn out by the rush of votaries. The prior devised, however, a very simple but effective remedy for this grievance. Betaking himself to the tomb, he spake as follows: "Servant of God, you preached to us the delights of solitude and yet you assemble in our retreat as many people as if it were a market or a fair. We are sufficiently persuaded of your sanctity not to be curious about your miracles. If, then, you will not leave off working them, we protest and declare on high, in virtue of the obedience we have promised you, that we will unearth your bones and throw them into the river." As might be expected, the threat was sufficient, and Saint Etienne de Muret did no more miracles.—All the Year Round.

A Useful Patrol Wagon.

A useful patrol wagon has been devised for electric railroaders. It is constructed very much like a police wagon but has a square tower rising out of it which is mounted by a ladder. The tower is raised or lowered by means of a crank and pulley, and when elevated to its full extent it is fifteen feet high. The consequence is that the lineman can drive under the wire to be repaired and be immediately placed by the raising of the tower on a level with his work. The patrol wagon is a great improvement on the old method of repairing, without its risks.—Exchange.

Shakespeare's Autograph Worth $100,000

"The most valuable autograph in the world is that of Shakespeare," said a dealer. "There are only three genuine autographs of Shakespeare in existence, and those are altogether out of the market. Bring me a genuine Shakespeare and I'll undertake to pay you $50,000, yes, $100,000, for it within a year. It might not sell immediately for a very large sum, but it would be sure to do so as soon as collectors were satisfied as to its genuineness and became properly excited about it."—Collector.

A Liberal Offer.

Seventeen years ago a young man in Chicago found a pocketbook containing several thousand dollars. Now, having made nearly a million dollars clear from this find, he advertises for the loser and expresses his "willingness to pay for the pocketbook and restore the amount of the contents."—Philadelphia Ledger.

When Taking Down the Stove.

In taking down the stove, if any soot should fall upon the carpet or rug, cover quickly with dry salt before sweeping, and not a mark will be left.—New York Journal.

The Hindoo makes his toes work at the loom, using them in his weaving operations with almost as much dexterity as he does his fingers.

Found Her at Last.

Thirty-three years ago, a dispatch from Montreal says, Milliam Henry Parker sailed with his newly wedded wife from Liverpool for Canada in the ship William and Mary. On the voyage Parker was swept overboard and was mourned as drowned. Two years later the widow, who had come here, married again, and several children blessed the union. A few days ago an elderly stranger called at the house and asked for Mrs. Parker. She responded and recognized him as her husband.

He said he had been rescued by a Portuguese ship and landed in South America. He could not get a passage home and determined to go to the interior to seek his fortune. He did so, writing to his wife at her parents' home in England. These letters she never received. He received no reply and believed her lost also. Time brought prosperity, and at last he determined to search for his wife in Canada. He came on and soon located her, only to find her the wife of another. A long consultation took place between them, and then Parker departed, leaving a check for a large sum and his blessing.

Railroad Accidents and Human Life.

During the year 1889 accidents on railroads involving human life were: Passengers killed, 315; passengers injured 2,138; employes killed, 2,070; employes injured, 20,148; other persons killed, 2,597 other persons injured, 3,602; total persons killed, 5,282; total persons injured, 25,888.

But the reports do not cover the total mileage of the country; only 92.792 per cent. of it. If the accident rate was the same on the roads not reporting, the total number killed was 5,693, and the total injured, 27,888. These are the returns made by the railroad companies themselves, and they cannot well be suspected of exaggeration. Neither is there, on the other hand, any reason to suppose that they are not, in most cases, complete and prepared with perfect good faith.

An idea of how great the risk is to railroad employes is shown by the records of the Brotherhood of Railroad Brakemen. One in 83 of the 10,052 members is killed yearly and one in 60 injured. A brakeman has only one chance in 4.7 of being allowed to die a natural death.—New York Herald.

A Prosperous Beggar.

A beggar, who for thirty years has been a familiar figure in St. Peter's, at Rome, has just died suddenly from apoplexy. The Roman correspondent of a London daily reports some curious circumstances in connection with this man, whose name was Pietro Marcolini. He was the only mendicant who was permitted to follow his calling within the church itself, Pius IX having granted him that privilege. Leo XIII confirmed it, and also, like his predecessor, granted an audience to the beggar, who was lame and afflicted. When Marcolini was received by Pius IX he complained of the cold he felt within the church, whereupon the pope bestowed upon him an old warm dressing gown of his own. This garment, however, the beggar wore only on great occasions, and the more solemn festivities of the church. He had been repeatedly offered large sums for it by foreigners, but always refused to part with it. Marcolini left an estate worth 50,000 francs.

Captured by a Sheriff on a Bicycle.

A week ago a young woman calling herself Josie Ellis, who has been employed at Gilbert's restaurant in Waukesha, Wis., was arrested on a charge of having stolen a watch, and was placed in jail to await her hearing. At the jail the prisoner was allowed to go about the house as she liked, and took her meals with the sheriff's family. Yesterday noon, however, she declined to go to her meal, and another prisoner, having the run of the building, was directed to report if she attempted to leave. Word came that the woman had departed. The sheriff mounted his bicycle and gave chase. The girl dodged from place to place, through streets and alleys and old buildings, and eluded her pursuer for half an hour or more, but he finally overhauled her. On her return to jail it was found that she had on six dresses and duplicate underclothing sufficient to make up a fair sized wardrobe.—Chicago Mail.

The Richest People on Earth.

The Osages are the richest people in the world. There are only about 1,600 in the tribe and they own 1,500,000 acres of land in the territory, on which they have large herds of cattle. Then they lease their land to cattlemen and derive an income of $20,000 per annum, which is used in running their government. But the greater part of their wealth is in cold cash in the vaults of the treasury department. The original grant to the tribe was 8,000,000 acres of land in Southern Kansas. By the treaty of 1866 they were paid $1.25 per acre for this land, and were also given their present reservation. Of the amount of the purchase price, about $8,000,000 is now placed to the credit of the tribe, not one cent of which they can touch, but are paid interest at the rate of 5 per cent. For some reason they have not been receiving the full amount of the interest, and there has accumulated almost $1,000,000, drawing no interest and remaining idle.—Kansas City Star.

Excavator Grabs.

A useful addition to a dredging plant is in use in California. Excavator "grabs" are slung on "booms" or spars more than 100 feet long and operated entirely by steam power, making trips in from one and a half to two minutes' time, and raising at each operation more than two tons of gravel, sand or other material. The weight of the grab, which is 6 feet in diameter and 11 feet high, is 37,000 pounds. The closing or penetrating force is 72,000, and is enough to charge the apparatus in hard ground or earth.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

A Girl's Serious Thoughtlessness.

A Seattle girl thoughtlessly told a friend that the names of the donors would not be displayed with the presents at her wedding. Of course the news got abroad, and when the day came not even the presents were displayed. They consisted of thirty-six plated sugar spoons and nineteen salt sprinklers.—Seattle Journal.

Professor Simonson says that there are now from 1,000,000 to 5,000,000 students of Volapuk in the world, of whom 1,000,000 are competent to use it; 1,200 business houses where it is employed, and 1,200 Volapuk text and reading books, as well as thirty well regulated Volapuk journals.

Backing Down Broadway.

It was about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, one day this week, the hour when the west side of Broadway is crowded with hurrying, home going folk.

Nearly opposite old Trinity the crowd parted right and left to prevent collision with a man who was literally backing down Broadway.

He held his course steadily, with perfect composure, very near the center of the walk, slowly making his way, slightly turning his head first to right and then to left, like an oarsman who wishes to be sure all is clear ahead.

Some few stopped to watch the unique spectacle; as a rule the living tide against which he was steering, moved on unconcerned. All bestowed a passing remark on the man, generally inaudible to the subject.

It has often been said that it takes but little to bring together a crowd in New York. Certainly the novelty of this man's movements was an exception.

When the backing pedestrian reached Battery park he sank wearily into a seat, with a sigh of evident relief.

On his head was a tall silk hat the worse for wear, but neatly brushed. His dark suit of clothes was rather venerable as to make, but carefully kept. His face was pale and rather refined.

"Did you win your bet?" asked a reporter who had seated himself by the man's side.

"What bet?" was the quiet reply.

"Didn't you just walk down Broadway backward?"

"Yes."

"Where did you start from?"

"Union Square."

"But you did it on a wager?"

"No."

"Religious vow, perhaps?"

"No."

"Would you mind telling me what you did do it for, then? To attract attention? It wasn't for an advertisement, was it?"

"Because I didn't want to face the people."

"But plenty of people saw you."

"Did they?" laconically.

"Why didn't you want to face them?"

"People make me tired."

"Are you in the habit of walking that way?"

"I am in the habit of minding my own business," rising as he spoke.

With wonderful delicacy of perception the reporter took the hint. All he knew was what his eyes had told him—that he had seen this man walking backward down Broadway, accompanied by a plethoric suspicion that some lunatic asylum was one inmate short.—New York Mail and Express.

Adroit Apache Thieves.

The Franco-Arabs of Algeria, reputed the keenest set of thieves that ever lived, could not compare in that respect with some of our North American Indians, especially in the matter of stealing horses and cattle. When Arivaca was occupied great precautions were taken to prevent the theft of stock.

The work animals were driven into a strongly made corral every evening after dark. A small adobe house, in which the vaqueros slept, stood opposite the entrance with the door fronting the gate, so that it was supposed nothing could go in or out without attracting the attention of the guard.

Watch dogs were kept, in order that the guard might be aroused in case he should happen to fall asleep during his watch, and the vaqueros were obliged to keep their doors open. The bars of the gate were fastened with a heavy chain lashed around them, so that the least movement would be likely to make a noise. Besides there were white men in several of the quarters, well armed and always on the alert.

With all these precautions a band of four or five Apaches came one night and attempted to cut through the wall by sawing a gap in it with their hair riatas; but they found the material too hard, and chose the alternative of making an attempt on the gate.

To get the bars down without making a noise, they carefully unfastened the chain, and taking it link by link in their scrapes as they moved it, actually succeeded in effecting an opening without even arousing the dogs.—Youth's Companion.

Misplaced Confidence.

An agent of the Grand Trunk railway who was in Rockland, Me., recently, told The Free Press of a boyish prank of his when he was in the employ of the railroad years ago. The road was then constructing that part of its line which touches the St. Lawrence river, and the wife of one of the English contractors was writing for an English magazine. One day when the boy was acting as driver for a party who were enjoying a sleigh ride upon the glare ice of the river, they saw a number of smelt fishermen, with their little fish houses upon handsleds, a stovepipe issuing from each roof, going to the fishing grounds. The lady asked what the buildings were and was told by the wicked youth that it was a custom with the inhabitants of this country to build their houses upon sleds, and that the winter time was their season of moving. This story, illustrated with a sketch of the houses, soon after appeared in English publications, and the bold, bad boy was unceremoniously bounced by an irate husband immediately upon the wife's ridiculous blunder coming to his notice. It is to be feared that other English writers on America have been the victims of similar misplaced confidence.

Neither Reasonable nor Right.

Nobody desires to have any safeguards touching malicious libel taken down, least of all the reputable press, or to relieve the newspapers from a just responsibility under the law. But when the law presumes malice in the publication of matters of current news coming through the Associated Press, for example, wherein no evil intent can possibly exist, the conditions imposed are neither reasonable nor right.—Bangor Commercial.

Intoxicated Bees.

A singular phenomenon is described in a Scotch journal. A particular species of willow tree was in flower, and attached to these blossoms, which resembled an old fashioned bottle brush, were a large number of the "big black bumble bees" with which every school boy is familiar. They remained a whole day sipping the extract of juice and then dropped helplessly to the ground, hardly able to move, and next morning were almost dead from exposure. One was observed to climb a vertical board a few inches and when near the top to throw out his legs and fall backward after the manner of the ordinary inebriate.—Chicago Herald.

A MOST GRAPHIC STORY.

IT IS TAKEN DIRECT FROM REAL LIFE.

A Charming New England Lady Tells Her Experience Both Abroad and in America.

(Boston Herald.)

The unwritten romances of life are more wonderful and far more interesting than the most vivid works of fiction. The one we are about to relate occurred in real life, and is both interesting and instructive.

Mrs. Jennie Ray formerly lived in Manchester, N. H. Her home was pleasant, her surroundings comfortable. In the year 1880 she visited England, and while in that country began to experience strange sensations. At first she attributed them to the change of climate, but they continued and increased, until finally, like many another woman, she became utterly discouraged.

It was while in this condition that Mrs. Ray returned to America and her home. Thousands of women who read this story can appreciate the condition in which Mrs. Ray then was, and sympathize with her suffering. Two prominent physicians were called and endeavored to do all in their power for her relief. In spite, however, of their skill Mrs. Ray grew weaker and more depressed, while the agony she endured seemed to increase. It was at this time that a noted physician who was called declared Mrs. Ray was suffering from cancer, said there was no help, and told her friends she could not live more than a week at the farthest.

And here comes the interesting part of the story, which we will endeavor to tell in Mrs. Ray's own words. She said:

"Unknown to all these physicians, I had been using a preparation of which I had heard much. I did not tell the physicians because I feared they would ridicule me, and perhaps order its discontinuance. During all the while that the physicians were attending me the preparation was steadily and faithfully doing its own work in its own way, and I had faith in its power. At last the doctor said there was no use of his coming, for he could do me no good. I had suffered so much that I was quite willing to die, but it seems I was nearer relief than I knew. One week from the day the doctor last called a false growth, as large as a coffee cup, and which looked as though it had been very large, left me. I sent for a doctor, and he declared it was a fibroid tumor, but said he had never known one to come away of itself before. I immediately began to gain health and strength, and I unhesitatingly declare that my rescue from death was due solely to the marvellous effects of Warner's Safe Cure, which was the remedy I took unknown to the physicians, and which certainly rescued me from the grave. It is my firm belief that many ladies who are said to die of cancer of the womb are cases like mine, and if they could be induced to use Warner's Safe Cure they, like me, might be saved."

The above graphic account is perfectly true in every respect. Mrs. Jennie Ray is now living at 142 West 6th street, South Boston, Mass., and if any lady doubts the above statement she can address Mrs. Ray, who will gladly answer all questions or grant an interview of a confidential nature to any lady who may choose to call upon her. It is said that "truth is stranger than fiction," and when the thousands of suffering, helpless women who are upon the road which physicians say leads only to death, consider the story as above given there is reason for hope and joy, even although they may be now in the depths of despondency and misery. To such ladies the above truthful account is willingly given.

Repentance is not so much remorse for what we have done, as the fear of consequences.

RUPTURE AND PILES CURED.

We positively cure rupture, piles and all rectal diseases without pain or detention from business. No cure, no pay. Also all Private diseases. Address for pamphlet Drs. Porterfield & Losey, 838 Market street, San Francisco.

Man's voice is given to him, like his other talents, to be used, and not to be abused.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

DEAD SEA FRUITS.

They slay multitudes when they are the product of neglect of incipient disease. A "slight" cold, a fit of indigestion, biliousness or constipation each or any of these "minor ailments" advance in many cases with "league-destroying strides." Give them a swift, early defeat with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters and avert the danger. Abernethy administered an alarming rebuke to the man who informed him that he had "only a cold!" "Only a cold," repeated the doctor. "What would ye have—the plague?" Rheumatism and la grippe are easily extinguishable at the start. Why then allow them to get up a full head of steam? Put on the brakes with the Bitters. The Genial warmth which this superb medicine diffuses through the system, the impetus it gives to the circulation of the blood, its soothing and strengthening effect upon the nervous, specially recommend it to the enfeebled and sick. Benefits of Reading Circles.

Reading circles seem to be all the rage now among young people of every class. Their multiplication, unlike many other successful institutions, is not due altogether to the fact that the idea is a fashionable one, for fashion and study hardly go hand in hand They are horses of different breed, different color and different proportions, and it is seldom that they can, from a comparative standpoint, be made to labor together. The necessity of education which is daily impressing itself more and more upon the youth of our times is the cause responsible for their existence. The benefit that the studious one derives from them is obviously great. A man reads a book and carries out of it a certain number of ideas. His knowledge of that book is not as great as if he received the ideas of thirty readers of it, each of whom views it differently to some degree.

This is the argument the young people make in favor of this prosperous institution, and a little reflection will show that it is not a bad one. I dropped in during the exercises of one of these circles during the week. Young men and women, the maximum age of whom was twenty-three, were laboring industriously over the French rebellion, and the way that they arranged the facts, throwing in detail while keeping clear and upper most the main ideas, was something marvelous. They had been colaboring for just one year and had in that time reviewed and studied American history and a dozen works of different standard authors.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Was Wellington Surprised?

The generally received notion that the Duke of Wellington was surprised receives full confirmation in many pages of "Waterloo Letters," and perhaps most markedly in a letter from Sir William Napier, the historian. Napier gives the following account from the duke's own mouth:

He found the Prince of Orange at the Duchess of Richmond's ball on the evening of the 15th. He was surprised to see him because he had placed him at Binche, an important outpost, for the purpose of observing and giving notice of the movements of the enemy. He went up to him and asked if there was any news. "No, nothing but that the French have crossed the Sambre and had a brush with the Prussians. Have you heard of it?" This was news. So he told him quietly that he had better go back to his post, and then by degrees he got the principal officers away from the ball and sent them to their troops. This was done, I think he said, about 11 o'clock. He then went to his quarters and found Muffling there, coming from Blucher with the news; he ought to have arrived long before, but said the duke to me, "I cannot tell the world that Blucher picked the fattest man in his army to ride with an express to me, and that he took thirty hours to go thirty miles."—London Academy.

Preserving Baby's Voice.

The phonograph has in its cylinder great possibilities of comfort, as more and more persons are beginning to discover. A New England father, whose business makes compulsory long periods of absence from home, has a dear little daughter of four years. The child is, alas! motherless, and the father writes thus to a friend: "When I next return east I shall take Baby to the phonograph makers and have an instrument made for her which will preserve her quaint utterances and her sweet voice. I shall take it with me always, and when I am weary and longing for home I shall set it in operation and listen to the music of her loving prattle."—Her Point of View in New York Times.

A Remarkable Record.

The statistician of the Delaware and Hudson Canal company railroad points with pride to the remarkable fact that on the Pennsylvania branch of this railroad not a single passenger has been killed since the road went into operation, twenty years ago. "It is also a matter of congratulation," he says, "that during that time four children have been born on the trains of that division—two of them twins." All four are alive, and one of them is an employee of the company.—Yankee Blade.

The Only Thing They Ever Did.

It is not generally known that John Bright's powers of sarcasm were almost unrivaled. Some of his sharpest utterances have been against members of the nobility. When boasts had been made of the antiquity of a prominent family, that their ancestors came over with the Conqueror, his reply was prompt, "I never heard that they did anything else."—San Francisco Argonaut.

SUNFLOWERS.

Hints From Russia Concerning a Possible Industry in America.

THE SEEDS ARE RAISED FOR OIL.

Stalks Used for Fuel and the Roots Make an Excellent Fertilizer.—When and How to Sow.

The ground devoted to the cultivation of the sunflower in Russia has reached 703,494 acres. What do the Russians make of this sunflower crop? Oil for one thing. Their mills produce 20,000,000 pounds of sunflower oil in a year, and the product sells for $1,000,000. Two kinds of sunflowers are cultivated in Russia. One with small seeds is used for the production of oil, and the other with larger seeds is consumed by the common people in enormous quantities as dainties, very much as the people eat peanuts in the United States.

The sunflower seed is used principally for obtaining sunflower oil, which, owing to its nutritious qualities, purity and agreeable flavor, has superseded all vegetable oils in many places of this country.

In general the cultivation of the sunflower in Russia is considered to be very profitable. At the average yield of 1,350 pounds per acre and at the average price of 1½ cents per pound, the farmer receives an income of about twenty dollars per acre. This income can be increased in those districts where the grower himself is engaged in producing the oil from the seed. However, oil mills are very rare in the villages, the farmers selling their seed to the oil producers.

In the seed growing district of Saratov there are only thirty-four village oil mills, producing oil worth $40,000 annually, whereas in the town of Saratov $450,000 worth of oil is manufactured annually. The substance remaining from the oil manufacture, or the sunflower cakes, being used as cattle food, is also a valuable product. These cakes, however, have a comparatively small demand in Russia, and are largely exported to foreign countries, principally to Germany and England. The government of Saratov, for instance, exports about 2,000,000 pounds of sunflower cakes to different countries, where some more oil is pressed out of them before being used for cattle food.

The sunflower cakes form one of the principal items in the export of Russia.

A HINT FOR THIS COUNTRY.

These facts have prompted Consul General Crawford, at St. Petersburg, to send to the state department a mass of interesting information, for he believes "the sunflower is capable of introducing a new element into the agriculture of the United States, and one that promises to become an important industry."

The stalk very often being three inches in diameter and about eight feet long, sometimes bearing many heads, some of which are more than a foot in diameter containing about 2,000 seeds, it is evident that in order to grow this plant profitably it is absolutely necessary to have a very fertile soil, which at the same time must be very compact and sufficiently deep to sustain the stalk with its roots. The best soil for this purpose is mold or black land mixed with sand. On meager soil the seeds grow flat and small, whereas on stout soil round, heavy and rich seeds are obtained. Soil where potatoes and peas have been profitably cultivated without artificial manure may be adapted for the growing of the sunflower. It also thrives well on newly worked fields if the soil is not composed of too much clay and sand. On clay and sandy soil the sunflower does not thrive, as it cannot retain the moisture absolutely necessary, nor are the roots able to sustain the weight of the fruit.

It has been estimated that the stalks and leaves of a single crop are sufficient to manure the field for five or six excellent sunflower crops. If therefore four-fifths of the stalks and leaves were gathered for fodder, leaving one-fifth uncut and evenly distributed, the fields, it is thought, could be made to produce good crops almost indefinitely.

IT IMPROVES THE LAND.

The huge heads, the thick stalks and the large leaves of the sunflower would lead one scientifically to conclude that it would greatly impoverish the soil on which it is extensively grown, but the practice of many years proves to the contrary. An experienced Russian farmer, Mr. Taratchkoff, asserts that although it is generally believed that all oil producing plants greatly exhaust the land the sunflower seems to be an exception.

He says that he has, for experiment, sown winter wheat and other corn many times after the sunflower and other plants, and the crops were always better after the sunflower. Therefore, he maintains the view held in the village of Alexievka that the sunflower not only does not exhaust the land, but that it actually enriches it. The same view is entertained by other experienced farmers in the government of Saratov and Voronezh. One, Mr. Pereleshin, says that wheat especially grows very much better after a sunflower crop. For instance, on the large steppes in the government of Voronezh the sunflower is sown alternately with wheat and flax, the crops of which are always very abundant; whereas, if wheat and flax are rotated, or, if either is sown in succession on the same ground, but without being preceded by the sunflower, the crop will soon be satisfactory.

WHEN AND HOW TO SOW.

The sunflower should be sown very early in the spring, even before the oats, or as soon as the snow has melted. It has been shown that the sooner the sowing is done the better is the seed obtained. In many districts the sowing is made in the autumn, but this must be done so late that the seeds will not sprout. The ground must be plowed rather deep, but care must be taken that the seeds are not buried more than about two inches deep, that the seeds may sprout as soon as possible, the soil in the spring being warmed only on the surface. Many farmers moisten the seeds before sowing.

The sunflower is sown either broadcast or in rows; in the latter case the seeds should be placed about six inches apart. The sowing of the seed broadcast, being the more quickly performed, is generally favored on large farms, especially where the farmers have not sufficient help. Of the two methods—sowing in the fall and in the spring—the latter seems to produce the most satisfactory results. Seed sown early, even on poorly prepared ground, does much better than when sown late under the best conditions of soil. Although the sowing in rows requires more time and more work at first, and consequently is more expensive, it has great advantage over the broadcast method.—Washington Cor. St. Louis Globe Democrat.

A statistician estimates that 60 per cent. of the total cost of operating a railroad goes for wages.

COLLEGE MEN AT A DISCOUNT.

Frank Advice from a Sensible Sister Aided One Young Fellow to Get a Start.

He was a college bred youth, and after graduation came the question of how he was to make his living. He had the right stuff in him, though at first it was pretty well hidden by the high opinion he held of his own capacity.

A farmer's son, with no influential friends to assist him in obtaining a situation, he found himself alone in Boston. He presented himself at business offices, wrote letters in answer to advertisements, sought interviews with men prominent in commercial and banking circles, but was everywhere met with refusal. At last he began to grow despondent and to wonder what a college education was good for anyhow.

He now sought the advice of an old maid sister, his senior by many years, whose experiences in the world had made her thoroughly practical. She questioned him closely as to how he made application for a position, how he approached an employer, what he said of himself, etc. When the young man had answered, she said:

"It's just as I supposed, John. You didn't ask for a place as an employee at all. Your method is more like demanding that the employer turn over his entire business to you. You'll have to go about the thing differently. Don't attach so much importance to your college acquirements. Collegians nowadays are as thick as huckleberries down east, and some of them are working for a mere song.

"Don't say to a man from whom you expect a situation, 'My dear sir, if there is an existing vacancy in your establishment I shall be glad to fill it, being assured that my qualifications will enable me to assume any position you may have to offer.' Just believe that there are a few things left which you don't know, and make your application accordingly."

John was sensible, and saw the force of his sister's remarks. His next request for a situation was couched in more modest terms than the others, and his college training was not mentioned until the very last part of the interview, when it was drawn out by the employer's own questions.

He got that situation after a few days without further trouble. That was several years ago, and today he holds a much better position in the same establishment.

Only the other day John repeated his sister's advice to a recent graduate from his alma mater, at the same time relating his own experience.—Boston Herald.

Hardy Meat Eaters.

Many races of men live entirely on animal food, and these are the most hardy, and from all I have been able to gather on the subject the most free from diseases of all kinds. Sir Francis Head says of the Pampas Indians: "They are all horsemen, or rather pass their lives on horseback In spite of the climate, which is burning hot in summer and freezing in winter, these brave men, who have never yet been subdued, are entirely naked, and have not even a covering for their head. They live together in tribes, each of which is governed by a cacique, but they have no fixed place of residence. Where the pasture is good they are to be found until it is consumed by their horses, and they then instantly move to a more verdant spot. They have neither bread, fruit nor vegetables, but they subsist entirely on the flesh of their mares."—Gentleman's Magazine.

Electricity in Modern Warships.

In modern warships electricity is playing a very important part. The commanding officer, who sits in his conning tower, has at his disposal every electrical device known, and by the pressure of a button can make his wishes known to every part of the vessel, as well as direct its movements mechanically. Now, by a new application, the fighters on the Miantonomoh can blow away the smoke from their eyes, and it may not be long ere some invention is patented by which they may blow this smoke into the eyes of their enemies.—Electricty.

How Sharks Bite.

I once hooked a shark about five feet long, which fought longer than usual, and when brought to gaff he was found to be hooked in a side fin, so that he retained his full powers. So also with the hammerhead. The shovelnose shark I have found to be the most active of them. The nurse shark lies on the bottom, and its bite is not felt or its presence known to the angler till he raises his rod, then the fish comes up like a log, without resistance. — Forest and Stream.

IN A COFFIN.

An Express Messenger's Recollections of a Daring Train Robbery.

A DESPERADO IN THE BAGGAGE CAR.

Traveling as a Corpse.—The Messenger's Desperate Plan to Save the Property in his Charge.

The tightest corner I ever got into, said the express messenger, was when I was traveling on the Southern Pacific road. I had just woke up out of a nap in the express room when I saw something that froze the blood in my veins. There was a coffin in one end of the room, and I could just catch a glimpse of the cruel face turned toward me. It belonged to a train robber, I was sure, and my rifles were on the other side of the car. If I made a step he would shoot me dead, and then notify his associates, who were probably in the passenger car.

We had enough gold on board to make a man rich. I felt the responsibility, and I knew I must act at once. I pretended to awaken by making two or three movements with my hands, and to my intense relief, the cover of the pine box quickly and quietly dropped to its place. Without making any hurried motion I rubbed my eyes, gaped once or twice and slowly rose to my feet.

"Well, well," I said aloud, "I've been asleep."

Then I proceeded to rummage around the car as if nothing had happened, but my nerves were not relaxed an instant. Before the train had gone five miles further I had some nails in my pockets. A quick, careless glance showed me a hole in the side of the box through which the robber was undoubtedly watching every movement I made.

I did not go near the revolvers or rifles. It would have taken a second for him to have raised the lid and shot me, and I knew he would do so if I approached them. Instead of that I carelessly assorted a pile of express matter near the box, with a view to what I was to do.

I was terribly excited, though I tried to keep cool. When all was ready I threw several heavy packages on the lid, sat down on the box, and hastily nailed down the lid. I heard a noise within, and felt a pressure as my prisoner endeavored to raise the lid. The weight was too great, and I soon had all the nails driven in to hold him fast. He was secured, but to make sure of him I surrounded the box with heavy bundles, and piled upon it the heaviest boxes the car contained.

I sat down for a minute to recover myself; then taking down a rifle I cocked it loud enough for him to hear.

"How many more are there aboard the train?" I asked, placing my mouth to a crack between the bricks.

In reply I heard a muffled sound resembling a curse, and as all the holes through which he might shoot were covered with gold and silver, I put my mouth nearer and asked the question again.

I received no reply, and, going to the other end of the car, I quietly opened the door leading to the platform. The night air rushed in, and the noise of the train came with it, making a din in my ears. We were running at a high rate of speed around the hills that abound in that region.

I stepped to the platform of the next car. It was a smoking car. The train robbers were already at work. Two men, in the forward car, within five feet of me, commanded a view of every passenger with their leveled revolvers, and two more were going down the aisle for the valuables.

It was a terrible moment to me. I felt a keen sympathy for the passengers, whose terror stricken faces I could see in the dim lights from the lamps, but I was helpless; doubtless a similar scene was being enacted in the other passenger and sleeping cars.

Already the two robbers had nearly reached the farther end of the smoking car; thousands of dollars were in my care; I must save it.

Without any more hesitation I stepped to the platform of my car, grasped the lever that operated the Miller coupling, and with a quick, strong pull, separated the two drawheads. I was not a moment too soon. Before the engine and express car had shot 200 feet ahead of the train, the door of the smoking car opened and the robbers stepped out. I heard their cry of rage, saw the flash of their revolvers, and the bullets struck the woodwork behind me. Hurrying forward, I told the engineer what had happened.

He heartily approved of my action and his words assured me. I had taken a desperate course, but I had saved a great deal of valuable property.

We hurried on through the darkness and soon reached the next station, from which the news was telegraphed to the company's offices in San Francisco and Tucson. The robber in the pine box was then secured, but refused to say a word, and with a gang of trackmen, armed, we returned to where we had left the train. The robbers had departed, taking everything valuable with them, and the passengers hailed us with shouts of joy and sighs of relief.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Measuring Air Temperature.

A novel method of determining the temperature of the air at great heights has been proposed by a German physicist, and is to be adopted by the Berlin society for ballooning. Small balloons are sent up at night, each provided with a thermometer arranged to give flashes of light by the closing of an electric circuit when certain temperatures are reached. A so called "phototheodolite" is affected by the light and gives a photographic record of the temperatures, while the corresponding altitudes are indicated in a mechanical way. A more accurate idea of the rate of decrease of temperature with height is expected with this method.—New York Telegram.

An Officer in the Militia.

"Did it ever occur to you," said a West Point graduate and a national guardsman the other day, "what it means to be a popular officer in the national guard? Something quite different, I assure you, from being a popular officer in the regular army. Why? For this reason: In the army, if an officer takes care of his men, sees that they get their clothing and pay promptly, looks out for their interests in case they are so unfortunate as to be locked up in the guardhouse, no matter how strict a disciplinarian he may be, or how he may make the men stand around, he will be popular with them. But here in the guard the relationship between officer and men is entirely changed. The rank and file, who are men that need no supervision of their personal affairs, expect their officers to be 'good fellows' socially.

"An officer need not be a strict disciplinarian to be very popular, but it is only fair to say that the majority of national guard officers, especially in some of our crack commands, have just as thorough an understanding of military requirements as regular army officers. Everything else being equal, therefore, the popularity of the men may be compared as that of a man among employees or among his club equals. I mention these facts to show how easily a regular army officer could fail to succeed in the guard, and, vice versa, how impossible it would be for a guard officer, whose easy going society ways are an essential part of his success in his rank, to make a name for himself in the army."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Pedigree of Boston's "Four Hundred."

"Every chap in Boston has been running for a pedigree lately," said a good natured son of the Emerald Isle yesterday at the North End mission, "and some o' them fellers up there on Bacon's Hill, as have been putting their names in the Foor Hundred lately, ought to be ashamed of theirselves for trying to desave people. Sure, one of them that goes a strutting about with his eyeglass came from just the same stock as meself and has nearly blinded his two eyes looking for his name in the book of martyrs.

"His grandfather and mine came over from the ould country in the ship Marianne about fifty years ago, wid the same intention of making a home.

"Begorra, there was no aristocracy on board the Marianne, for he washed the dishes and me grandfather did chores around the vessel.

"And ye should see them now. Know me? Faith, if there wasn't anybody else in the city to know, they wouldn't know Tim Doherty.

"It's nothing but the ancientness of their families you hear of these days. But we'll all be dead some time and then the families of all of us will be ancient enough to put in the Four Hundred."—Boston Herald.

Fraud Worth More Than the Original.

The art frauds that have taken shape and substance, which remain to incumber the world as false coin ever circulating from hand to hand, are of all times and periods. The archæology of fraud even has become a science; some of the overt and acknowledged frauds themselves have attained the status of precious and coveted works, more valuable in the strange gyrations in the wheel of time than the originals they simulated. Michael Angelo's marble Cupid, for instance, which he made in secret, broke and mutilated, buried in a vineyard, and dug up again himself, all for the express "taking in" a certain cardinal, collector of antique marbles and contemner of modern art, is a case in point. If this particular Cupid could now be identified it would probably be worth more than the most beautiful genuine antique work of its kind which Italian soil still enshrouds.—Nineteenth Century.

Meat and Water Diet Gives Strength.

Sir Francis Head tried the diet of the Pampas Indians, which consists of the flesh of mares, for these savages eat neither bread, fruit nor vegetables. He says:

After I had been riding three or four months, and had lived on beef and water, I found myself in a condition which I can only describe by saying that I felt that no exertion could kill me, although I constantly arrived so completely exhausted that I could not speak; yet a few hours' sleep upon my saddle on the ground always so completely restored me that for a week I could daily be upon my horse before sunrise, could ride till two or three hours after sunset, and have really tired ten or twelve horses a day. This will explain the immense distances which people in South America are said to ride, which I am confident could only be done on beef and water.

To Cut Glass with Shears.

A sheet of glass—a window pane for example—can be cut as easily as a sheet of cardboard. The secret consists in keeping the glass, the shears and the hands under water during the operation. The glass can be cut in straight or curved lines without a break or a crack. This is because the water deadens the vibrations of the shears and the glass. If the least part of the shears comes out of the water the vibration will be sufficient to mar the success of the experiment.—L'Illustration.

A Candid Reply.

"Now be honest," said the second party to a horse deal, as he slipped the halter on his exchange. "Is the animal worth carrying home?"

"No," replied the former owner frankly, "he ain't, but he's worth leading home, if you're going in that direction."—Kate Field's Washington.

America's Seven Wonders.

The seven wonders of America are classed as follows: Niagara falls, Yellowstone park, Mammoth cave, the Canyons and Garden of the Gods, Colorado, the giant trees, California, the natural bridge, Virginia, and the Yosemite valley.

During the last three months of the year 1891 over 3,000,000 pounds of silver lead ore were sent into this country from the state of Senora, Mexico.

CHEAP WIVES.

Beautiful Maids of New Guinea can be Bought for an Ax Apiece.

AN AMERICAN AMONG THE PAPUAUS.

He Receives a Pressing Invitation to Marry and Settle Down.—How a Native Lover Earned a Spouse.

Such opportunities for matrimony as were offered me in New Guinea a few years ago I never expect to enjoy again. My journey through the island of the Papuans was made for the purpose of collecting specimens of all sorts, such as a naturalist seeks to gather, but the people themselves are the most interesting savages I have ever met. The men and children go about entirely naked, while the women wear only short grass petticoats. I employed a young black fellow named Raboor to help me in my work. His hair was a bush of kinky fuzz and stood up on his head in a mass as big as a half bushel measure. I found out that he was in love, but he admitted with a sigh that he was too poor to marry the girl of his choice.

"You are young and strong," said I. "Why do you not go to work and earn enough to support yourself and your sweetheart?"

"You do not understand," he replied. "I have a good garden that would supply what food we wanted; besides, I can throw the spear further and truer to the mark than any other man in this district, so that I can get plenty of kangaroes and pigs. But they will not buy the girl. Her mother wants an ax for her, and that I cannot grow in my garden or hunt in the forest with my spear."

The poor fellow groaned, made several despairing remarks on his prospective mother-in-law, and finally said that if he did not love the young woman so dearly he would go away and never come back again.

HELPING A NATIVE TO MARRY.

"But, my boy, you need not despair," said I. "If the possession of an ax will secure your happiness I will give you one. I want my paradise bird, for in my country people think more of them than of axes. If you will help me get as many birds with the long plumes as you have fingers on both hands you shall have an ax on the day we get the last one."

He accepted this proposition delightedly. At length, with his assistance, the ten good birds were procured and the ax earned. I was present when Raboor bought his wife with it. They were married the following evening, the ceremony being concluded with a wild dance and singing by a chorus of girls.

As we were preparing our dinner one afternoon a titter and a giggle were wafted to our ears. Looking around we beheld Lohier in the midst of a group of fifteen or twenty girls, many of them of superior beauty, who were laughing and peering at us over each other's shoulders. They all wore flowers in their hair and bands of green leaves adorned their arms and ankles. Each maiden had on her best striped petticoat and some wore necklaces of dogs' teeth.

At length Lohier, one of my recent guides, stepping forward, said that he had been a long way, had visited the biggest towns of his country and had brought back with him the most beautiful women of his nation. He hoped we would each select one that would please us, marry her and settle down in New Guinea. The parents of some of the girls had come also and were standing in the background. Our friend explained to us that the prices were high, as they were the finest girls in the land.

LINING UP FOR PROPOSALS.

He arranged them all in a giggling line, that they might be seen to the best advantage. Beginning with the first, he told their names and gave their different accomplishments.

I noticed a beautiful girl whom I had met while out shooting among the number of maidens, and I was anxious to hear what Lohier would say of her. She still wore the string of beads I had given her, and looked as pretty and modest as a violet. When he came to her he said:

"This is Lucena. Is she not lovely? Her arms are round as bamboo; her form is supple as the climbing vine; her skin is smooth as a young banana leaf; her hair is soft as spiders' webs; her eyes are bright as dew in the morning. She can sing like a bird and run fast as a kangaroo; she is a good housekeeper, an affectionate daughter and comes from a good family, for her father is a great warrior."

The value set upon the beauty was an ax, a knife, a piece of calico and a string of beads. We stood admiring her, and Lohier thought he had made a bargain. We realized that the affair might turn out seriously, perhaps, but we turned the matter off by declaring that we were unable to make a choice among so many lovely creatures and proceeding to distribute presents liberally. To most of the girls we gave gay colored handkerchiefs, with a brass ring and a brass button in each. To Lucena we offered a looking glass, and the young women danced for our amusement while we ate our dinner, and sang a song, which they composed as they went along, describing the whole scene and complimenting us upon our generosity. Toward evening they bade us goodby and started for their homes.—Fish Commissioner Sherman F. Denton in Washington Star.

The Arabs, when they wish to pronounce their most forcible malediction, say, "May thy soul know no more rest than the hat on the head of a European!" The hats of kings and emperors must have been specially in their minds when they framed this curse.

A Long Search.

Mean Business Man—Seems to me you take a good while for lunch. You've been gone an hour and a half, and yet restaurants are thick as hops about here.

Poorly Paid Clerk—I was hunting for a place within my means.

LOVE'S WAY.

They say it's an old, old story,
That the soul of nature came
Of old, in an hour of glory,
As a loving heart of flame;

With tenderest human feeling,
For the proud, the hardened slave
Of lust, for the outcast, reeling
Through shame to a nameless grave.

And that still this old, old story
Is only a mystic dream;
That creation's brightest glory
Is science and law and steam.

But love has its science, older
Than the oldest worlds of time;
And its laws and forces, bolder
Than the heroes called divine.

It loves, and dies, and comes again;
Rejected, it flies away;
But conquers life through joy or pain,
Is god of each night and day.
—W. H. Thorne in Philadelphia Times.

Scientific Paradoxes.

These scientific paradoxes are grouped together in Blackwood's Magazine: The water which drowns us, a fluent stream, can be walked upon as ice. The bullet which, when fired from a musket, carries death, will be harmless if ground to dust before being fired. The crystallized part of the oil of roses, so graceful in its fragrance, a solid at ordinary temperatures, though really volatile, is a compound substance containing exactly the same elements, and in exactly the same proportions, as the gas with which we light our streets. The tea which we daily drink with benefit and pleasure produces palpitations, nervous tremblings, and even paralysis, if taken in excess; yet the peculiar organic agent called theine, to which tea owes its qualities, may be taken by itself (as theine, not as tea) without any appreciable effect.

The water which will allay our burning thirst augments it when congealed into snow, so that it is stated by explorers of the Arctic regions that the natives "prefer enduring the utmost extremity of thirst rather than attempt to remove it by eating snow." Yet if the snow be melted it becomes drinkable water. Nevertheless, although if melted before entering the mouth it assuages thirst like other water, when melted in the mouth it has the opposite effect. To render this paradox more striking, we have only to remember that ice, which melts more slowly in the mouth, is very efficient in allaying thirst.

The Wells of Tripoli.

The Friday market in Tripoli, Barbary, held in the oasis, a little distance from the town, is picturesque in the extreme. On all sides the exasperating grating of well pulleys produces a motif too Wagnerian for uneducated ears, in a pastoral symphony played by a full orchestra of buzzing insects, grasshoppers whirring shrilly, and the sun scorched palms crackling their dry branches. In each garden rise the two arms of a well, between which an enormous leathern bag mounts and descends on a rude wooden pulley, the chief instrument of the above mentioned music, discharging at each trip a flood of water.

The negro laborer uses a camel, an ox, sometimes his wife, to give the motion to the machine by going up and down an incline plane. The movement does not stop day or night during the nine months of the dry season, and it is thanks to that water, which is life, thanks to constant care, that the verdure of a semi-tropical vegetation blooms gayly in the sand.

Under the protection of pomegranate, fig, orange, lemon and banana trees, through whose heavy foliage the sun percolates, flourish maize and wheat, vegetables and flowers of all sorts. Above it all the stately palms balance their heads in the superheated atmosphere.—Scribner's Magazine.

Hot Water and Dyspepsia.

Another hydriatic method, which acts by removing the cause of disturbance, is the sipping of hot water an hour before meals, in dyspepsia, writes Dr. S. Baruch, in Times and Register. The hot water craze, which now has taken a firm hold upon the lay public, is but the legitimate outcome of a valuable therapeutic application of water, whose simplicity commends it at once to the judgment of the intelligent physician. Brought into prominence by Dr. Salisbury, who committed the error of most enthusiasts of regarding it as a panacea for most diseases, it has now been adopted by the profession as a most valuable agent in many gastric troubles. By removing the process of fermentation, by cleansing the mucous membrane of mucous, it restores tone and vigor to the gastric lining, and enables the natural forces to come into play. It is important to observe strict compliance with the rule laid down by the originator, viz.: that the water should be sipped as hot as possible, and that an hour should elapse before a meal is taken. Examples of failure due to neglect of this rule are numerous in the experience of all medical men.

Ceremonious.

Frenchmen are noted for their punctiliousness, but they have no monopoly of that virtue. A nice sense of propriety occasionally crops out in quite unexpected quarters.

"Pat," said the superintendent of one of our New England manufactories, "go down to the firm's office and wash the windows."

Pat presently appeared in the outer room with his bucket and sponges.

"An' I was tould to wash the windys in the firm's office," he said to one of the clerks.

"All right, that's it right in there," answered the clerk, pointing to the door.

"But they're in there," said Pat.

"Oh, never mind, go right in."

But Pat still hesitated. "Faith," said he, "an' would ye plaze be after goin' in an' inthroducin' me?"—Youth's Companion.

An Optimist.

Jennie (mournfully)—Just look at our lovely green grass. Surely, when the snow comes, it will all die and wither.

Charlie—Never mind, dear. Look on the bright side of things. Of course it will die. But that will be our lawn fate.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

This campaign begins to look as if it was to be a battle of brains on the one side and of bullion on the other. Carter is getting money from the big manufacturers who have been getting rich through the tariff, while Harrity is bringing to his aid all the intellectual men in the Democratic party. It is hard to name the winner under such condition, but we have faith in the integrity of the people; and until the official returns oblige us to think otherwise, we will believe that Grover Cleveland is the choice of all our people.

Tariff Bill McKinley who has been swinging around the circle, returns to the East and tells the newspapers that he was unable to see any signs of Democratic strength in the Western States. It will be remembered that in 1890 Mr. McKinley also took a journey and was unable to see any signs of Democratic strength. He felt it in November when the Republican majority in Congress melted into insignificant minority and five Republican Senators were defeated. Like many other people Mr. McKinley's hind sight his fore sight.

The United States Marshal for Tennessee is a brother of Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States. The leader in the late riots in East Tennessee was Buce Lindsey, a a deputy under the brother of the President. Lindsey has been a notorious desperado for years, and yet was appointed Deputy United States Marshall for political reasons. His action in leading a lawless mob to make armed war on the regularly constituted authorities is in keeping with his whole career He also shows what instruments this Administration has brought into use to serve partisan ends.

MARRIED.

HOLLAND—SHEPHERD—At the residence of the bride's parents at Georges Creek, Inyo Co., Sept. 6, 1892, by Rev. H. J. Winsor, Mr. David Holland and Miss Medora Alma Shepherd.

BORN.

JONES—At Round Valley, Cal., to Mr. and Thos. E. Jones, a daughter.

John Dodge of Lone Pine was in town on Wednesday.

Billy Mitchell got home last Sunday from a visit on the other side of the Sierras.

E. H. Edwards came up from Lone Pine on Wednesday, returning the same day.

Mrs. A. Church arrived at Independence on Monday after a visit to friends in Bishop.

To-day is Admission Day. California was admitted into the Union forty-two years ago to-day.

Thanks are due Mrs. J. R. Moffatt for a box of assorted grapes. Also to C. A. Walter for a sample of Bartlett pears.

There will be no preaching at Independence on Sunday as Mr. Winsor has gone to the mountains for a short vacation.

J. A. McKenzie made a short visit to Independence early in the week. He reports mining matters progressing as usual at Darwin.

O. I. Mairs is furnishing the building adjoining the INDEPENDENT office, and when completed it will be occupied by Mr and Mrs D. Holland.

Mrs. Frank Butler arrived from San Francisco on last Friday's train. Mrs. Butler will visit for a time with relatives here.

W. K. Miller of Lone Pine was in town last evening. He says that travel is increasing over the Keeler & Mojave stage line.

Mrs. A. O. Collins and Miss Leora Collins of Warm Spring came down to Independence on Wednesday's train, returning yesterday morning.

Quite a pleasant social dance was given at Mairs' Hall on Friday evening last. It was fairly well attended and the young folks had a good time.

The Fair Directors will meet at Independence to-night to make final preparations for the coming Fair which begins two weeks from next Tuesday.

A. H. Allen arrived from Bridgeport on Wednesday. He brought his well known stallion "Andy" and will have a try for the trotting races with the boys.

Mrs. O. I. Mairs started for San Francisco on Tuesday last. She will visit relatives at Benecia and other places on the other side before returning.

Jake Schober got a severe shaking up last Sunday. His saddle horse fell with him in crossing a ditch, rolled on him and bruised him quite severely.

A. E. Janvier has telegraphed to the Trustees of the Independence school that owing to an accident he will not arrive here until Monday evening.

Fred Eaton of Los Angeles will arrive at Independence in a few days. Mr. Eaton will be accompanied by his wife who is in poor health and hopes to be benefited by the glorious climate of Inyo.

Capt. T. H. Flagler came in from Cerro Gordo on Wednesday. Mr. Flagler has been in very poor health for some time past and will remain in town a couple of weeks for medical treatment.

What might have been a very serious accident happened at Camp Independence last Tuesday. Miss Lena Thomsen was driving through Mairs' Lane, and her brother, Carl Walter, was riding a young horse near her. For some reason the animal became frightened, ran into the cart and threw Carl heavily to the ground. The cart was broken, but Miss Thompsen was not hurt. Carl was not so fortunate, as he was rendered insensible from the fall. He is alright however, no bones being broken.

CORBETT WINS.

Sullivan Knocked Out In The Twenty-first Round.

The result of the big fight at New Orleans on Wednesday night will prove a great surprise to many people. There were but few who thought that Corbett could win. Many thought that the fight would be a draw, but the general belief was that Sullivan was invincible. Time was called for the first round at 9:15 o'clock, which was a little after 7 o'clock here. Quite a crowd gathered at the telegraph office to hear such reports as might come. The first round was a feeler for both men, but it gave Corbett confidence, and from the second round till the close of the mill "Dandy Jim" forced matters. It was give and take throughout and no footracing. Corbett out-generalled his opponent, took his punishment like a man, and fought hard and fair. Sullivan was knocked out in the twenty-first round and showed signs of considerable punishment. Corbett was not much hurt. Sullivan congratulated the winner and said he was glad the championship remained in America. Corbett drew first blood, and the knock out blow was the only knock-down. The fifth round was the hardest, both men fighting like demons, and ended with Corbett having the best of it.

Shocking And Fatal Casualty.

Many people in this end of the Valley will remember Ed. Holbert, a brother of Fred Holbert. The young man made a lengthy visit here and created a very favorable impression by his quiet, unassuming manner, and strict attention to his own affairs. A bright and promising career was brought to a tragic close on Sunday, August 21st. The following account is taken from the local New York paper:

A terribly shocking accident occurred at the iron bridge over the Beerkill on Sunday evening last about 9:30. Lemuel Du Bois, son of J. G. Du Bois of this village, and Edwin G. Holbert, a young man of New York city went in the afternoon for a drive to Lackawack going as far as Shiels' hotel. They returned in the evening, and at about the hour named arrived at the bridge over the Beerkill. Mr. DuBois who was driving states that just as the horse passed onto the bridge he shied suddenly to the right and sprang forward. The movement carried the right wheel of the buggy to the iron arch of the bridge which it mounted and followed as the marks show for eight feet or more. Of course the occupants of the wagon were thrown out instantly. DuBois only knew that he struck upon his feet, and looking for his companion saw him lying about in the middle of the bridge. He spoke to Holbert but elicited no response; then took hold of him and lifted him up, but found him limp and powerless, and discovered that his face was covered with blood. People from the neighboring houses were attracted to the spot, and DuBois went for Dr. B. F. Neal, who came quickly. Holbert was borne to the Terwilliger House where Dr. J. F. S. Eastgate was also in attendance, and surgical resources were vainly exhausted for relief of the injured man. He remained unconscious from the time of the accident and died at 11:05 p. m. There was a wound upon one hand but none on his head. He bled however profusely from the left ear. The fatal injury was doubtless at the back of the head, the base of the brain.

On Monday at 2:15 appropriate services at the hotel were conducted by the Rev. O. Applegate Jr. of St. John's Church, and the remains were conveyed to New York by afternoon train.

The deceased was an intelligent and agreeable young gentleman, who held a position with largesalary in the house of Thurber, Whyland & Co., and was soon to engage in business on his own account, having already rented premises in Broad street for the purpose. He came to Ellenville last Thursday in company with his cousin, Mr. John H. Kimble, with whom he had visited here several times before, stopping at the Terwilliger House. He made a number of warm friends here, and the distressing event called forth many tokens of regret and sympathy. Young Holbert was the son of W. Warren Holbert, who died some years ago; his mother, a sister of the first wife of Mr. Geo. S. Kimble, also died about four years since. The family formerly resided near Honesdale but removed to N. Y. more than twenty five years ago. Edwin O. Holbert was 25 years old in December last. He is survived by two elder brothers—Albert, residing in New York, and Fred., in California, where he went in childhood to live with an aunt. A younger brother, Charles, with the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., met the train Monday afternoon at Cornwall. An only sister, Mrs. Marsh, had been in Ellenville a week visiting at her uncle's. Rat, responding to the sad summons, she found on reaching the hotel, only the lifeless remains of the brother from whom she had parted but a few hours before in merry spirits and full of vigorous health. The funeral services were held on Wednesday evening at St. Michael's (Episcopal) Church, Ninety-ninth street, New York. Interment was in Greenwood cemetery.

Evans and Sonntag are reported to have been seen in San Bernardino county recently and a Sheriff's posse started out to hunt them. Just about the same time a Supervisor of Tulare county claimed that the two men took dinner at his house. They must wear seven league boots.

Allen Elmiston arrived from Tulare county early in the week with about twenty head of young horses which he took to the eight-mile ranch for pasturage. He started on his return trip to-day. J. A. Bacon is expected to arrive here in a few days.

B. F. Gray and family have removed from Keeler to Hawthorne, going up on last Tuesday's train. On the evening before their departure their many friends gathered at the residence and spent a very pleasant evening, wishing them every happiness and prosperity in their new home.

The Republican Primaries will be held a week from to-morrow. The Democratic Primaries will be held the following Monday. One more week of anxiety and the strain on a number of candidates will terminate abruptly.

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CONVENTION

—AND—

PRIMARIES.

A MEETING OF THE DEMOCRATIC Central Committee of Inyo County was held at Independence on July 14th and arranged for the holding of a County Nominating Convention to assemble at Independence on SATURDAY, October 1, 1892,

At the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of nominating candidates for county offices and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before such convention. Primaries for the selection of delegates to said convention were ordered to be held in the several precincts of the county on MONDAY, September 19, 1892,

In accordance with the following apportionment, based on the votes cast for Governor in 1890, a delegate for each precinct voting at said election, one delegate for each fifteen votes so cast and one for each fraction over one-half that number, as follows:

ALIAS SUMMONS.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.

FRIED RICKE RHINE, Executrix of the will of Nathan Rhine, deceased, plaintiff, vs. W. L. HUNTER, CAROLINE HUNTER and J. L. PORTER, defendants.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and the Complaint filed in the office of the Clerk of said County.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIfornia send greeting to W. L. Hunter, Caroline L. Hunter and J. L. Porter, defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, as such executrix, in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county, or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment of this Court for the foreclosure of a certain mortgage described in said complaint and executed by the said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L. Hunter on the 10th day of April, 1889, to secure the payment of a certain Promissory Note made by the said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L. Hunter to the said Nathan Rhine, now deceased, for the sum of $2,400, with interest thereon from the said 10th day of April, 1889, at the rate of 1½ per cent per month, described in the complaint, which by the lapse of time is now due, no part of which has been paid excepting $60 paid April 10th, 1889, $144 paid October 10th, 1889, $110.35 paid May 10th, 1890, $75 paid September 20th, 1890, $72 paid December 27th, 1890 and $66 paid November 28th, 1891.

Said note is dated April 10th, 1889, that the premises conveyed by said mortgage may be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of said note and interest thereon and costs of suit, and the further sum of 10 per cent on the amount of the judgment found due as counsel fees as provided in said mortgage, and in case such proceeds are insufficient to pay the same, that judgment be docketed against said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L. Hunter for the balance remaining due, and also that the said defendants, and all persons claiming by, through or under may be barred and foreclosed of all right, title, claim, lien, equity of redemption, and interest in and to said mortgaged premises, and for other and further relief, as will more fully appear by reference to the complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint.

Witness my hand, and the Seal of the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, this 10th day of August, A. D. 1892.

[SEAL] J. N. YANDELL, Clerk.

Kitchen Economy

Actual tests show the Royal Baking Powder to be 27 per cent. stronger than any other brand on the market. If another baking powder is forced upon you by the grocer, see that you are charged the correspondingly lower price.

Bread, biscuit, cakes and muffins are not known in most delicate and perfect quality where Royal Baking Powder is not used.

"Do you know," said a business man, "that I had an experience recently which was not at all complimentary to my vanity? I started from San Francisco to New York, and on the day after my first night on the sleeping car I noticed that notches had been cut in the heels of both of my shoes. I supposed that the porter had done this to identify my shoes, and was disposed to forget the whole affair. I noticed, however, that the porter was assiduous in his attentions to me, although there was a slight, almost imperceptible, touch of hostility to me in his manner. He was a good porter, however, and when I changed my sleeping car I tipped him liberally. After my first night on my second car I remembered the notches, and looking at my boot heels found a cross on each. I decided that this was a notice to porters that I was a liberal tipper. Still I noticed the same concealed dislike of the porter and his earnest desire to please me. I found his service excellent, however.

"When I took my next sleeper at Chicago I met there a porter with whom I had traveled before and who knew who I was. While he was brushing me down the next morning he kept chuckling to himself. 'What tickles you so much, Sam?' I finally asked. He only chuckled and grinned the harder. At last he said, choking with laughter, 'Dey's took you for a spotter, suah.' That meant nothing to me, but Sam explained that the first porter had imagined I was a spy. He found out that I was going to New York, of course, and not knowing how far my wickedness extended, warned all porters whom I should meet. The cross was substituted where the signs changed. There's esprit de corps for you. I should not wear those shoes if I were to start on another railroad journey to-morrow."—New York Tribune.

To Supersede Prayer for Rain.

Within a short time the agricultural department hopes to make an interesting experiment, probably on the plains near the state line of Colorado and Kansas. In the agricultural appropriation bill is an item appropriating $2,000 for the purpose of an experiment in producing rainfall by explosion of dynamite. This paragraph was put in the bill by the influence of Senator Farwell, who for many years has believed that rainfall may be induced by the use of explosives. Secretary Rusk thought well of the idea, and the senator induced the committee on agriculture to make provision for the experiment.

Senator Farwell's notion is that about twenty-five pounds of dynamite should be exploded at a time a half mile or so in the air, the material being sent up by means of inexpensive paper balloons and exploded by time fuses. Senator Farwell and Secretary Rusk believe a succession of such explosions will cause rain to fall over a considerable area. At least the experiment in their opinion is worth making, for if it should succeed a cheap and effective solution of the arid land problem would have been discovered. The members of the senate committee on agriculture do not express much faith in the success of the undertaking.—Chicago Herald.

A Sturgeon Carrying a Chain.

Capt. Dillon, of the steamer Fisher, on June 30 brought up a sturgeon which had been caught in the last trap at the mouth of the Columbia, almost to the ocean. The peculiarity about the fish is that there was attached to him a chain nearly five feet long, about the size of a halter chain. He had been caught before, and on the under side of his mouth a hole had been cut. Through this the chain had been passed, and through a ring on the end of the chain, thus forming a bow knot or loop around his under lip. Then he had evidently been fastened to a pole or stake, with a rope attached to the end of the chain.

After the rope broke the fish was at liberty to leave, and how long he has been swimming with the chain hanging to his mouth is a mystery. If any of our exchanges know where the fish has escaped from, or when, and will state it, it may form an interesting sketch as to how long the fish has carried the chain and where he has been traveling.

The sturgeon was quite poor, and one of his fins was partially worn off by the rubbing of the chain, showing that he had traveled with it a long time.—Astorian.

The Palmetto's Day Is Over.

The palmetto hat is going out of fashion, and you rarely see one on the street now, even on the head of the most old fashioned Southerner. Yet there was a time, and that not ten years ago, when every gentleman thought that to sustain his dignity he had to wear a palmetto hat in the summer. The fact is, that in spite of their light and cool appearance, the palmetto hats were the hottest covering that a perspiring man ever interposed between his head and the burning rays of the sun. White starched shirts on a hot day don't compare to a palmetto hat for discomfort. The straw is so closely woven that not a particle of air gets to the hair, and as soon as people began to get ideas in their heads about common sense clothing for summer they began to look with disfavor upon the palmetto hat. Besides, the hats are exceedingly expensive. The cost of a good one is $25 to begin with, and in order to have it in good condition you must pay several dollars every summer to have it reshaped and the straw whitened.—Interview with St. Louis Hatter.

Washington Roof Lodgers.

A look through a powerful field glass from one of the narrow windows in the top of the Washington monument in hot weather shows a new side of domestic life in the capital—what might be termed the upper side—as a writer has said in a book of which all the rest has been forgotten. Washington is a city of boarding houses. As you look from the top of the monument with your field glass you can see bedrooms on the house tops. That is, light, portable cots have been taken upon the flat roofs of houses, rugs spread over the sheets of tin that have become floors, and sometimes folding screens have been placed between the beds. The houses so topped off are probably the big boarding houses where unmarried department clerks live, and they take to the roofs on hot nights for the sake of the maximum of air and minimum of temperature. And the plan is not a bad one by long odds.—Washington Post.

Mirrors Made of Wood.

In Germany wood with a mirror polish is coming into use as a substitute for metal in the finishing of ornamental work. In order to make the wood susceptible to a polish of this order it must first be submitted to a bath of caustic alkali for two days, the bath being kept at a temperature of 175 degs. Fahr. all the while. Next it is soaked in a solution of hydrosulphate of calcium for from twenty-four to thirty-nine hours. The third dip is into a bath of concentrated solution of sulphur. The final dip is into a solution of acetate of lead at a temperature of 100 degs.

After being thoroughly dried the wood is ready to have the metallic surface imparted to it, which is done by giving it a rubbing with finely powdered lead, tin or zinc. Wood treated in the above manner, it is said, will take a polish almost equal to that so often imparted to steel, silver or nickel.—St. Louis Republic.

Beware of Snails.

A dainty dear to the palate of Parisians is in danger of disappearing from our tables. "Beware of escargots!" is the latest warning to epicures, "unless you know where they have been gathered." The escargot is the edible snail, the consumption of which has often been used as a reproach against Frenchmen by those who have never tasted the dish. Burgundy is the district where these luxuries are supposed to be found in their prime, and when a boastful bourgeois gives a dinner party he is generally careful to inform his guests that he has had the escargots brought direct from Bourgogne. They are fattened in the vineyards of that delightful province; but since it has become customary to use sulphate of iron to protect the vines from phylloxera and other pests the escargot has become harmful and dangerous.

It has been found from experiments that after eating leaves which have been treated with this decoction the snails are poisoned and die in two days. In future a careful host will not set this dish before a dinner party unless he is assured that the mollusks which form part of it have been reared on non-poisonous food, and this again will increase the cost, which already nearly reaches the price of average English oysters. Of late years a large quantity of spurious escargots, made of milk and flour, and flavored with the requisite seasoning, has been palmed off upon the market. There is little doubt that this industry will be extended considerably by this new curtailment of the supply of the real article.—Cor. London Telegraph.

A Smart American in London.

An agreeable and wideawake Englishman told me a characteristic anecdote of a smart American who opened a cigar shop in London. He fitted up in the well known New York style and waited for custom, which did not come very liberally, for John Bull "stands in the ancient ways" and is wary of new methods. So our young American bethought him of schemes to attract attention to his shop. He devised, among other things, a sign illuminated by gas, which he hung over his door. He had an exasperating experience getting the English workmen to carry out his ideas; but at least they got the contrivance perfected one noon, and, as a test, he lit the gas in the sign.

Some occurrence diverted his attention and he forgot to put the gas out. In a few minutes he noticed a crowd of cockneys gathered on the sidewalk gazing at the sign, and presently a lot of them came in and asked: "Me good feller, what makes you burn gas at high noon? Hit's hexpensive, don't y' know, and I fahncy ye don't know it." "Yes, I do," responded the ready witted American. "I left it burning on purpose. Everybody does it in New York. Don't you want to try some of my cigars?" He treated the crowd and kept his gas burning night and day after that, calculating that no less than a thousand inquisitive Londoners would call in every day to inquire about the wonder. His calculations were not misplaced. He soon built up a good trade.—New York Star.

Max O'Rell's Plea for the "R."

I think that if I were an American I should not object to catching the English accent, but all the same I sympathize with the American who, in a New York paper, has been exhorting his countrymen to avoid copying the mutilated English affected by some Englishmen. There is something slipshod about speech bereft of sounding r's, for instance, that I cordially dislike. It is a sign of effeminacy and want of sinew. The Incroyables, under the Directoire, started the absurd trick in France, and our young dudes have kept it up. It is their wont to talk of their bonna bouha, etc.; but if I had to choose between the "honor" of two men I would try that of the one who put in all its letters. Sturdy, honest folks who do not shy at their r's are not likely to shy at other things. There is something in the speech of a true Scot or a Devonshire man that gives promise of his energy or faithfulness. If two men came to you, one asking for wack and the other worruk, which would you be more inclined to employ?

I went one day to see a Scotch friend of mine married. When the bridegroom, holding the bride's hand, said "I take thee, ——, for betterer for worrus," I thought to myself, "If I were a girl I should like to be taken like that."—Max O'Rell in Washington Star.

An Hydrophobia Preventive.

Col. W. G. Hill says that alum water is an unfailing specific for hydrophobia. In his younger days, when he was wont to roam over the hills of Coweta in quest of deer and other game which abounded in our forests at that time, rattlesnakes were very numerous, and it was no uncommon occurrence for hunting dogs to be bitten by them. The remedy in such cases was a strong solution of alum (which was always carried along for such emergencies), with which the dog would be drenched as soon as bitten. Usually in half an hour the dog would be up and on the trail again, and as active and alert as if nothing had happened. Some time since his dog, with several others, was bitten by a rabid canine, and remembering his old remedy for rattlesnake bites he drenched the dog with alum water. All the other dogs bitten developed hydrophobia, while his has never shown the slightest symptom of rabies, though nearly a year has elapsed since it was bitten.—Newman (Ga.) Herald.

How the Earth Was Weighed.

In 1772 Professor Maskelyne, with his assistants, made experiments at Mount Schihallion, Perthshire, Scotland, by which they determined that the attraction exerted by that mountain caused the plumb line to deviate nearly six seconds from its normal. Professors Playfair, Cavendish and Hutton, knowing the structural composition of Schihallion, determined that the mean density of the mountain was to that of the earth as 5 to 9. From this the mean density of the earth as compared with water was determined to be as 5 is to 1. Other more recent experiments made the ratio vary from 4½ to 6½ to 1. Taking 5½ as the average result of all experiments, the diameter of the earth as 7,912.41 miles, and the weight of a cubic foot of water as 62.32 pounds, the weight of the earth would be 5,842 trillions of tons of 2,240 pounds; that is in figures, 5,842,000,000,000,000,000,000 tons.—St. Louis Republic.

The Topaz and the Coral.

Coral was made use of by the Romans as a protection against the evil eye, and popular superstition has credited the topaz with the power of depriving boiling water of its heat.

Perhaps the most wonderful properties, however, were ascribed to the chimerical stones which many creatures were supposed to carry in their heads.—Queries Magazine.

Boston Might Object.

"New York is ruled by so few politicians," said Marlow, of Philadelphia, "that I should think you'd have its name changed to Boss-ton."—Harper's Bazar.

William Kinstone, an Englishman, kept his own accounts, shaved and dressed himself, saddled and bridled his horse, threw sledge hammers and did other seemingly impossible things with his toes.

Of Interest to Mexican Dudes.

A decision which may be of some importance to the gilded youth of this capital, provided the courts here adopt, as is the present fashion in our jurisprudence, the American precedent, is that of a Massachusetts judge who had before him a case in which Mr. Broadman Hall sued a tailor for the recovery of the price paid for a suit of custom made clothes, which the plaintiff averred did not fit him. Mr. Hall, on ordering the clothes, left a deposit with the tailor. In due time Mr. Hall received the garments, which he found did not fit. Accordingly he returned them to the tailor, asking that his money be refunded. This the defendant refused to do, and offered to alter the clothes so that they would fit, or else make the plaintiff a new suit. But the plaintiff would not accept the offer, saying that "he had no more time to be experimented on." Counsel for the plaintiff claimed that when the latter left the order for the clothes it was with the understanding that they were to prove satisfactory, and that the defendant had received his part of the bargain, while the plaintiff had got no return.

The judge, who seems to be a second Solomon, said he thought that when a tailor made any article of clothing for a person it was generally understood that it was to be a good fit. The tailor could have had the customer try on the clothing as many times as he chose in order to have it right, but as soon as the clothing was completed the contract was at an end. In view of this fact he said he would have to decide in favor of the plaintiff for a recovery in full of the money paid the defendant on the clothes. A similar decision here might prove ruinous to the sartorial fraternity, but would be highly satisfactory to the wearers of the eccentric garments which some of them place on their unfortunate customers. The precedent cited will fill with terror the men of shears and needle.—Mexican Financier.

Carthage's Great Snake.

The ancients firmly believed in monster serpents of all kinds and of both the land and marine species. During the wars with Carthage a great snake is said to have kept the Roman army from crossing the Bagrados river for several days. The monster swallowed up no less than seventy Roman soldiers during this combat, and was not conquered until a hundred stones from as many different catapults were fired upon it all at one time. The monster skull and skin were preserved and afterward exhibited in one of the Roman temples. The dried skin of the creature was 120 feet in length, according to Pliny.—St. Louis Republic.

Flower peddlers have adopted a new wrinkle for gaining entrance to the big office buildings in New York. They have discovered by experience that the janitors' employes will not let them ply their trade if the flowers are carried in baskets or on trays, so they now carry them in japanned tin boxes, like those used for keeping valuable papers in lawyers' offices. The boxes are kept closed while the peddlers are in sight of the employes in the big buildings. The boxes have another advantage—they keep the flowers cool and fresh.

The Duke of Fife has just sold his fine estate of Rothiemay, Banffshire, which has belonged to the Fife family since the middle of the last century, when it was purchased by Alexander Duff, of Braco, from the Abernethies, of Saltoun, to whom it belonged when Mary Queen of Scots resided at Rothiemay house, in 1568, during her northern progress. Her rooms are still to be seen in the mansion, which is one of the most ancient in the county.

THE TEMPTATION

To go out of doors in rough weather is not strong, but we are, many of us, compelled to face rough weather frequently. Diseases which arise from a chill are peculiar to no season of the year. This is true, therefore there should be in the closet of every household—what? Not an unmedicated stimulant, absolutely devoid of anything but an excitive action, but a tonic combining, in the effective form of an invigorant and an alterative, the quality of defence against changes of weather. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has three or four properties that no other article of its class possesses. Not only does it relieve the complaints which it eventually cures, it fortifies the system against the bad effects of changes of temperature, fatally and too often shown in the deadly form of "la grippe;" it produces a radical change in the weakened condition of a system peculiarly liable to be attacked by it, and it tends to provide against the danger resulting from an impoverished condition of the blood and a disordered state of the liver or bowels.

When a man insists on having his own way he always says to his opponent: "Come, now, don't be obstinate."

$100 REWARD. $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

DESIRES TO BEAR TESTIMONY.

Henry Thorne, Traveling Secretary of the Y.M.C.A., writes from Exeter Hall, Strand, London, February 2, 1888:

"I desire to bear my testimony to the value of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS. I have used them for pains in the back and side arising from rheumatic and other causes never without deriving benefit from their application. They are easily applied and very comforting. Those engaged as I am in public work which involves exposure to sudden changes of temperature, will do well to keep a supply of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS in their portmanteaus."

The cold-water organization won't fuse with any party, but they mightn't object to forming a pool.

DON'T GIVE UP and say there is no help for Catarrh, Hay Fever and Cold in head since thousands testify that Ely's Cream Balm has entirely cured them.

I HAVE been bothered with catarrh for about twenty years; I had lost sense of smell entirely, and had almost lost my hearing. My eyes were getting so dim I had to get some one to thread my needle. Now I have my hearing as well as I ever had, and I can see to thread as find a needle as ever I did, my sense of smell seems to be improving all the time. I think there is nothing like Ely's Cream Balm for Catarrh.—Mrs. E. E. Grimes, Rendrill, Perry Co., O.

Apply Balm into each nostril. It is quickly absorbed. Gives Relief at Once. Price 50 cents at Druggists or by mail.

FRIENDS OF THE PUBLIC.

MEN OF MARK WHO GATHER NEWS.

Some Personal Sketches and Incidents of Brain Workers in the Highest Walks of Life.

[New York Tribune.]

The reader of the morning paper who sits by his cosy fireside and is informed of what is transpiring in every quarter of the globe, seldom realizes the amount of actual labor necessary to ascertain, collect, write, transmit, and print this wonderful mass of news. And yet, aside from the special dispatches, it is largely centered in one office, located near the Telegraph building in New York, and presided over by a quiet gentleman in a most masterly manner.

Mr. William Henry Smith, manager of the Associated Press, is in the prime of life, and possesses a mind clear as to the requirements of the public. To properly and promptly handle the mass of matter that passes through his hands is an enormous undertaking, and one which may well test the capacity of any man. Mr. Smith has always been an arduous worker, and it is by no means surprising that his health should, in the past, have suffered more or less thereby. The mental strain necessary to the performance of his duties caused difficulties of digestion which are not easily overcome, and also a uremic colic, both painful and exhausting. All attempts to overcome these tendencies by force of will power failed, and he consulted eminent physicians, among them Dr. Barthol of Philadelphia. In spite, however, of the care and skill of these practitioners, he grew worse constantly. The result can best be described in his own words. He said:

"My brother, C. W. Smith, manager of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, came to visit me, and seeing my condition, took upon himself to conduct my case, and so secured a preparation which, I have since learned, he had used successfully himself and in his family. I began its use, and commenced improving at once. This improvement continued, until now I am well, and wholly through the influence of Warner's Safe Cure. I have since then used the remedy with good results in my family, and keep it on hand constantly. I consider it a remarkable medicine."

Mr. George Alfred Townsend, the famous newspaper correspondent, whose letters, written over the nom de plume of "Gath," have attracted such wide attention, said to the writer: "While in England I had a pleasant visit with ex-Gov. S. B. Packard, our Consul at Liverpool. We were remarking on the death of a number of distinguished Americans, when the Governor said: 'Townsend, I can't see why so many of our public men are passing away, victims of one dread scourge. There is no need of their dying if they will consent to avail themselves of what has been provided for them, as I have.' Gov. Packard went on to describe his experience, and I found his symptoms corresponded almost exactly to my own. I soon afterward returned to America, began the same treatment, and when I had taken a number of bottles of Warner's Safe Cure—the remedy Gov. Packard used and commended to me so strongly—I, too, was rid of backache, bad fluids, tired feelings, nervous exhaustion, irregular appetite, 'thick head,' and to-day am as sound as a nut. It indicated my disorder and removed it entirely. I regard it as a God-send to this country, where Bright's disease and all other kidney disorders are so prevalent."

The above statements are not from obscure sources, but from gentlemen in the most exalted stations of trust and responsibility, and the affirmations they make are the results of actual observation. Does it not stand to reason, therefore, that the article of which they speak is a most valuable one, and such as may be used with great benefit by all who are suffering?

Five members of the Havemeyer family have insured their lives for $100,000 each. The policies were written by two agents, and the joint commissions will amount to $60,000.

A recent hail storm at Alusa, Cal., exposed the fact that bats live in the green foliage of trees during the summer. The hailstones knocked a great many to the ground.

Wound up—the man or woman who's "run-down." Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery sets the wheels going. It starts the torpid liver into healthful action, purifies and enriches the blood, cleanses, repairs, and strengthens the system, and restores health and vigor. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it sets at work all the processes of digestion and nutrition, and builds up flesh and strength.

For all scrofulous humors and blood-taints, and even Consumption (or Lung-scrofula), if taken in time, it's a positive remedy.

Unlike the sarsaparillas, which claim to be good for the blood in March, April, and May, "Golden Medical Discovery" works equally well at all seasons.

Unlike other blood-purifiers, too, it's guaranteed to benefit or cure, in every case, or your money is returned.

On these terms, it's the cheapest. You pay only for the good you get. But it's the best—or it couldn't be sold so.

ARGUMENT. THE AMERICAN PUBLISHING COMPANY, of Jersey City, N. J., have undertaken to guarantee to their Advertising patrons a total circulation for their various papers of not less than ONE MILLION. This means an addition of 500,000 to our present lists. It has been said that to secure a half million new subscribers in six months is a business impossibility. This is probably true by ordinary or common methods, but NOT TRUE when the effort is associated with the kind of enterprise that appears in this prospectus. Five hundred thousand new subscribers will mean to us more than $500,000 of advertising revenues during the next five years. We can afford to pay for them at least half their value to us. We are willing to do even more than this, if necessary, and to that end have originated the fairest and most ingenious plan of distributing Cash Premiums or Rewards of Merit among new subscribers that the world has ever known. The plan or method is in conflict with no law against lotteries or schemes of chance; it involves nothing that is illegal or immoral; it places a premium on brains; it is, in short, the very essence of what is commendable, honest, liberal and attractive.

CASH FOR BRAINS

For CORRECT ANSWERS to ANY ONE of the following Ten Word-Riddles the American Publishing Company will pay the following

CASH REWARDS

For a correct answer to any ONE word,	$20.00	For a correct answer to any SIX words,	$150.00
For a correct answer to any TWO words,	$50.00	For a correct answer to any SEVEN words,	$175.00
For a correct answer to any THREE words,	$75.00	For a correct answer to any EIGHT words,	$200.00
For a correct answer to any FOUR words,	$100.00	For a correct answer to any NINE words,	$225.00
For a correct answer to any FIVE words,	$125.00	For a correct answer to all of the TEN words,	$250.00

As SPECIAL GRAND REWARDS we will Pay in Cash:
For the FIRST correct answer to ALL of the entire Ten words, $5,000
For the SECOND correct answer to ALL of the entire Ten words, $3,000
For the THIRD correct answer to ALL of the entire Ten words, $2,000

Here are the Ten Word-Riddles—Can You Solve Any of Them?

1	B-rn--	A NAME MADE FAMILIAR BY GREAT ADVERTISING TO EVERY MAN, WOMAN AND CHILD WHO HAS EVER VISITED A CIRCUS.
2	-ea-ty	A CHARMING QUALITY WHEN POSSESSED BY WOMEN, THAT ATTRACTS THE ADMIRATION AND OFTEN WINS THE LOVE OF MEN.
3	Bl---e	WAS NOT CONSIDERED DESIRABLE AT THE MINNEAPOLIS NATIONAL REPUBLICAN CONVENTION BY A MAJORITY OF THE DELEGATES.
4	-le------	SERVED TO DEFEAT JAMES G. BLAINE FOR THE PRESIDENCY IN 1884.
5	-ol---	THAT WHICH YOU CAN SECURE TO THE AMOUNT OF $5,000 IF YOU WIN THE FIRST PRIZE HEREIN OFFERED.
6	-r-ss	THAT WHICH WOMEN KNOW HOW TO WEAR TO BETTER ADVANTAGE THAN MOST MEN.
7	-i-ht	SOMETHING WHICH JOHN L. SULLIVAN, CORBETT, JACKSON, SLAVIN AND OTHER BIG PUGILISTS EXCEL IN.
8	-ar-i--n	OCCUPIES THE MOST RESPONSIBLE AND FOREMOST POSITION CONNECTED WITH THE GOVERNMENT AND PROTECTION OF THE PEOPLE AGAINST FOREIGN OR HOSTILE NATIONS.
9	-ict--e	THAT WHICH PLEASES OR SATISFIES THE EYE, AND WHICH, IF ARTISTICALLY EXECUTED, ATTRACTS THE ATTENTION AND EXCITES THE ADMIRATION OF LOVERS OF THE BEAUTIFUL.
10	Qu-e-Vic----	PROBABLY CONSIDERED OF GREATER CONSEQUENCE AND MORE SOUGHT AFTER BY THE IDLE, EXCLUSIVE AND TITLED ENGLISH NOBILITY THAN BY THE AVERAGE busy, HUSTLING AMERICAN.

Explanation. Each dash appearing in the partially spelled words indicates the absence of a certain letter, and when the proper letters are supplied the original word selected to form each Riddle will be found complete. EXAMPLE. B-r-e, something every farmer should possess. In this case the omitted letters are o and s, and when properly inserted the completed word is Horse.

REWARDS paid in cash the VERY DAY any answer is found to be correct.

Each answer will be numbered as received, to be examined in the order of its number, and when found correct a New York Certified Bank Check for the full amount of whatever reward such correct answer secures will be sent the VERY DAY the award is made.

REMEMBER If you only solve one word you will receive $20 in Cash; you are not confined to any particular word—any one of the entire ten will bring you a $20 cash reward—while if you are bright enough to solve more than one your reward will be increased in proportion from $50 to $250. Also remember that you do not have to be first, or last with your answer. EVERY correct answer for even a single word wins a splendid cash reward.

The Only Condition.

The object of this extraordinary offer is, of course, to secure Subscribers at once and in large numbers. We therefore require that 50 cents for a year's subscription to some one of our papers shall be remitted with correct answer. We publish four great papers: The American Fireside, The American Homestead, The American Household Journal, and The American Cottage Home. Name your choice of any one of the four—they are all the same price, 50c. a year. If you send answers to more than one word you must send a separate name and 50c. for every word you answer. Thus, if you send answers to two words, send an extra name besides your own and $1, and so on—one name and 50c. for a year's subscription for each word you answer. The total amount of cash rewards that you receive for correct answers can be divided pro rata among the list, or you can keep it all, just as you arrange between yourself and those whose names you send. In every case we will pay the full amount of the reward for correct answers to the person who sends the names.

Don't send answers without subscriptions—they will receive no attention and cannot possibly win a reward even if correct.

Protection. As a means to guard against the appearance of irregularity or collusion, a copy of the original ten words selected to make up the above Word-Riddles is deposited with Mr. C. P. SMITH, Superintendent of the Jersey City Police Department, under seal, to be opened December 31, 1892, in the presence of witnesses, after this contest closes. The complete list will be published in full in the January issues of our four papers, so that all who have not received rewards for correct answers will know wherein they failed. This method of protection is due to all concerned, and absolutely prevents everything that is not wholly honest and fair to every subscriber.

DESIGNATE THE WORDS YOU ANSWER BY THEIR NUMBERS, and be wise and send your answer at once.

Address all letters and make all remittances payable to the Treasurer of the American Publishing Co., as follows:

ONLY A THIN VEIL.

Only a thin veil hangs between
The separate paths we tread;
The same green earth beneath our feet,
The same rose sheds its fragrance sweet,
The same sky overhead,
And God waits where the two ways meet—
'Tis by his voice we're led.

Only a thin veil hangs between,
So thin each breath we hear,
And God keeps watch 'twees me and thee,
He looks thy way, he looks toward me,
So sweetly, softly near.
We do not even ask to see
The way, we have no fear.

Only a thin veil hangs between
The paths to separate.
He holds my hand, he clasperh thine,
He plans thy way, he marks out mine,
And if we hesitate
He cheers with his love divine
And points out heaven's gate.

BRAVE PAUL MADDEN.

"Here, let me help you, my lad. Why, that bucket is almost as large as you are."

Paul Madden looked up with undisguised wonder at the tall, brown bearded stranger who had relieved him of the heavy pail of water he was carrying up the hillside to the tavern.

He was quite unused to anything of that sort. Ever since he was 7 years old—and he was 12 now—he had carried that bucket filled with water from the spring half a dozen times a day, and no one had ever offered assistance, though the loungers on the tavern porch must have noticed the frail little fellow struggling up the steep slope.

Paul scanned this new friend with deep admiration as he trotted behind him along the narrow path. What pretty gray clothes he wore, and polished boots, and such an odd round shaped hat! He didn't belong anywhere near Redman's Cave, that was certain. The men Paul knew never spoke in such soft, pleasant tones, nor had any of them blue eyes that seemed to smile of their own accord, or a pointed brown beard and mustache.

They parted company at the top of the hill, the stranger with a cheery nod mounting the rickety porch, while Paul, too abashed to even say "Thank you," hurried round to the rear of the tavern, where old Susan was impatiently waiting for the water.

Paul's mother had died years ago, before Jonas Madden moved from the little village up to this desolate mountain settlement, and deprived of a mother's care and sympathy the boy's life had been dreary enough.

His father neglected him, and old Susan, in the multitudinous cares of the cookery and the housekeeping, scarcely found time to mend his torn clothes even.

Redman's Cave was a lonesome place. The nearest village was eight miles off, and though few travelers ever found their way up the mountain certain activity and bustle were always to be observed at Jonas Madden's travern.

Gaunt mountaineers, with high boots and grizzled faces, were continually going and coming—some on foot and some on horseback or in buckboards—and many a night, from his little bedroom over the bar, Paul had listened timidly to the strife and tumult going on below.

Little wonder that the boy bred amid those surroundings was quick to realize the contrast between such people and the stranger that had come that afternoon. The latter sat at the rude supper table with a certain grace and dignity that seemed to awe the uncouth men about him, nodding pleasantly at Paul from time to time, and later, when the sun was setting gloriously down the valley, he propped his chair back on the porch and sat calmly smoking, oblivious, apparently, to the suspicion that his presence and appearance seemed to have aroused among the sullen faced mountaineers.

The men drew apart in knots and conversed in low, cautious whispers, signs that Paul noted with a vague uneasiness. He trudged back to the rude stable where the stranger's horse was tethered in company with one or two others—gaunt, powerful mountain beasts—and climbing to the loft above began to throw down great forks of hay. In the dark shadow of the building that lay toward the mountain some men were talking, and their voices came indistinctly to Paul's ears.

He worked on unheeding until a single sentence, pitched in a louder key, caused him to drop the fork and tiptoe cautiously across the shaky floor. He knelt down with his ear close to a crevice and listened breathlessly.

"You're sure of it, are you?" said one of the men gruffly, whose voice Paul did not recognize.

"Sartin," was the reply. "What else could he be doin' round hyer? He's a gover'ment spy, Bill, an' no mistake."

"An' how d'ye know he's a goin' ter leave to-night?" asked the first speaker.

"Why, didn't I hear him tell Madden? 'I'm a going on to the next village to-night,' he says. 'It'll be nice an' moonlit fur ridin'.' He suspicions us, that's what it is. I tole yer not to go whisperin' around open."

"An' whar shell we do him up?" broke in the gruff voice savagely.

"Well, I reckon the burnt cabin 'll be the best place. You know"— Here the speaker's voice sunk to a whisper, and in a moment more the men were gone.

Paul still leaned against the boards, too frightened to move. That conversation had been no mystery to him. The stranger's life was in danger. These men were going to wait for him at the burned cabin a mile down the valley.

That much Paul understood perfectly, the rest vaguely. He knew that "government spy" was a dreaded word at Redman's Cave, and he was aware that "moonshine whisky" was a staple product in that region, but of the connection between the two he was very ignorant.

He waited a little longer in his hiding place, and then, sliding down the shaky ladder, he strolled carelessly back to the tavern. The stranger standing on the porch greeted him with a pleasant smile. A group of sullen faced men in the doorway glanced him over carelessly as he passed between them.

Paul walked straight on and climbed the rickety stairs to the little back room. The one window opened on the mountain, over whose crest the moon was just peeping. The lad raised the sash and looked timidly out.

"I must save him—I must," he repeated in a whisper. "He was kind to me—I don't want him to get hurt."

Still he waited irresolutely, not knowing what to do. He dare not warn the man openly; that would be perilous to both of them. No, there was only one way—only one.

With a little shudder Paul threw one foot over the sill and then the other. Twisting his body round he clung fast for a moment and then dropped lightly to the ground. The noise of his fall was slight. He was on his feet instantly and speeding into the undergrowth at the base of the mountain.

He circled widely round the barn, taking good care to tread on no dry branches, and then broke into a run over the stony, uneven ground. The moonlight scarcely penetrated the straggling timber and the tangled undergrowth. He pushed on blindly in the darkness, tripping on thorny vines and bruising his limbs on stones and fallen logs, but his mind never wandered in its purpose.

Once, as he paused for a brief breathing spell, he fancied that he heard the dull tramp of hoofs somewhere behind him. Like a flash he was off again, not daring to take to the open road, which zigzagged down the valley almost at his side, but clinging to the darkness of the forest. At last, bruised and bleeding, panting for breath, he staggered into a little ravine that echoed to the brawling music of a mountain brook, and crawling a few yards along this he came out on the road that crossed the stream on two logs.

Up the valley a few wavering streaks of moonlight shone through the overhanging foliage. Beyond him, less than a quarter of a mile distant, was the burnt cabin, and there, behind the ruined framework, the ruffians were awaiting their victim. Paul crouched behind a fallen tree. His heart was beating violently. He had chosen this spot of interception for a special purpose. There was danger behind and in front, but just here lay one chance of safety, one avenue of escape for this foolhardy stranger.

Hark! the tramp of hoofs floated in hollow echoes down the valley. He was coming now. Under cover of his tree Paul waited. Up the road a dark shadow flitted across the streaks of moonlight, and as the horse and rider trotted boldly down the slope Paul slipped noiselessly forward and grasped the bridle.

"Don't shoot. It's only me, Paul, you know," he whispered excitedly, as the man in sudden alarm drew a shining object from his breast. Briefly the lad explained the situation.

"Get off the horse quick!" he exclaimed. "Give him a cut with the whip and send him on toward the cabin, so they'll think you're a-comin'. Then I'll show you the way over the mountain. Quick! quick! They say you're a gover'ment spy. They'll shoot you, sure!"

The man hesitated a moment, but asked no questions. He doubtless realized his peril.

"You have risked your life to save me," he said. "Come, my boy, I will follow your guidance."

He flecked the horse lightly on the flanks with his whip, and as the animal clattered over the bridge and down the mountain road they turned up the ravine. Scarcely had the horse gained the opposite slope when the tramp of hoofs ceased, and then came a sharp, angry cry.

"We're discovered," cried Paul, "they've found the horse, and they know this path, too," he added with sudden alarm; "we may beat 'em yet, though; come on and stick close to me."

As they hurried up the face of the mountain clinging to the rude semblance of a path that the boy sought out, the angry cries of the baffled pursuers grew more and more distinct. Not a word was spoken until the ridge of the mountain was gained. Then Paul sank to the ground exhausted.

He staggered quickly to his feet, however, as a trampling of the undergrowth was heard only a few yards below.

"Go," he whispered eagerly; "go quick! Follow the path down the other side. It's open; you can't miss it. It'll take you to Possum creek. There's a boat there and the current's good."

The stranger pressed Paul's hand warmly.

"My name is James Ellis," he said. "I shall not forget you, my brave boy."

There was no time to say more. He glided silently over the crest and disappeared. His pursuers passed close to Paul's hiding place.

"The boy has done this," said one of them fiercely. "No one else knew the path."

Then they, too, pressed on down the other side. Trembling at every step, Paul crept down into the valley.

What would they do to him? he wondered vaguely. He limped painfully up the winding road, avoiding the moonlit spots and keeping in the shadow of the trees.

As he circled round the tavern he could hear the shuffling of feet upon the porch. He reached the rear of the house. All was dark and quiet. He gained the low roof from the limb of a convenient tree and swung on to the window sill. With a sigh of relief he undressed, and getting into bed covered himself with the clothes.

Presently heavy footsteps were heard below and hoarse, angry voices; then the door opened and shut, and tramp, tramp, tramp, came the tread of many feet up the shaky staircase.

"I tell you the boy is in bed sound asleep," Paul heard his father assert angrily, and he had barely time to close his eyes and feign sleep when the door was flung open and half a dozen rough mountaineers entered.

"Thar," said Jonas Madden, "what did I tell you fellers?" and he turned the rays of a lantern on the little figure under the bed clothes.

The men looked on without a word, and then, with much pretense of caution, edged back to the door.

"The idea of accusin' a child like that," Jonas Madden went on indignantly. "You fellers air too keerless, an' mebbe the man wasn't a gover'ment spy after all."

Then the door was closed, the heavy boots clattered down the staircase and Paul knew that he was safe.

Two months later the revenue officers descended upon Redman's Cave. The moonshiners, taken by surprise, made no resistance and all were captured.

Paul's stranger friend was in command of the party, and mindful of the brave lad that had saved his life James Ellis offered immunity from arrest to Jonas Madden on condition that he move into the town and engage in some honest business.

And thus began a new and happier life for Paul.—William Murray Graydon in Philadelphia Times.

Symptoms of a Torpid Liver.

One of the symptoms of a torpid liver is a brassy taste in the mouth, indicating the presence of cholesterine.

Another symptom is specks before the eyes, and these specks are of cholesterine deposited in the chrystalline lens of the eye, where they intercept the rays of light. Sometimes these specks float about, moving with each movement of the eyeball. If these specks become very abundant they form an impediment to vision.—Hall's Journal of Health.

A Curious Error.

An Associated Press dispatch from Halifax, printed in the newspapers, recently spoke of a private cablegram to "Agent Leman." "Agent Leman" looks quite imposing, but "a gentleman," which was the original copy, was not so weighty. The error appeared in all the Associated Press papers, nobody having detected it.—Writer.

THE ENGLISH GIRL

An American's Pen Picture of the Typical British Maiden at Home.

JOLLY AND CARELESS DISPOSITION.

How She Compares With the American Miss and the Parisian Girl.—Her Disregard for Beauty.

I will put on my Yankee spectacles and draw a pen picture of the English girl as she is generally described by foreigners.

Behold a tall, ungainly figure, striding along with the gait of a professional pedestrian. Her hair is red and crowned with a hat of simple and uncompromising ugliness. Exposure to the weather has rendered her complexion coarse and florid and her teeth are large and prominent owing to her excessive indulgence in a diet of tough meat. A nondescript garment, half way between a mackintosh and an ulster, envelopes her figure, which is angular, bony and flat. Her feet, generally incased in galoshes, are of remarkable contour and outrageous proportions. Not an engaging picture, is it? And the worst of it is that the grain of truth in the satire makes it bitter. For English girls, with the best material in the world to work upon, do not make the best of themselves.

RUINS HER COMPLEXION.

Where in the world will you find a natural complexion to equal the pure pink and white of the English maid? And yet she ruins it with hard water and harder towels. Then her teeth—well, she cannot help that; but we must confess that teeth a size or two smaller would serve all the purposes of use and ornament. As to her figure, nature has endowed her with a splendid physique, a body well developed by walking, riding, rowing and tennis; but it is still in the rough. It is marvelous that with her strong, active and healthy form she still lacks that crowning beauty, the "divine grace," which the Greek goddess sheds around her favorites. But she does lack it. The French girl, sallow and even ugly, is always graceful. The English, beautiful and statuesque in repose, is awkward when she begins to move.

Does it all lie in the feet, those feet which the English climate ripens to such astounding size and which their owners persist in reducing by the process of peine forte et dure? It is more probably the result of her whole training. She has never been taught, like the French girl, that the chief end of woman is to be beautiful. The high schools do not teach their pupils grace of manners, and the expatriated French noblemen who taught our grandmothers "dancing and deportment" have long since taken down their brass plates and gone forth into the unknown country. The English girl has "fagged" at cricket for her brothers in the holidays, played hockey at Girton, climbed mountains in Switzerland and toured through Normandy on a tricycle. But all this gives her strength, not grace.

SHE IS JOLLY.

On the whole English girls live a jolly, careless sort of life, not so restless as that of the American and not so secluded as that of the French girl. Not all, of course, for we, every one of us, know here and there a motherless girl who brings up a whole family of younger brothers and sisters, and sacrifices her own life to theirs. But these are the exceptions. Generally when they leave school they consider their education complete. They have "learnt" French and German at school, but they never look into a French or German book afterward. English literature, outside the "set books" in an Oxford local examination, is a terra incognita to them, and this is the more inexcusable because English newspapers and magazines, and in fact all contemporary literature, is written with an eye on the "young person," and there are few libraries where sweet seventeen may not range at will. They have a sweet tooth in books, and devour novels, which is on the whole a good thing; for a certain amount of contemporary thought filters through the circulating libraries in a diluted form in the shape of Robert Elsmeres and Donovans.

Sometimes the English girl goes through a mysterious process called "finishing," which means that she has lessons in music and singing. Why do all girls learn to play the piano? And why do they so seldom learn enough to know that they can't play? Nine out of every ten are either physically or mentally incapable of even moderate proficiency, and yet how rare a pleasure it is to meet a girl who frankly confesses that she cannot play. And the songs she sings! Well, there is nothing that appears more remarkable to the intelligent foreigner than the way in which an English maid will stand up and sing, without turning a hair, an impassioned love song at which Sappho might have blushed.—Cor. New Orleans Picayune.

Here's a Tough Woman.

A country woman of Tornin, in the bishopric of Warmie, met with an unpleasant experience in 1720. She was trying to induce vomiting by irritating with the handle of a knife the back of the tongue. But she thrust it too far, and losing her hold of the blade it slipped down her throat. She felt no inconvenience for three days. Then a pain came in her right side, and the point of the knife appeared at the tender spot. But it was not till a week after that she was put into the hands of an able surgeon and of Hubner, the physician. These practitioners successfully performed an operation and extracted the knife, which was seven inches long, from her side. The wound was attended to, and the woman returned home. Three weeks later she was visited by Hubner, who found her carrying two pails of water, sufficient evidence that she had suffered no ill effects.—Nottingham (Eng.) Sun.

Sleeping Wonders.

There seems to be no limit to the wonders displayed by the human subject while sleeping. Condorcet, the mathematician, solved one of his most difficult problems while asleep—a problem, too, which puzzled him during his waking hours. A professor of theology in the University of Basle once wrote a sermon while asleep; he found it on his desk next morning. The preceding night he could not grapple with the subject as he desired, but the performance of his sleeping hours was quite satisfactory. Coleridge, the dreaming philosopher, composed "Kubla Khan" while fast asleep. Next morning he was sure that there had been an acquisition to his literature, but was too negligent to write the stanzas. A few days afterward he attempted to recall the verses, but they had in most part fled; the poem as it now stands is but a fragment.—St. Louis Republic.

MR. BEECHER'S FIRST SERMON.

His Widow Describes the Great Preacher's First Brooklyn Sermon.

Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher gives an interesting account of the first sermon preached by Mr. Beecher in Plymouth church, Brooklyn, in her fifth paper on "Mr. Beecher as I Knew Him" in The Ladies' Home Journal. A perfect flood of warnings and criticisms came to him before his first sermon. Doubtless all these warnings determined Mr. Beecher more than aught else that the people of his new church should fully understand before he was installed what course he was likely to pursue. He told me that if Plymouth church decided to install him, it would do so with its eyes wide open. It was upon the evening of Sunday, Oct. 10, 1847. He sat quietly on the pulpit while the choir was singing. His eyes scanned the concourse of people before him, but it was the look of confidence that I saw.

Knowing as I did something of what he intended to say, I could not but think, "Will these people accept the bold course he has marked out for his work from one so young looking?" For his ten years of labor at the west had not rubbed the youth from his face. I noticed the almost contemptuous looks of the strangers present as they watched his face. As he rose to read the Scriptures a deathlike silence pervaded the great church. But not a tremor was visible in the voice that spoke. With that mellow voice which the Brooklyn public learned so well to know he read the lesson of the evening as if he were before his Lawrenceburg audience. Then as he uttered the first low sentence of his prayer, as his heart rose heavenward the effect of the preacher became visible on his congregation, and he brought his hearers close to the mercy seat. All was changed. An almost breathless solemnity pervaded the church, and tears were on many faces.

The youthful look vanished and did not return, as in his sermon he plainly and with great solemnity showed his hearers the course duty called him to pursue. As he said of these remarks years after: "I lifted up the banner and blew the trumpet in the application of Christianity to intemperance, to slavery and all other great national sins. I said to those present, 'If I remain here and you come to this church it must at the commencement be distinctly understood that I wear no fetters, that I will be bound by no precedent, and that I will preach the Gospel as I apprehend it whether men will hear or whether they will forbear, and I will apply it sharply and strongly to the overthrow of every evil and to the upbuilding of all that is good.'"

After the close of the sermon many came to counsel Mr. Beecher. They were actuated by kindness to him and anxiety for the church. Such bold, plain speaking they did not understand. They had never been used to it. It would overthrow this young church.

"Don't ally yourself to unpopular men or unpopular causes," they told him. "There is no call for it. You will only injure yourself and break up this church."

After preaching a month in Plymouth church he was installed as pastor on Nov. 11, 1847.

Won the Case.

"If you were a—a jury, Clara," said the embarrassed young lawyer hesitatingly, "I could plead my cause with more self possession. In the courts of—er—of love I don't think I stack up as a first class advocate."

"Perhaps you have not had an extensive practice in such courts, William," suggested the maiden softly.

"That's it exactly, Clara!" eagerly rejoined the young man, moving his chair a little nearer. "I'm a green hand at this business; but if I could feel sure the jury"——

"Meaning me?"

"Yes—wasn't prejudiced against the advocate"——

"Meaning you?"

"Yes—why, then, I might"——

"What kind of jury are you considering me, William?" she asked, with eyes downcast.

"A—h'm—petit jury of course. You couldn't be a grand jury, you know, dari"——

"Why not?"

"Because we don't try cases before grand juries."

"I think, William," said the young girl blushing, "I would rather for this occasion be considered a grand jury."

"Why?"

"Because"—and she hid her face somewhere in the vicinity of his coat collar—"I have found a true Bill!"—Chicago Tribune.

Settling Pronunciation.

"I was arguing with an Englishman the other day," said a New Yorker, "over the pronunciation of a word, and finally I said, 'We'll leave it to Webster.' 'What if you do?' cried the Englishman, 'that's only one man's opinion. I've heard that you Americans refer everything to a dictionary.' Surprised, I asked what was the custom in England, and he told me that Oxford and Cambridge were the accepted referees. Neither seat of learning takes precedence of the other, but over all other authorities, and if two men can prove respectively their claimed pronunciations to be sanctioned by the two universities, both are right.—New York Times.

Aluminium Coins.

Aluminium is suggested for coining by Sir Henry Bessemer in discussing the demand for a token at the value of one pound. Aluminium is so light that if taken from the pocket in the dark it would be instantly recognized as neither gold nor silver. Also the weight of lead or pewter alloys would make it impossible to pass off spurious aluminium coins. —Philadelphia Ledger.

A MAD STALLION.

He Had Blood in His Eye and Made Things Warm for a Short Time.

A BOY'S ALMOST FATAL ADVENTURE.

Pursued by a Maddened Animal that had no Fear of Men, Whips, or Guns. —Saved by a Fall.

I have had several disagreeable encounters with vicious horses, but only once was I so unfortunate as to fall in with one possessed by homicidal mania. My escape was so narrow, and the experience left so deep an impression upon my mind, that I have felt ever since an instinctive distrust for this most noble of domestic animals.

One autumn, when I was about 18, I was taking a tramp through the eastern townships of Quebec, preparatory to resuming work at college. I reached the little village of Maybury one day at noon and dropped into the village inn for luncheon. The village was in a state of excitement over a tragedy which had taken place that very morning, and which was speedily detailed to me by every one with whom I came in contact. A boy living on a farm near the village had been killed in the most horrible manner by a fine stallion that had gone suddenly mad. A fierce anger stirred in my veins as I listened to the story, and I asked the inn keeper, who was my informant, what they had done to the brute.

"Well," answered Boniface, "this afternoon there's a crowd goin' out to ketch him an' tie him up. If he's too bad fur that—an' if I know anything about horses he's just gone mad, stark mad—why, they'll have to shoot him off hand to save their own necks."

"I wonder if I'll run any risk of meeting him?" I queried rather anxiously. I had no weapon but my heavy walking stick, and I had almost a sentimental regard for the integrity of my neck.

"Which way be you bound?" inquired Boniface.

"For Blissville," I answered.

"Oh," said he, "you're all right then. The horses are feedin' out yonder to the no'theast, and Blissville lays south."

AN UNPLEASANT MEETING.

It was with few misgivings that I now resumed my journey.

I was soon beyond the cultivated fields, past the last of the fences. I had climbed one of those rocky terraces and made 200 yards across the breezy down when behind a low knoll I caught sight of a group of horses quietly pasturing, and I remembered with a qualm the morning's tragedy. Could this, I asked myself, be the herd containing that mad stallion!

I halted and was about to retrace my steps unobtrusively, in the hope that I had escaped their notice. But it was too late. Two or three of the animals raised their heads and looked at me. One in the group snorted with a peculiar half whinny, at the sound of which my heart sunk.

Then I caught sight of one in the center, which seemed to be jumping up in the air off all four feet at once. The next minute this creature, a great black animal, appeared outside the group, plunging and biting at his flank. Then, with a short, dreadful sound, he darted toward me, open mouthed.

Up to this point I had stood my ground, eyeing the brute resolutely, with an appearance of fearlessness that I was very far from feeling. But now I saw that my only hope, and that a desperate one, lay in flight. I was accounted at college a first rate sprinter, and now I ran my best. The 200 yards that lay between me and the terrace I had just left must have been covered in not much more than twenty seconds. But as I reached the brow of the slope the mad brute was close on my heels.

I had no time to check myself, and even less notion to do so. In fact I fell, and rolled headlong down, dropping, bruised and bewildered, into a crevice between two bowlders. The next instant I saw the black mass of my pursuer dashing over me in a splendid heap. Before he could turn and seize me I had rolled further into the crevice, and found that one of the rocks overhung so as to form a little narrow cave, into which I could squeeze myself so far as to be quite beyond the animal's reach.

Never before or since have I discovered so unexpected and providential a refuge. The raving stallion came bounding and leaping up to the very door of my burrow, but I felt safe. He would roll back his lips, lay his ears flat to his head, spring straight into the air and shriek through his wide red nostrils his fury and his challenge. The latter I did not think it incumbent upon me to accept. I waived it in disdainful silence.

For a time the brute kept up his boundings and those strange, proud jerkings of his head, but at last he actually tried to stretch his neck into my burrow and reach me with his frightful naked teeth.

It must have been for nearly an hour that I watched the mad creature's antics from my den.

I was beginning to cast about somewhat anxiously for a way of escape from this imprisonment when I saw the pasturing herd suddenly toss up their heads and then go scurrying away across the down. My adversary saw this, too, and turned his attention away from me. I peered forth cautiously, and to my profound relief I observed a party of men, several carrying ropes and halters and others armed with rifles, approaching the terrace foot. One man walked a little ahead of the others and held out a peck measure in which he shook something, which I presume to have been oats.

THE RESCUE PARTY.

The stallion eyed them somberly for an instent, and then his mane rose like a crest and his head went back with a shrill cry. In the selfsame way as he had greeted my appearance he bounced into the air twice or thrice, and then he dashed upon the party.

The man with the oats fell back with wonderful alacrity, and the fellows that carried halters seemed bent upon effacing themselves in the humblest manner possible. One tall, gray shirted woodsman stepped to the front, raised his rifle and drew a bead upon the approaching fury, while two or three others held their shots in reserve. There was a moment of breathless suspense. Then the fine, thin note of the woodman's rifle rung out, and the stallion sprung aside with a shriek, and stumbled forward upon his knees.

Almost instantly, however, he recovered himself and rushed upon his opponents with undiminished ferocity. I held my breath. He was almost upon the party now. Then two more rifles flashed from marksmen standing moveless in their tracks, and the mad brute rose straight up on his hind legs, and fell over backward, dead.—Exchange.

AN ARTIST'S RANCH.

Searching for Subjects She Bought Seventy Odd Acres in California.

In the south gallery of the Academy of Design two years ago was a large painting of California violets that attracted considerable attention, and was sold quickly. The canvas seemed to exhale the fragrance of the real flowers, according to the imagination of some persons. The artist was Mrs. S. A. Norton, a Long Island woman. She had been a pupil of Gifford and Sartain, and in her search for color and new studies she went to California. After painting grapes of various sizes and colors that almost demoralized her, and finding herself incompetent to transfer to canvas as rapidly and satisfactorily as she desired, she decided to be a land owner, and learning of a vineyard ranch near Santa Cruz she invested.

Buena Vista is the suggestive name of the ranch. Forty of seventy-five acres are used for grape culture. One acre, or a little less, netted $770 for the Royal Isabella grape. On the ranch are two apple orchards and one of prunes, with a hundred new trees which began bearing in 1890. In one week 3½ tons of fruit were drying for market. The house orchard contains nectarines, apricots, plums, pears, peaches and cherries.

The ranch is shut in by high, thick trees, redwood abounding, and from its situation it has only four hours of sunshine in winter. In the summer the growth of vines is marvelous. A rose vine sent out a shoot that grew twenty feet in a short time. The luxuriance and prodigality of flower life at Buena Vista is intoxicating. Passion vines in full flower of the richest colors straggle over the fences, screening every bit of wood. Mrs. Norton added to her large stock of the choicest roses fifty of the finest from Rochester greenhouses, most of them everblooming. As neither rosebugs or slugs are known there, nothing mars their perfection. The climbers rival the passion vines in producing flower screens. Clematis and a tropical vine of great beauty cover the porch of the house, and the house, which is not pretentious, will be covered soon by roses.

Mrs. Norton finds life in that locality more desirable than home quarters in this fickle and unfriendly climate. In her house at Greenvale farm are the results of Bar Harbor days, studies of the flowers from her Long Island garden, and studies of California fruits and flowers, besides a few portraits of local characters, one being the dusky face of Tom Bray's wife, as celebrated in the country for her cooking as her husband is for his fiddling. It is interesting to note that the ranchwoman and artist has a womanly pride in simple feminine ways, and finds delight in the dainty exquisiteness of her needlework. She proudly proclaims herself "country born and bred."

Mrs. Norton is a member of the California State Floral society, and her description of the exhibits of this society, and her talks with the superintendent of the Golden Gate parl, green houses, are very interesting. She says that Timothy Hopkins, also a member of the society, is an enthusiast about violet culture, growing acres of them.—New York Sun.

Horace Greeley's Daughter.

In her new home at Westchester, N. Y., Mrs. Greeley Clendenin finds her sphere of usefulness somewhat enlarged, as her husband is rector of the ancient parish of "the Episcopal church of St. Peter," a parish which has any number of guilds and organizations for charitable work, the problem to meet of holding in one beautiful church all classes and conditions of wealth and poverty, and the great city near it is fast coming to its boundaries.

While Mrs. Clendenin enjoys luncheons and dinner parties and all social functions, she is also perfectly happy and satisfied in the quietet duties of her home life. She is fond of reading, although she seldom reads a newspaper, and says that she never takes up a book for more than an hour at a time.—Frances E. Smith in Ladies' Home Journal.

Real Success Means Work.

We ought never to forget in our estimate of success as opposed to failure that there is a higher standard than the merely material one. To succeed financially may be to fail morally, and in our ardent, pushing, commercial country we need constantly to set before our boys and girls the love of work for the work's own sake. The immortal words of Agassiz, when invited to undertake a certain enterprise, with the inducement that so doing would be financially very profitable, cannot be too often repeated—"I have no time to make money."—Harper's Bazar.

MADE HIM GRAY.

A Soldier's Thrilling Account of the Bloody Custer Massacre.

TURNED HIS HAIR ALMOST WHITE.

Forced to Remain Thirty-six Hours in the Brush Surrounded by Indians.—Reno's Cowardice.

Well, I don't mind telling you the story, though I seldom repeat it, as the memories it calls up are the most painful that can ever come to me. One year ago I was down in the Big Horn country, where I had gone early in the spring, along with fifteen companions, who, like myself, had been raised here in Montana, to enlist as scout in the United States army. The Indians had been up to all sorts of deviltry and scouts were in demand. In that month I passed through just a little bit more than I bargained for, and a great deal more than I ever want to again. Hostile Indians had been gathering on the railroad all spring, and the department at Washington had given orders to bring them in or give them such a terrible licking that they would come in voluntarily. To that end a big campaign was organized.

On June 17 I was out scouting with a party that discovered that Sitting Bull had moved his headquarters from the Rosebud over into the larger valley of the Little Big Horn, the next stream to the west. Their ponies had eaten all the grass in the Rosebud, which was the cause of the change. As soon as we reported back to Terry he decided to send Custer, the head of the cavalry, to "scout the trail."

Custer was willing and ready, and immediately started on the trail with the Seventh cavalry. A battalion of the Second cavalry was offered him, as was also a battery of two field guns under Lieut. Low, but Custer wanted his own people, that he knew and had proved. He rode sixty miles in twenty-four hours, riding day and night, and Sunday morning, the 25th, we trotted in sight of a village in the valley of the Little Big Horn.

CUSTER'S PLAN ALL RIGHT.

It was then that Custer divided his forces. He kept five companies with him, and then divided six between Maj. Reno and Capt. Benteen, with the intention of partially surrounding the village and attacking at different points. I was in the division commanded by Custer himself. We galloped ahead, every man eager for the desperate fight we knew was coming, but only when we came around the bluff at the ford, about the center of the village, did we realize the extent of it, and the untold numbers that were in waiting for us.

Our commander took in the situation at a glance, and I and five others were ordered to attempt to make our way to Reno and urge a hasty attack on the lower end of the village. Before we had hardly turned our horses the firing began and Indians literally swarmed out of the brush. I saw my companions fall out of their saddles in less time than I can tell it, and I fell, too, but unhurt, and crawled into the brush down on the east side of the creek, across from the village, and in the excitement I managed to get, without being seen, where it was so thick that I wasn't discovered.

From a gully up on the side of the bluffs I could see plainly the beginning of the fight, and the start to retreat to higher ground, but the end I couldn't see, although I knew when it came and what it meant, when I saw those red devils returning from the slaughter. I could hear firing down stream about the same time, but as it was scattered and soon over I didn't know but what Reno had suffered the same fate. The Indians swarmed all over the bluff where I was secreted that day and the next morning, and several times I thought I was discovered.

I was in that gully under the brush two nights and one day. When Terry came up the valley I heard the bugle calls, and finally becoming convinced that the Indians had left I crawled out, and when I got with the command my hair was as you now see it. When that fight began my hair was as black as yours.

MAJ. RENO GUILTY.

Out of the fifteen of us that had enlisted as scouts together only three of them were left, and two of them were with Reno. I thought I had about enough, and I left the command immediately on getting back to Fort Keogh and came back up here. After my release, through the appearance of Ferry, and I had joined him, we followed the creek south about four miles, and I found Reno strongly entrenched with the remaining seven companies, all the ammunition and supplies. The story I heard from my companions and the soldiers who dared talk strongly impressed me with the needless sacrifice of Custer's command.

When Reno first made the attack it threw the Indians into the wildest excitement, as Custer had calculated it would, and a large portion of the village made hasty preparations to get out of the way and back to the protection of the reservation; but his hasty withdrawal before the scattering shots of a few old men and boys, which scared him into a panic, reassured the Indians.

He himself led the retreat and made no attempt to cover it. The column rushed pell-mell back to the stream and across it. The Indians saw that he was scared to death, and rushed right up on both flanks of the column. Benny Hodgson and Donald McIntosh, two of the best loved and bravest officers of the regiment, tried to rally the men and face about and cover the retreat, but with the major on the run what could they do?

What Custer expected of Reno was a bold, dashing charge into the heart of the village, but Reno had no dash to speak of. Had he obeyed orders I firmly believe a panic would have resulted to the Indians, and the outcome would have been an entirely different story. Yes, I know Reno was whitewashed by a court martial, but I know, and the soldiers under him know, that he was guilty of the most arrant cowardice and direct disobedience of orders on that fateful day.—Interview in Chicago Times.

Mr. James G. Blaine has come to the rescue of the administration in a perfunctory way. And is this all the return the Plumed Knight can give to the president's tally in his letter of acceptance?

The shibboleth of the protection organs is that a high tariffacts as a stimulus to competition in the home markets, and therefore lowers the prices of all articles necessary to daily life in the household. This might be true enough if there was no such thing as a trust, but seeing that the tariff protects trusts organized for the sake of increasing the price of everything protected by the McKinley bill, we fail to discern the truth of the protectionist's arguments. The trusts have reached the number of 250, most of them organized since the approval of the McKinley bill.

The quarantine persecution in New York is highly resented by the cabin passengers of the several steamers that are landing at that harbor, and very rightfully. The imminent present danger of cholera calls strikingly to mind the folly of the American people in allowing their fair land to be overrun by myriads of foreign immigrants, who not only endanger the health of our people, but who also crowd and cheapen the labor market. The complaint is a just one that labor is the only interest in this broad land that is not protected. As a matter of fact, the American workingman needs protection from foreign labor, which in many cases is controct labor. But above all things, the American home needs protection from the death blight begotten of foreign filth. Why should this country be made the dumping ground of all the criminals and invalids of the old world? It would be difficult to find a reason why we should suffer such grievous and manifold evils all from a sentimental idea that the United States is the home of the oppressed of all nations. The notion originated when we were throbbing with revolutionary fervor and a boundless domain offered a refuge for all refugees, who were generally regarded as the victims of the effete despotisms of the old world. Common sense and equity seem to call for a halt in this mad programme.

SUMMONS.

IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT OF THE SECOND Township in the County of Inyo, State of California.

EMMONS SPENCER, Plaintiff, vs. WILLIAM EVA, Defendant.

The People of the State of California send greeting to William Eva, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the Justice's Court of the Second Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer before the Justice at his office in said Township the complaint filed therein, within five days (exclusive of the day of service), after the service on you of this summons—if served within the Township in which the action is brought; or, if served out of said Township, but in said County, within ten days; otherwise within twenty days.

This action is brought to recover of you the sum of One hundred and thirty-three and 75-100 ($133.75) dollars due from you to Plaintiff for services rendered to you by Plaintiff as collector and attorney between the 15th day of November, 1891, and the 20th day of May, 1892, as more fully appears in complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to so appear and answer said complaint as above required, said Plaintiff will take judgement against you by default for the sum of $133.75, together with costs of suit.

Given under my hand this 2d day of July, 1892.
DENNIS J. HESSIAN,
Justice of the Peace of said Township.
EMMONS SPENCER, Attorney for Plaintiff.

ALIAS SUMMONS.

IN THE JUSTICE'S COURT OF THIRD Township, County of Inyo, State of California.

JOHN WELCH, Plaintiff, vs. JESUS ENSENAS, Defendant.

The people of the State of California send greeting to Jesus Ensenas, Defendant:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the Justice's Court of Third Township, County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer before the Justice at his office in said Township, the Complaint filed therein, within five days (exclusive of the day of service), after the service on you of this Summons—if served within the Township in which this action is brought, or, if served out of said Township, but in said County, within ten days; or within twenty days if served elsewhere.

The said action is brought to obtain judgment against you for the sum of $58.60 alleged to be due plaintiff upon an account for work, labor and services performed by one J. W. Murphy in the line of general blacksmith work and for materials furnished you in and about said work at your request, between the 26th day of August, 1890, and the 3rd day of May, 1892, and which said account was assigned to plaintiff herein on the 5th day of July, 1892, and before the commencement of this action, as more fully appears by the complaint on file herein, to which you are referred.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, said plaintiff will take judgment against you for the sum of $58.60, together with costs of suit.

Given under my hand this 12th day of July, 1892.
IRV. H. MULHOLLAND,
Justice of the Peace of said Town-hip.
F. E. DENSMORE, Attorney for Plaintiff.

Several residents of Bishop visited town this week.

Mike Anton was up from Lone Pine one day this week.

Polish up your door-knobs and get ready for the Fair. Only one more week.

Mrs. C. W. Craig has returned home from a three months visit to San Francisco.

S. G. Sneden has been in town for several days on business in the Superior Court.

W. H. Ualemeyer of Big Pine interviewed the voters of this vicinity during the week on the subject of his election for supervisor of the Third District.

D. J. Hessian came down from Big Pine early in the week and remained in town several days.

Tom Webb and Harry Cook got home from Long Valley a week ago and will remain till after the fair.

Henry Rhine is expected home from San Francisco next week after a visit of two months at the Bay.

The Democrats of Mono county will hold no convention and the candidates will be appointed by the central committee.

The Fall term of the Independence school will begin next Monday with Mr. Janvier as teacher. There will be vacation during Fair week.

Constable Murphy has gone into the stock business. The nucleus of his coming herd is a bull calf now pasturing in one of Mairs' box stalls.

Mining Accident.

On Tuesday morning a telegram from Keeler announcing that Frank Fitzgerald had been caved on at Modock and was still in the mine and Dr. I. J. Woodin and J. J. Gunn started immediately for the scene of the accident. Dr. Woodin in from Modock last night and will start back this evening with a suitable conveyance and bring Mr. Fitzgerald in to Lone Pine. He says that while Fitz was in the mine a large mass of rock caved on him, burying him under it. His head is badly cut and there are cuts and bruises all over his body. His spine was injured as the entire lower body and limbs are paralyzed. Dr. Woodin will attend him constantly and has strong hopes of his ultimate recovery.

J. J. Moore authorizes us this week to withdraw his announcement as a candidate for the office of County Treasurer. For six years Mr. Moore has held the office and also that of postmaster. The close application to business required by the duties of the two offices has injured his health, and he does not feel that he could serve for two years longer. He expects to remove to Washington at the close of his present term of office. For more than twenty years Jack Moore has been identified with the business of Inyo county. That he could be Treasurer as long as he lived is the highest testimonial to his probity and ability.

The following from the Chronicle-Union is not at all complimentary to the voters of Nevada: "The people of Nevada are making fools of themselves over the silver question and hurting the cause they are fighting for. The Republicans had two State Conventions, at one no Harrison Electors were nominated, but it nominated Newlands of San Francisco for Congress. The other Convention nominated Harrison Electors as follows: D. L. Bliss, A. C. Cleveland, and J. R. Farrell. Woodburn was nominated for Congress. The coming election will make Nevada still more ridiculous and despicable in the estimation of the people of the United States."

The Mexicans celebrate the anniversary of their National Independence at Lone Pine to day. Extensive preparations have been made for the event. The town is beautifully decorated and all visitors are cordially welcomed. A grand free ball will be given to-night, and visitors at Lone Pine will be treated to a grand old fashioned time. Quite a number of Independence people will attend the celebration and ball.

In this week's issue will be found the advertisement for the Fair Ball. This affair is always the social event of the year, and the Committee in charge, Directors Rhine McIver and Connelly intend that this year's ball will surpass any yet given. Good music will be provided and the Agricultural Pavilion is the best dance hall in the county.

At a meeting of the Fair Directors held on Friday evening last J. C. Irwin was awarded the bar privilege at the coming fair for the sum of $76, and J. C. Miller the pool privilege paying for it the sum of $37.50.

Hon. John F. Davis of Calaveras, Republican nominee for Congress for this District, spoke on political issues at the Court House on Monday evening. Mr. Davis is a bright young man and his discourse was listened to attentively—but Caminetti will get there just the same.

The close season on quail is out on October 1st. Several parties who have hunted here for a number of years past say there are more quail this year than they have ever seen before. A great many pairs of birds raised two coveys.

ALIAS SUMMONS.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.

FRIEDERICKE RHINE, Executrix of the will of Nathan Rhine, deceased, plaintiff, vs. W. L. HUNTER, CAROLINE HUNTER and J. L. PORTER, defendants.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and the Complaint filed in the office of the Clerk of said County.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIfornia send greeting to W. L. Hunter, Caroline L. Hunter and J. L. Porter, defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, as such executrix, in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county, or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment of this Court for the foreclosure of a certain mortgage described in said complaint and executed by the said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L Hunter on the 10th day of April, 1889, to secure the payment of a certain Promissory Note made by the said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L Hunter to the said Nathan Rhine, now deceased, for the sum of $2,400, with interest thereon from the said 10th day of April, 1889, at the rate of 1½ per cent per month, described in the complaint, which by the lapse of time is now due, no part of which has been paid excepting $60 paid April 10th, 1889, $144 paid October 10th, 1889, $110.35 paid May 10th, 1890, $75 paid September 20th, 1890, $72 paid December 27th, 1890 and $66 paid November 28th, 1891.

Said note is dated April 10th, 1889, that the premises conveyed by said mortgage may be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of said note and interest thereon and costs of suit, and the further sum of 10 per cent on the amount of the judgment found due as counsel fees as provided in said mortgage, and in case such proceeds are insufficient to pay the same, that judgment be docketed against said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L Hunter for the balance remaining due, and also that the said defendants, and all persons claiming by through or under may be barred and foreclosed of all right, title, claim, lien, equity of redemption, and interest in and to said mortgaged premises, and for other and further relief, as will more fully appear by reference to the complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint.

Witness my hand, and the Seal of the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, this 10th day of August, A. D. 1892.

GLADSTONIAN VIEWS OF WOMAN.

The Statesman Has No Admiration for the "Unsexed" Sisterhood.

At the fifty-first anniversary of their marriage Mr. and Mrs. William Gladstone invited a lot of the Burlington high school girls to have an ice with them on the lawn. The girls went in their prettiest white frocks, their brightest ribbons and sweetest smiles, and after congratulations formed a circle about the venerable statesman and held him captive for a "school-girl speech."

What those pretty British maidens heard must have made a very deep impression.

Mr. Gladstone reminded them that they belonged to the favored half of the human race, that they were sweet and lovely because they were women, and that their very presence was sunshine to the world. He "ran over" the achievements of their sisters and their mothers, admitted the improvements their industry and earnestness had brought about, and predicted even greater and better changes. Then he became very emphatic, and jerking his right arm away back let fly a powerful blow at the strong minded grenadier women of the age.

"I do not believe in the unsexed women, and I am not in sympathy with the masculine women. The destiny of the advanced woman is doubtful. The blue stocking, the business woman and the female politician is a superfluity." He referred to the saloon raiders as unlovely, called the political reformers his "shrieking sisters" and numbered the "female bull fighters and female leaguers" among the intolerable evils of society. His observation led him to believe that "the greatest need of the world is home women and home girls to make that sacred spot beautiful, wholesome, lovely." He thought the world too big and too bad for any one club, one organization or one community to reform. Home is a little place, and there a good woman can make a heaven, rear a throne and reign a goddess. In concluding this wise old parliamentarian said, shading his eyes with his hand and looking toward Mrs. Gladstone, who listened attentively and applauded with approving smiles: "I cannot think that anything which attempts or affects to alter fundamentally the relation which the Almighty himself has established, the design of which he has marked out in our constitutions and capacities, or which draw women out of their own sphere, would ever succeed."

Some of his views are most discouraging. He has "the greatest admiration for the woman who has done something in any line, provided she kept away from the public," but has yet to meet the heroine of a career who is not brazen or tiresome. "It is not her fault," he says, "but the result of contamination. No one can elbow the street crowd without losing some of the sweetness we prize in woman." He thinks that the gain that comes from the outer world—from the shop, the rostrum and the public procession—is more than overpowered by the loss of modesty, gentleness, faith and womanly dignity.

When asked what women should do he said: "Marry, make homes, mind their children, keep the honeymoon from eclipse and keep off the street. Any reforms they want to make should be made through the husband."

When told that all women could not marry he said: "It is their own fault, then. A sweet woman cannot be resisted," which means that too many of our girls are being educated and trained on a wrong basis.—London Letter.

Cheating a Landlord.

Some people seem to regard their landlord as a natural enemy, and take every opportunity of having the advantage of him if they can. A man of this sort was a grocer who leased a shop in a leading thoroughfare. Whenever rent day came around this gentleman was sure to demand an abatement for some reason or other. On one occasion he asked a deduction of ten pounds, this being the value of a number of sacks of flour that had been destroyed by the bursting of a waste pipe, which he contended was due to the negligence of the landlord. As it seemed impossible for the leak, which was very trifling, to have caused such an extensive destruction, we resisted the claim and resorted to legal measures to enforce payment of the rent.

Meantime the grocer had discharged an assistant for some offense, and this young man, no doubt by way of doing his late employer a "good turn," informed us that the flour destroyed was some musty old rubbish upon which his master had deliberately poured a few bucketfuls of water. The grocer, on being acquainted with this statement, described it as simply a cock and bull story concocted by the assistant. Later on, however, he seemed to view the matter in a different light, for on the day before that on which the case was set down for hearing he paid the rent in full, and also the court expenses. After that we were troubled with no more claims for damage to goods—so far as this gentleman was concerned.—London Tit-Bits.

Matrimonial Insurance.

An interesting matrimonial insurance company has a healthy existence in Sweden. It does not assure marriage nor insure against marriage, but insures against failure to marry. Its members are young women, who pay a small sum monthly, and if they are unmarried at forty years of age they receive a weekly allowance from the company so long as they continue unmarried.—Exchange.

An Immense Stone.

The largest artificial stone in the world forms the base of the Bartholdi statue of Liberty, on Bedloe's island, New York harbor. This immense stone was made from broken trap rock, sand and American cement. Five hundred carloads of sand and over 20,000 barrels of cement were used in manufacturing this monster.—Chicago Herald.

A Thoughtful Child.

Little Girl—Yes'm—a white one an a black one.

Little Girl—Yes. They is both sheddin their coats awful, and I brought the black one 'cause your dress is black.—Good News.

The Penitent Schoolboy.

A thunderbolt struck a small boy the other day and scooted down his trousers legs. As they picked him up he exclaimed, with agonizing earnestness:

"Oh, teacher, I'll be good!"—Exchange.

A Feminine Casabianca.

The workmen of a new line of electric lights in a western city began to dig a posthole in front of a Dutchman's dwelling, when the master of the house came out and forbade them to continue the work.

After a good deal of wrangling the men announced that they could not waste their time in talking, and prepared to set to work. Thereupon the Dutchman called his wife, and with a dexterous and unexpected movement succeeded in flinging over the hole the men were digging a large, flat slate, upon which he established the lady.

"Now, Gretchen," he said, "dat ish vhere you shtands till I comes back mit ein enjunction."

With many charges to his wife not to stir from that slate until his return, he departed to get the injunction which should force the workmen to cease their labors, and the stolid Dutch frau stood like a statue of immobility, her hands on her hips and defiance painted upon her face.

No sooner had the husband disappeared than the leader of the gang directed his men to take the slate with the frau on it and lift it from its place. It was a pretty severe tug, but it was accomplished, and with perfect politeness the corpulent lady was set to one side as if she had been a fat teapot on a salver.

The work of digging then went merrily forward, and while the Dutch wife held to the letter of her husband's orders with silent fidelity the men set up the tall pole. It was well in its place when the householder was seen returning in breathless haste, waving in his hand the coveted injunction.

When he came panting up and saw what had been done, he was overcome first with astonishment and then with wrath.

"Vy vas you not stood on dat hole?" he demanded of his wife.

"It vas on dis stone dat you vas puts me," she answered.

He looked at her in helpless indignation a moment and then cried:

"I vas not mean dat you shtand on dat stone ven dat hole vas carried away!"—Youth's Companion.

Picturesque Hawaii.

The scenery of windward Hawaii is charming and picturesque in the extreme. Three huge volcanic mountains—Mauna Loa, Mauna Kea and Hualalai—rear their snowcapped domes against the sky to the height of 14,000 feet, forming a triangle toward the center of the island, their slopes clothed with dense forests of richest tropical growth, and grassy plains which trend gradually away to the blue Pacific. They are seamed with numberless ravines or "gulches," not to call them "canyons," and down each a river flows to the sea, varying in width from 100 to 2,000 feet. Many are nearly a mile wide. The waters of some, small and quiet, glide peacefully between meadowy banks to their final destination.

Others, fierce, impetuous mountain torrents, hemmed in by high, precipitous rocks, dash headlong over bowlder and precipice till they lose themselves in the dimpling ocean. Nearly all are liable to sudden and tremendous freshets. Cascades and waterfalls leap from the hills in all directions, and everywhere trees and rocks are covered with exquisite ferns and trailing parasites of all shades and kinds. The "gulches" widen out at their extremities and the sea sweeps into them with drowsy, booming music. Many a journey taken is but a continuous series of descents and ascents across these "gulches."

Thus on the road between Hilo and Laupahaehae no fewer than sixty-five streams must be crossed in a distance of thirty miles. Having ridden for a few hundred yards along a lofty upland, the brink of a stupendous precipice is suddenly reached, a murmur of water ascends from the depths below, and in front is the equally perpendicular precipice on the other side of the tiny valley. A bird would skim across in a few seconds; poor wingless man has to trust to the unshod, surefooted beast under him to scramble up and down the narrow, scarcely winding trails cut out on the faces of the mountains.—Asiatic Quarterly.

The Railroad Refused.

"A great many years ago," said an attorney, "our road had an unnecessary damage suit brought by an exceedingly faithful and competent engineer, whose arm had been torn off by the driving wheels. It was almost a clear case against us from the start, there having been a wreck, wherein the engine was dumped into the river, the engineer thrown from his cab and drifted into the revolving wheels of his engine. I always thought the matter might have been compromised but for the brusquerie of the management. We had a great battle in the courts and were compelled to pay at last the largest amount of damages ever recovered for a similar claim—$50,000. Well, sir, after that man had received his money he came to me and said:

"'See here, I don't know what to do with this money. Just you build or buy me a good home and give me a lifetime job in the roundhouse and I'll return the amount of my damages. I am a plain man, with steady, simple habits, and I would rather work for a living than be tempted into extravagance and perhaps dissipation by this money which I never earned.'"

"And of course you snapped him up?" said a brother attorney.

"Of course I did nothing of the kind. To have a man in our employ who could not be discharged by the company would be disastrous to discipline and a dangerous precedent. Do you see?"

And they all saw. But an unbeliever who sat near by said to himself, "Rats!"—St. Louis Republic.

Effective Persuasion.

There had been an affray among some men and one of them was hurt. A trial took place, and an old clergyman who had seen the fight was called as a witness.

"What was Salson doing?" was the first inquiry.

"Oh, he was slashing around," replied the old man.

"Well, sir, what is that?"

"He was just knocking about him here and there."

"Now, sir, tell us plainly what did he do to this man?" asked the lawyer, with a note of vexation in his voice.

The clergyman thought a moment and then answered slowly:

"Why, he enticed him."

"Enticed him! How?"

"He enticed him with a crowbar. He used the crowbar to persuade the man, to entice him, and by a series of pokes and blows he succeeded," concluded the reverend gentleman.—Exchange.

A Long Vacation.

A London schoolboy brought to his teacher a letter from a physician stating that "this boy is unfit to attend school for 304 days." The long and rather exact period named aroused the teacher's suspicions, and he discovered that the physician had written "3 or 4 days." This the boy had changed to "304 days."—Yankee Blade.

What a "Sea Horse" Looks Like.

The genuine sea horse or hippocampus is a veritable curiosity. It is an osseous or bony fish, with tufted gills like those of the pike family. The average length of specimens found on the east coast of the United States is about five inches, those in the Gulf of Mexico often growing to be eight to ten inches in length. The snout of the creature is rather elongated, and the head highly elevated posteriorly. The ears, which are simply a spiny coronet on the occiput, help to give the little animal's head and neck a striking resemblance to those of a horse. The eyes are very prominent, and can be moved independently of each other and in opposite directions.

This little fish horse suspends itself to seaweed and other marine objects by means of a long, slender, whip-like tail which is without fins. They have but three fins altogether, two pectoral (just behind the ears) and one dorsal. The mouth terminates "suckerlike" and is without teeth. They swim vertically, the tail always ready to wind about any object with which they may come in contact. The dried specimens of this marine oddity convey but a slight idea of the real looks of the creature, its appearance being as graceful and as elegant as one could hope to see in any specimen of the fish family.—St. Louis Republic.

Pipes and Tobacco.

Collectors of tobacco pipes, of whom there are no small number, seldom experience much satisfaction or pleasure in smoking the curious and unfamiliar pipes in their collections. It is necessary to have not only the pipe, but the appropriate tobacco, and to be familiar with the manner of smoking in order to successfully carry on experiments of this kind.

Even the familiar porcelain pipe of the German student, which people buy for its associations or the beauty of its painted bowl, is seldom understood, and few know that the ashes should be allowed to remain in the bowl in order to make it smokable, nor that the coarse, common tobacco called "No. 6" is appropriate for it. The Turkish and Persian water pipes, too, are difficult to manage. They require the fragrant yellow tambake, that must be soaked in water, wrung out and put in the bowl with a live coal or pastelle of camel's dung on top. This pipe is now relegated to the elders, for all the younger generation in western Asia smoke cigarettes.

In eastern Asia, where the pipes retain the small bowl, like those originally introduced from Europe, fine cut tobacco is generally smoked. Japan and China both use this finely cut tobacco.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Good Looks Not a Disadvantage.

At a meeting of the board of education on Wednesday among the recommendations of the committee on finance was the appointment of Miss Rose A. Redgate, of Brooklyn, as a stenographer in the office of the clerk of the board. Before the vote was taken Commissioner O'Brien moved to substitute the name of Miss Hattie L. McCarthy for that of Miss Redgate. "Gentlemen," he said, "would you know why Miss McCarthy was not recommended for the place by our committee on finance? The objection to her was that she is good looking. Gentlemen, that is the first time since I have been a member of this board that I have known of a committee objecting to the handiwork of the Almighty. I do not profess to be an humanitarian, but I do not fear a beautiful woman." When the vote was taken Miss McCarthy was elected by a handsome majority.—New York Tribune.

$7,000 a Year for Remembering Names.

To remember people's names is a great thing. I know a man in a great wholesale establishment in Chicago who gets $7,000 a year just for remembering names. His business is to speak to every one who comes in by name and to introduce the customer to the clerk of the department sought. If he does not introduce the person to the clerk by name, the clerk is expected to find out the name and communicate it quietly to the gentleman near the door, who bids him or her goodby by name. This always flatters people and they come back again.—Washington Star.

Styles of Architecture.

In their architecture the Moresque strove for the negation of the weight altogether; the Egpytian placed the weight firmly on the ground; the Greek lifted it up in the air with an assertion of graceful power; the Roman confused weight and support; the Byzantine represented weight without support; the Moor suggested that there was no weight at all.—London Tablet.

A SENSATION ABROAD.

HOW AN AMERICAN DISCOVERY HAS AWAKENED EUROPE.

The Credit is Due to a Citizen of the United States, but the Benefits are Shared by the Entire World.

London, May 20.—Considerable excitement exists among physicians in Europe as to the nature of the most dangerous of modern diseases, and whether it can be cured. Ten years ago Bright's disease of the kidneys was pronounced incurable by almost the entire medical faculty. To-day many of them are in doubt, and nearly all the most advanced declare that it not only can be regulated, but that it can be absolutely cured.

High authorities have taken steps to ascertain the exact views of the leading physicians of Europe on the subject, and their condensed opinions are given herewith:

Sir Morrell Mackenzie, the leading physician of England, said: "I would say generally that Bright's disease is curable, but the man or woman who is troubled with it must be careful of every action, almost of every thought."

Dr. MacLagan, physician to the Princess Christian and other members of the Royal Family, says: "The name, Bright's disease, covers a multitude of complaints connected with the kidneys, particularly those complaints which are due to inflammation. How to arrest its progress is to answer the question as to what the latest cure may be."

Dr. William Edward Robson, physician of the Royal Navy, declared: "Like the majority of my professional brethren, I have long regarded Bright's disease as incurable. I think so no longer. Hundreds of my patients have been cured by the use of Warner's Safe Cure, and I am willing to acknowledge and recommend, thus frankly, the value of this great remedy."

Dr. Samuel Mills, of Charing Cross, said: "Bright's disease is not necessarily incurable. The duration of life will not be seriously impaired if proper precautions are taken."

Dr. Andrew Wilson, of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, asserts: "Warner's Safe Cure is of a safe character and perfectly reliable."

Prof. Gerhardt, of Berlin, says: "Bright's disease is curable except in cases of a shrinkage of the kidneys, and even then the patient may live from six months to twenty-five years, during which period improvements in health may be secured by the use of remedies insuring the normal action of the heart."

Dr. Hoesh, of Berlin, says: "I have used Warner's Safe Cure myself, as I have been the victim, on taking the least cold, of rheumatism and palpitation of the heart. This sensibility has disappeared, also the action of the heart is quieter."

Prof. Winternitz, of Vienna, says of Bright's rheumatismal disease: "It is curable, and in its other forms life may be prolonged."

Dr. Gustav Weber, of Dessau, Germany, affirms: "By the use of 15 bottles of Warner's Safe Cure my general health has been restored, and I have completely cured myself of Bright's disease of the kidneys."

Dr. Dugardin Beaumetz, of the Academy of Medicine, Paris, said: "The danger in Bright's disease results from the crippled condition of the kidneys, which no longer take out of the system poisons resulting from organic substances. The treatment consists in helping the inefficient action of the kidneys."

Dr. E. H. Whirsel-Huerlimann, of Whippengen, Switzerland, makes the following remarkable assertion: "I am a living example that Bright's disease is curable. I suffered with that complaint for years, and know that the improvement, appetite and strength have been caused through the use of Warner's Safe Cure."

The above facts prove what has been asserted by Mr. H. H. Warner, both in America and abroad, for years, that Bright's disease of the kidneys can be cured. When this claim was first made it was scouted by physicians, but to-day the leading doctors and scientists in both hemispheres agree that Bright's disease not only may be regulated, but can actually be cured. This is both cause for gratitude to the thousands of helpless sufferers who have been restored to health and also for all patriotic people that this discovery for the worst known of all diseases emanated from America and was put forth by an American. Instead of feeling that the hand of death is laid upon the sufferer when the presence of this terrible disease is first discovered, there is ample assurance from the statements of the above-named physicians as to the cause and cure that no sufferer need despond.

A Pilot's Life.

The life of a pilot is filled with delightful uncertainties. He is like a sealed bottle tossed on the waves of the ocean. He may be picked up in a day, and he may be carried over the sea for more than a week before some passing steamer comes to "rescue him." A pilot boat left New York prepared for a two weeks' cruise. Within ten hours from the time she left the bay she was back at Staten Island, all her pilots having been taken off by incoming steamers. She put to sea again and started up the coast. One of her stations is at New port, and she reached there eleven days after her second start, having cruised all over the ocean between New York and Newport without having sighted a single steamer.—New York Tribune.

Bread Tally.

In Philadelphia, not forty years ago, they still kept the old "bread tally." Did you ever hear of it? I never did until this young grandmother told me of it. The customers had two pieces of wood, two or three feet long, fastened together by the ends, so that they were about an inch apart. When the baker came with the bread he would put a third rod between the other two rods, and with a file make a notch on the three. He kept the middle rod, and both parties keep accurate accounts of their business. In Canada the habitans still keep their accounts in this way.—Julian Ralph in Chatter.

The Value of Diversity in Work.

As no man is fit to be a specialist who has not a broad culture independent of his specialty, so no man can perform the best intellectual labor in his own department who does not extend his labors beyond it, making forays into new countries, whence he will almost always return laden with spoils which he can utilize in his own proper sphere of service.—Professor A. P. Peabody in Forum.

THE RESULT OF MERIT.

When anything stands a test of fifty years among a discriminating people like the Americans, it is pretty good evidence that there is merit somewhere. The value of a medicine is best proved by its continued use from year to year by the same persons and families, as well as by a steady increasing sale. Few, if any, medicines have met with such continued success and popularity as has marked the introduction and progress of Brandreth's Pills, which, after a trial of over fifty years, are conceded to be the safest and most effective purgative and blood purifier introduced to the public.

That this is the result of merit, and that Brandreth's Pills actually perform all that is claimed for them, is conclusively proved by the fact that those who regard them with the greatest favor are those who have used them the longest.

Brandreth's Pills are sold in every drug and medicine store, either plain or sugar coated.

Do not stare at the ladies in the street. You may cause them to think that you are admiring them, and therefore make them vain.

THE TEMPTATION

To go out of doors in rough weather is not strong, but we are, many of us, compelled to face rough weather frequently. Diseases which arise from a chill are peculiar to no season of the year. This is true, therefore there should be in the closet of every household—what? Not an unmedicated stimulant, absolutely devoid of anything but an excitive action, but a tonic combining, in the effective form of an invigorant and an alterative, the quality of defence against enemies of weather. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has three or four properties that no other article of its class possesses. Not only does it relieve the complaints which it eventually cures, it fortifies the system against the ill effects of changes of temperature, fatally and too often shown in the deadly form of "la grippe;" it produces a radical change in the weakened condition of a system peculiarly liable to be attacked by it, and it tends to provide against the danger resulting from an impoverished condition of the blood and a disordered state of the liver or bowels.

$100 REWARD. $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

THE TRUTH.

Friend, though thy soul should burn thee, yet be still;
Thoughts were not lent for strife, nor tongues for swords.
He that sees clear is gentlest of his words,
And that's not truth that hath the heart to kill,
The whole world's thought shall not one truth fulfil.
Dull in our age, and passionate in youth;
No mind of man hath found the perfect truth;
Nor shalt thou find it; therefore, friend, be still.

Watch and be still, nor hearken to the fool,
The babbler of consistency and rule;
Wisest is he who, never quite secure,
Changes his thoughts for better day by day;
To-morrow some new light will shine, be sure,
And thou shall see thy thought another way.
—Archibald Lampman in Philadelphia Ledger.

LOVE'S QUEER WAYS.

The Central park was at its freshest that evening, so were we.

She was 17 and I was 21. We were engaged to each other, and had gone to the paradise of lovers to "spoon," just as scores of other lovers had, even in those days when the park was a new place and the trees so thin that the lovers were easily recognized by friends, who enjoyed making fun of them afterward.

I do not intend to tell you just who we were. If I call her Agnes and myself Arthur you will know as much about us as you need to know.

Our fathers were both men of wealth, with the Van prefix to their names, and had business relations with each other, though as I had been sent away to college and Agnes was not "out" yet, we had not met since we were babies.

However, one day my father had called me into his office and said to me:

"Arthur, Van G—— had a talk with me today. He is anxious that you should see his only daughter, Agnes. She is very pretty, accomplished, and all that, and though of course nothing will be done to influence either of you I should like it, too. All I ask is that you should make her acquaintance, and if you like her—and she likes you—I shall be pleased. If you don't, why, it cannot be helped."

"Of course I shall not, and of course she will detest me," I answered. "But introduce me."

He did three days afterward and I fell in love at first sight.

Agnes was the loveliest creature I ever saw. I think so still, and my father was as pleased as man could be to hear me say so.

My father was an amiable as well as a sensible man, and we all adored him.

Van G——, on the contrary, was a perfect demon in temper, though a very brilliant man in his own line, the money making one.

His children trembled when they heard him coming; folk said that he had killed his wife with unkindness, and every one in his employ hated him.

But Agnes smiled and spoke like an angel. She seemed to have the disposition of one, and being a golden haired girl who dressed in white whenever it was admissible, her whole appearance carried out the idea.

As for me, I have a photograph taken at that date, which represents a very good looking young man. I had perfect health, good spirits, nothing to worry about and a fortune ready made for me. I was a general favorite in society, and felt, when I thought the matter over, that I was not an objectionable parti. Shortly I proposed to Agnes and she replied: "Ask papa."

I asked him; he accepted me.

"In fact," he said, grasping me by the hand, "I am delighted to think of you as a future son-in-law. I've always dreaded my girl's throwing herself away on some nobody of a drummer or something. Now you are your father's son, of course, and all that, you know, and the sooner it comes off the better."

I had expected to be well received, but it was delightful all the same. The wedding day was set, everybody on both sides was delighted, and I the happiest fellow in the world. My betrothed, it is true, was very coy, and would scarcely permit a kiss, still, when she was my wife I felt that I should be all the happier.

I cannot tell you how fond I was of her or how proud I was of her. I thought myself the happiest creature alive that evening as we turned into the paths of the park and took our way to the ramble. Then, as today, it was patronized by lovers of the humbler classes, but Agnes was very fond of walking there. Indeed it was she who had proposed going there that evening. I remember just where we sat down on one of the benches near the lake. A little way from us sat another couple who were affectionate enough to excite my envy, though the girl wore a long shapeless linen ulster and a hat with a blue veil tied about it. There was no one else in sight, and the moonlight was so bright that we could see a long distance.

A certain chill had come into the air, which had driven most of the happy couples home, and I had asked Agnes if it was unpleasant, and she had replied that it was delicious, and I was not yet old enough to feel anxious about the changes of the weather. Usually we went home earlier, but it was so delightful to me to sit there alone with her that I was careful to make no remark about the time. Suddenly Agnes said to me:

"Arthur, I suppose you will think me very silly, but I can't help fancying that some one is hiding beyond that large oak tree yonder. I feel nervous about it. Every now and then a face peeps from behind the bushes."

"A face?" said I.

"Yes," said she, clinging to my arm; "and it frightens me."

"There is no one there," said I. "It is all imagination."

"I can't help feeling as if it was some one who intended us harm," Agnes said tremulously.

"I see what you mean," said I. "It is a bunch of yellow leaves on a bush beyond the oak, which the wind now and then blows into sight."

She gave a curious little laugh.

"You may be right," Agnes said. "It is, perhaps, all my own nervousness, but there it is again. A man's head, I am sure."

"Oh, I'll convince you that it is not," I said. "I'll pick the bunch of leaves."

"Do," pleaded Agnes. "I shall have no peace until I see them."

"Come," I said, offering her my arm.

"Oh, no, Arthur," she answered, "let me stay here. I would no more dare to walk up to that oak tree than to face a loaded cannon."

This was so unlike her that I felt surprised, but of course her word was law to me. I kissed her hand and hurried away toward the old oak. The presence of the man and woman on the next seat was protection enough for the very few minutes necessary for my task, and as I went I took my knife from my pocket.

At the oak I turned my head and waved my hand, and then went on toward the bush. At this moment I lost sight of Agnes. I stood with my back toward the bench for a time, sufficient to cut away a bunch of the yellow leaves, and to close my knife and put it in my pocket.

The bench on which Agnes had been seated was not fully in sight until I had passed the old oak; then I saw it plainly.

The moon had just risen. A flood of silver light swept across the spot. The bench was empty!

My first idea was that Agnes had hidden herself behind some bushes, but when I looked about me and still saw no sign of her I fancied that she intended a practical joke, and seated myself on the bench.

"Ah!" I cried, "that was your plan, was it? I know exactly where you are. Come here and see the man's head."

There was no answer. I began to search about, first playfully and then anxiously. It was not long before the matter ceased to be a joke. The loving couple were still seated on the neighboring bench absorbed in each other.

"I beg pardon, sir," I said, addressing the man. "The young lady who was with me—have you seen her? I left her alone for a moment while I examined something that alarmed her, and I find her gone."

"No one has passed us here," said the young man rising. "Jane, did you notice any one?"

The girl in the ulster and blue veil shook her head.

"No," said the young man; "permit me to help you look for the lady."

We searched the spot anxiously for half an hour, my heart beating like a drum with terror. Then he said:

"You had better notify the park police, sir, unless you feel sure that the lady wasn't just a little huffy, and hasn't gone home by herself to vex you. That's like women folk."

He was very civil, but he was evidently a commonish sort of a person. For a girl of Miss G——'s position and manners to show "vexation" by going home alone after dark in a "huff" was impossible, but I took the suggestion. As we parted he promised to remain where he was for a while, and if Agnes should return to see her safely out of the park on her way homeward.

Having sent a messenger to Mr. Van G—— I remained with those who searched the park, and shortly we were joined by the father of Agnes, who, according to his nature, was more furious than frightened and abused me heartily for leaving his daughter, even for a moment, alone. I could not blame him—I was full of self reproach. But it was many days before I accepted the terrible truth—that I should never see Agnes again.

Everything was done that it was possible for energy or money to do, but we never found a trace of her. Gradually I came to the conclusion that she had been murdered, and that her body had been so well concealed that it could never be found. Mr. Van G—— believed as I did.

"The only obedient child I ever had," he said; "the others are without a sense of filial duty. I meant to leave her every thing."

As for me, I felt the blow terribly and became a moody and unhappy man. I forsook society, lived the life of a hermit and being rich had nothing to force me to a healthy occupation. Occasionally I went to Mr. Van G——'s. He had driven all his other daughters from him by his brutality but together we often shed a tear for our poor lost Agnes.

When I was 40 years of age the old man died. I attended his funeral and was, perhaps, the only one that felt real sorrow, and that was chiefly because we had shared the same trial.

The reading of the will came at the usual time, and to that I was summoned. I arrived early. In the library, where the will was to be read, sat only a middle aged woman, rather shabbily attired, but bearing a certain family likeness to the Van G——s which made me fancy that she was a poor cousin, whose futile hopes of legacy had brought her thither.

As I sat quietly by the window I saw her look at me. Suddenly she arose and came to me.

"You don't remember me, Arthur?" she said.

I made no answer. As she spoke the most startling ideas entered my mind—ideas that were madness. She saw it in my face what they were, and answered them.

"I am Agnes," she said—"Mrs. Jessup now. I suppose you think I'm dreadful. How you did fly about looking for me. Dear—dear! And poor pa. How he swore but it was all because he was so ferocious. He beat sister Ann for engaging herself to Mr. Smith, and he turned Selina away from the door in a storm for liking poor young Brown. I was afraid of him. So when he told me Mr. Jessup must not call I said, 'Yes, sir.' And when he said I must be engaged to you I said yes, too, but I liked William Jessup, and I never intended to marry you. That young man on the next bench was William Jessup, and when we sat down his little brother wore the ulster and blue veil, but as soon as you were out of sight he slipped out of them and I put them on and sat there all the while. After you went we walked away.

"I thought I should die, it was so funny. Of course I knew pa never would forgive me if he knew—he wasn't that kind. But now I may get something. William said I'd better come and see.

"We've had hard luck. I shall be awfully glad if I can take home a few dollars."

I listened quietly. Agnes was yet almost pretty, but she had lost all her distinction, had caught vulgar ways of speech and a common intonation—doubtless from Mr. Jessup. She wore ill fitting false teeth and a false front of curls that did not match her hair. My beautiful memory of my betrothed faded as I gazed at the real product of years of common association, and the first thought that I found myself able to formulate was—what a fool I have made of myself.

"Can't believe your senses, can you?" said she.

"Oh, yes," said I; "it was a surprise at first, but I quite realize the facts of the case. I think that the will—which leaves everything to a charity—has a codicil, which leaves it all to you if you should prove to be living.

"'I know she is dead,' your father said, 'but that is my way of showing my appreciation of my only obedient child.'"

"Poor pa," said Mrs. Jessup. Here the entrance of other persons interrupted our conversation.

I was right about the will, which the other relatives endeavored to dispute in vain. I received a diamond ring as a memento of Mr. Van G—— and our "common grief," and wear it to this day. And to-morrow I am to be married to a very charming lady, my only regret being that I have wasted so many years in mourning for a young lady who played me such an exceedingly shabby trick.—Buffalo News.

DECORATING.

A Woman Who Has Achieved Great Success in this Branch of Art.

HER IDEA OF BEAUTIFYING A HOME.

Expensive Furnishings Not a Necessity.—Correct Use of Materials is the Main Thing.

The development of the art of household decoration has opened to women one of the most delightful and suitable professions that in these days of woman's work can attract the time and talent of the sex. To transform barren, often ugly, rooms into attractiveness is a truly feminine task. All women are supposed to have some æsthetic taste, or at least to love beauty even if they are so unfortunate as to lack all power of creating it for themselves. Who, indeed, does not admire the talent that changes a graceless corner into an "early English" conceit, or transforms a barren fireplace into an Eastlakean dream? The little house that was so poor and bare has become a paradise of rest to eye and heart, and tired steps grow lighter with the joy of being there. Such tasks belong in some degree to all home making, and are not confined to professional decorators, but it is nevertheless true that training is needed to make one an artist in this respect. But training alone will not do it.

MUST BE AN ARTIST.

The decorator should be born an artist. So important has this art of decoration become that even the housekeeper's skill is measured less by her ability to buy roasts than by her faculty for metamorphosing garret furniture into art studies, or with an inexpensive bit of cheesecloth or cretonne evolving beauty out of unsightly walls or windows. In recent years most of our dry goods stores have added what are called art departments, where are displayed all sorts of æsthetic fancies for home adornment. At first a corner or an upper floor was all that was needed to show these goods. Now what a change! Not only must there be wide spaces for cases and counters, but a window or two on the main floor must be devoted to the display of newest designs. There must be a designer, too, to preside over the department, suggest ideas to buyers and make suitable selections. These places are often filled by women who are thorough artists in their way and who are well paid for their interesting work.

A woman who stands at the head of her profession in this line is Mrs. Lillian Benfey. Her fame extends all the way from New York to Denver. She does not believe in sitting down and weeping because the world is so large and women are oppressed. Her motto has been to look on the bright side of things, and if the somber, unfinished side will persist in turning toward her, well, let it turn, and with a strip of velvet, a bit of ribbon, a few Kensington stitches and a touch of the stencil here and there take away the gloomy aspect. It is because of her natural aptitude for this that she can draw a salary of $1,200 a year, and that Inn Keeper Southgate, of the Auditorium hotel, gave her carte blanche to furnish his private parlors. Her own parlors on the south side are said to be faithful copies of the famous Moorish room in the Hoffman house, New York.

Mrs. Benfey talks entertainingly about decorative effects and how they are produced. She says: "When I enter a room to plan its decoration and furnishing I look first at its prevailing color, for of course this is to be my background. My ideas must be regulated by it.

BASE OF OPERATIONS.

"Next I look around for desirable bases of decoration. A mantel is one, the bare wall opposite another. Then follow corners, and last of all furniture. My chief effort will likely be the mantel. In selecting material my greatest care must be not to take anything which has become passe or out of style, for a woman will quickly detect old ideas. It may be a charming bit, but if it has been used the season before no one will have it. A trifling blunder in this respect will be as objectionable as if my work were out of tone. When the mantel suits me I attack a corner. So few women know how to treat a nook. It is the easiest thing in the world to overdo here. If handled perfectly when finished it will be as beautiful as a painting.

"In treating materials I avoid embroidery as much as possible. Too much embroidery detracts from a high art finish. Turkish goods, with all their oriental coloring and designs, can almost always be substituted. However, there is nothing to equal a simple figure in magnified wheat or clover, done with orange colored rope linen on Roman red portieres. Draperies in solid colors, as a rule, are not hurt when illuminated with well chosen needlework. Although my sample card contains over a hundred stitches—and I think there is not a stitch in the world that I am not familiar with—I do not encourage a stampede toward that sort of work.

FURNITURE AN AFTERTHOUGHT.

"The work of supplying furniture for a room is an afterthought. Cushions and pillows consisting of odd designs may be picked up anywhere. For the latter use those queer little pieces collected from stocks of Eastern importers, making it a rule never to duplicate anything." It is in this style of furnishing that Mrs. Benfey's talents are brought into play. If she has nothing that will answer her purpose like a true artist she proceeds to create something. Any decorator can reproduce, but it is only the true artist who can create at will. Her manner of treating baskets, toilet articles and the hundred and one things about a house which admit of adornment is her peculiar forte.

From a hand painted frieze on moleskin velvet she depends on a group of etchings, attaching a butterfly knot of some gobelin tinted ribbons to destroy the appearance of studied arrangement. Beneath the whole she places a Chippendale, setting a Kabyle pot or an old vase on the top to complete the group, so that the effect of the whole—table, pottery, needlework and pictures—is complete from the floor up. The placing of ceramics on the cabinet above the mantel requires equal care and should never be left to one who is not a mistress of her art.—Chicago News.

The Hostess' Golden Rule.

It was a lady who had long presided over a cultivated home of wealth and who had there received many people of distinction and a host of friends who once remarked "My rule for entertaining is a very simple one. The first day I try to entertain my guests. The second day I leave them to entertain themselves. The third day I expect them to entertain me." Any one who has ever been privileged to enjoy that lady's hospitality can testify that her rule ought to head the ten commandments of social observance.—Waterbury American.

CARESSES TO BE AVOIDED.

A Visitor to the Lion Learns Some Things He Did Not Know Before.

"Yes, he's a friendly old chap," said the lion keeper. "He was born in captivity at Barnum's headquarters in Bridgeport, Conn., and he'll let even a stranger scratch him behind the ears."

The stranger tried the experiment cautiously, and the lion seemed pleased.

"Now, he'll lick your hand for thanks, if you like," added the keeper. "Don't be afraid; his teeth are nearly all gone, anyway."

The stranger put his hand through the bars again, and at the keeper's word of command the well trained lion gave it a gentle lick with his tongue.

"Wow! Great Scott!" exclaimed the owner of the hand, as he jerked it out and looked at it ruefully. If a piece of sandpaper had been applied to it vigorously it would have looked and felt about the same. "Lost his teeth, did you say? His tongue is covered with them."

"Well," said the keeper, with a good natured grin at the success of his practical joke, "you're just about right. A lion's tongue is covered with strong horny little hooks—papillæ is the scientific name for them—and they all point backward. When he licks hard he can scrape the meat and cartilage off the bones of a tough horse quicker than you could with a sharp knife."

"I suppose you have to feed a lion as old as this one on what the others would regard as dainties?" said the visitor.

"No," answered the keeper, "as a general thing a lion won't eat at all or he'll eat anything in the fresh meat line. The whole cat tribe has a low sense of taste. You have often seen a cat lick herself, haven't you? She gets handfuls of hair in her mouth without minding it at all. Consider what discomfort one hair produces in the mouth of a human being whose sense of taste is delicate."

"This old fellow's claws are pretty well worn down," said the visitor. "I suppose by constant use on the floor and walls of his cage."

"He has one claw not worn down at all," answered the keeper, "but I'll bet you can't detect it."

The visitor looked at all the paws and could see nothing but well worn claws. "Where is it?" he asked.

"At the end of the tail," said the keeper.

"Oh, now," remarked the visitor, "no more jokes on me today, thank you."

The keeper put his hand between the bars, caught the patient ex monarch of the forest by the tail and showed the visitor a sort of horny hook concealed among the long hairs at the end of it. "What use it serves there," he added, "naturalists don't know, I believe. Some say he uses it to lash himself into a rage. Next time you look at any books on Nineveh, notice how the old Assyrians exaggerated this hook on the tails of lions carved upon their funny old marbles."—New York Tribune.

Curing an Otter Skin.

A full grown sea otter is from four to five feet long and perhaps a foot or more wide. When a hunter secures one he loosens the hide from the nose and head and, without cutting it lengthwise at all, he pulls the skin down over the body, the hide being so elastic that this is not a difficult job. It is then stretched over a smooth board 6½ feet long, 9 inches wide at one end and 10 at the other end. Each end of this board is tapered to a point. Another board exactly the same size is then inserted, and the skin is stretched a foot or eighteen inches longer than its original length.

A third board, half the length of the other, is wedged in and the skin lightly tacked at the ends to hold it in place. If any flesh adheres to the skin it is then cut off, and the hide is cured and dried in this condition. In a few days it is taken off of the boards and turned fur side out, when it is ready for market.—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

A High Tunnel.

A remarkable piece of engineering work is the tunnel of the Parana Oroya railroad through an Andean mountain peak at Galera, Peru. It is at an elevation of 600 feet above the perpetual snow line, and is 3,847 feet long. It is the highest railroad tunnel in the world, and is located in the highest inhabited region in the world. The town of Galera is 15,635 feet above the sea level, nearly 1,500 feet higher than the hotel on the top of Pike's peak.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Why Negroes Can Bear Heat.

The function of a negro's black skin is supposed to be the conversion of the sun's light into heat. The heat thus generated remains in the skin and does not penetrate to the deeper tissues. Being thus provided with a sun proof armor, the negro can stand an amount of heat that would be fatal to a white man and run little or no risk of sunstroke.—St. Louis Republic.

PETROLEUM'S RISE

Story of the Discovery and Growth of the Pennsylvania Oil Fields.

WONDERFUL OUTPUT OF THE WELLS

The Land on Which the First Well was Found was Traded for a Cow.—Fortunes Made and Lost.

Very few people are cognizant even in western Pennsylvania of the rapidity of development in the petroleum business from the time, thirty-seven years ago, when it was known as Seneca oil.

Active operations began in 1858, when Col. Drake, of New Haven, was employed to sink an artesian well for Bissell & Eveleth, who had leased the Titusville oil springs in 1854 from Brewer, Watson & Co., paying them $5,000 for a ninety-nine year lease.

A few years before the land had been traded to a man named Chase for a cow. At first Bissell & Eveleth had trenches dug, which filled with water and oil, and this was pumped into vats. The well drilled by Drake struck oil at a depth of 69½ feet. It September it pumped forty barrels a day, which sold at 50 cents a gallon. It began to hurt the coal oil distilleries which made oil from shale and cannel coal.

Operations spread down Oil creek, and in December, 1859, a well was struck at the Buchanan farm, near Rouseville, but it was a small one. Mr. Harper states that the first crude oil delivered in Pittsburg was from the Albion well, on the Allegheny river, owned by Phillips, Frew & Co. This well made fifty barrels a day. The oil sold at 30 cents a gallon, with the provision that the barrels be returned. The machinery, supplies and men necessary to drill the well were shipped in the old canal packet Crystal Palace.

WHEN WELLS MULTIPLIED.

In 1860 the petroleum trade began to be recognized as a business worth something more than curious mention, but its magnitude had not impressed itself, for the people rated production of crude in gallons and not in barrels. There were no oil exchanges to rouse public attention. Some big wells made their appearance, but not many. The Hamilton-McClintock, two miles above Oil City, started off at sixty gallons a minute, and was worth 22 cents a gallon at the wells. The Economites began to rake in shekels at Tidioute, and refineries began to spring up in various places. Crude sold in this city at 60 cents a gallon.

Royalty to land owners, now ranging from one-eighth to one-fourth delivered in pipe lines, then ranged from one-fourth to three-fourths, and the oil was furnished to the land owner in iron hooped barrels, which ranged in price from $2.50 to $3.25 each. This arrangement bankrupted some operators in 1862, when the price of crude dropped to 10 cents a barrel, and they allowed many thousands of barrels to flow into Oil creek and down the Allegheny river. As Senator Ingalls might say, their iridescent dreams of wealth were speedily dissipated. In September three-quarters of the oil in barrels furnished by the operators was paid for the lease of a lot seventy-five feet front at Titusville.

In 1861 the greatest wells ever struck were brought in on Oil creek. One in Butler county, on the Marshall farm, some years ago made a larger flow at the outset, but it did not hold out long. The breaking out of the rebellion and consequent panic prostrated petroleum business in the early part of the year, but a revival of the industry took place during the summer as the prospect began to grow for increased uses for oil. In August there were 800 wells between Oil City and Titusville. In September the Phillips No. 2, on the Tarr farm, was struck. Its first day's production was 4,000 barrels. The Empire was also flowing 2,500 a day. The oil was so plenty that wells were plugged, when they could be thus restrained, but many thousands of barrels were allowed to run into the creek, and the Allegheny river was covered with oil for many miles below Franklin.

GROWTH IN 1862.

The Woodford well on the Tarr farm was struck in December and made 3,000 barrels a day. This well ruined the Phillips No. 2, and in turn was ruined. The water was not cased off in those days, and when the tubing was drawn at the Phillips the Woodford began flowing b. s. The same trouble developed at that time on the upper end of the Blood farm. It is said the boring of the Woodford well was instigated by pure hoggery, with intent to ruin the Phillips No. 2. The attempt was successful, but it didn't pay the owners of the Woodford. The Coquette was also one of the old time spouters of great renown. She was owned by Dr. Egbert, who now does business at 96 Fourth avenue, this city.

The year 1862 was more memorable for trade agitation regarding oil than for large wells. The market in this country broke down this year, though a gallon of refined cost in this city as much as a barrel of crude does today. The cost of hauling was immense, and pipe line projects began to take shape.

The teamsters and their friends in the oil country were a powerful party, and they opposed the pipe line proposition, and some lines were destroyed in places and there were riots. Congress proposed to lay a tax of five cents a gallon on crude, more than twice what it sells for now, and ten cents a gallon on refined, and meetings of producers were held to protest. Titusville was then the center for the producers. The cost of sending a barrel of oil to New York was $7.45, and steamboats charged $2 a barrel for bringing it from Oil City to Pittsburg. Crude ranged in price this year from 10 cents in January to $2.25 per barrel in December at wells. Some people were ruined and others made colossal fortunes thereby, but the Standard hadn't been born, and the surplus was only 100,000 barrels in October.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Why Dennis Escaped.

A recruit in the medical ranks had been sent forth with instructions to initiate the occupants of a couple of double deckers in the delights of properly applied vaccine virus.

Things ran smoothly until he encountered a suspicious Irishwoman, who dwelt with her shockheaded children in the lordly heights of the seventh floor.

The doctor pounced upon the eldest boy and was preparing to make the initial scratch, when his mother stopped him.

"Is it vaccinatin thot is?" she queried.

"Yes, madam," answered the doctor.

"Well, it's divil a bit av it ye'll do to my bye Dennis."

The Wide Umbrella.

It was told of one distant corner of Scotland that umbrellas were sported only by the laird and the minister, and were looked upon by the common class of people as perfect phenomena. To see the minister or the laird go by with an umbrella over his head was as good as a circus to the small boys of the village.

One day Daniel McPherson called upon the laird to pay his rent. As he was about to leave a hard shower came on, and Daniel, being a well to do man and much "respected," the laird politely offered him the use of an umbrella. Daniel proudly accepted the loan, and much elated walked off with his head held several inches higher than usual.

He had not been gone many minutes, however, when, to the laird's surprise, he sees Daniel posting back with all possible haste, the umbrella still held firmly over his head.

"Hae, hae, kornel," he called out, "this'll never do! There's nae a door in a' my house that'll tak' it in! My verra barn door winna tak' it in!"

Poor Daniel's head had not yet grasped the idea that the umbrella must be shut up before he tried to take it in the door.—Harper's Young People.

A Dream and Thirteen.

Bishop Burnet in his story of the conversion and death of the famous Earl of Rochester is particularly interesting. He states that his lordship told him of an odd presage his chaplain had of his approaching death in the house of the earl's mother-in-law, the Lady Warre. This chaplain had dreamed that such a day he should die, but being by all the family put out of the belief of it he had almost forgot it till the evening before at supper, there being thirteen at table, according to a fond conceit that one of these must soon die, one of the young ladies pointed to him that he was to die.

He, remembering his dream, fell into some disorder, and the Lady Warre reproving him for his superstition he said he was confident he was to die before morning, but he being in perfect health it was not much minded. It was Saturday night, and he was to preach the next day. He went to his chamber and sat up late, as appeared by the burning of his candle, and he had been preparing his notes for his sermon, but was found dead in his bed the next morning.

Profit from Paris Refuse.

The total profit drawn by the Paris ragpickers directly from the refuse of Paris averages 71,400 francs, or not far short of $15,000 a day. An inevitable but not uninstructive comparison here suggests itself. The refuse of London, which must be worth considerably more than double that of Paris, is almost absolutely wasted. Every place labeled "Rubbish shot here" illustrates the fact. A striking incident recently occurred in the making of a railway embankment in a London suburb. A good deal of it consisted of truckloads of refuse brought down from town—such refuse as the Paris chiffonier, with his orange peel and scraps of paper, hardly dreams of. Out of that London rubbish heap he could have drawn in a single afternoon more than he would make at home in a month.—London Saturday Review.

SLOT MACHINES.

There Seems to be no End to the Ingenuity of Inventors.

AN AUTOMATIC APOTHECARY SHOP.

It Requires a Small Fortune to Place a Good Machine on the Market.—Insurance for a Nickel.

"The slot and nickel business is yet in its infancy," remarked a Jerseyman who is engaged in manufacturing automatic machinery of the most persuasive kind to coax people to part with their nickels. "This country is the greatest field in the world for this branch of industry for two reasons. The main one is that Americans are improvident and never stop to think that twenty nickels make a dollar. The other one is that the nickel is the only coin in this world which is built in the right way to encourage genius in this direction. No other country has a standard coin adapted to the devices, and one which is so popular, so uniform, and so slightly valued. The five cent piece of this country was made for automatic machinery, and not the machines to suit the money. This may sound queer, but I mean that the changes in the size and weight of the coin have been so slight since it was first put in circulation that it encouraged inventors to make slots and other devices to put it in.

"The first slot machine I remember seeing was a race course in a southern hotel. A nickel started the horses. I think I first saw the machine in 1873, and I believe it to be one of the first devices of the kind in this country, but I have no doubt that historians can rake up testimony to show that Attic drachmas were dropped into slots by ancient Greeks, who sought to learn their weight or test their grip, and that in Cæsar's time the Romans dropped small coins into slots and thus procured their confectionery.

"It is only within a few years that the slot machines have assumed any prominence. People are beginning to think now that the field of ingenuity is about exhausted, but they are mistaken. It has really just begun to open. There will be something new every few months, for I know half a dozen like myself who are puzzling their brains over new devices. I am so thoroughly identified with the business now that people stop me and ask what I am going to get out next, and try to engage machines in advance without knowing what they are going to be.

"I recently had a queer call from a man who wants to be a monopolist. He asked me if I could devise an automatic machine to sell hot Frankfurter sausages, and I told him that I thought I could. He wanted a machine actuated by nickels which would deliver a hot sausage incased in a split roll, just as the peddlers do it on the streets. I said that it could be done, and when he wanted to talk terms I said $20,000 down to be put in preliminaries and $50,000 to come when the machine was a success. He couldn't figure enough out of it to talk business. I have an application from a man who wants a machine to deliver, consecutively, numbered and dated cards, which, in addition, will show the exact hour at which the card is taken from the box. I am working on a model. I think he wants to use the machines for accident policy tickets. I saw a machine a few weeks ago which for a nickel sold a cheap edition of novels. Pens, lead pencils, chewing gum, matches, electric shocks, etc., are so commonly dispensed by automatic machines that they cease to be remarked.

"Now I am getting up a decided novelty—an automatic doctor filled with pure drugs in capsules, which will drop out as the pennies are dropped in. Each machine will have from a dozen to twenty compartments marked with the name of the drug, the quantity to take for a dose and the ills that the remedy is supposed to alleviate. Of course poisonous drugs cannot go in it, but others can, and I believe it will be a success. Just think what an accommodation it would be to be able to go up to a machine and get your dose of quinine, a headache cure, a remedy for the grippe or a dose of salts without having to disturb the repose of a drug clerk. Then I am thinking over a fountain which will deliver a good glass of lemonade, or, in fact, soda water, with assorted sirups. There is really no end to the applications that can be made of automatic machines and no limit to the field of operation. They go everywhere, from the church fair down, and all sorts of people drop their pennies and nickels into them.

"I know of weighing machines which take in from $18 to $20 a week. Now, there is an impression abroad that automatic machines are receptacles for bad coins, brass checks and other things which will operate the levers. In fact, the percentage of bad money is not one-tenth of 1 per cent. The machines are not complicated, but safeguards lie inside of the slot to prevent the introduction of wires. Smaller coins than five cent pieces fall aside after entering the slots and are caught in a separate receptacle. The good coin falls a certain distance and strikes a lever just hard enough to release the machinery. A lead "nickel" will do this, but even so the loss is nothing in the majority of machines. None of the machines are sold. They are usually put out on shares running from 10 to 20 per cent., and this satisfies those who have the machines in charge."—New York Sun.

HOW TO VOTE.

THE NEW BALLOT LAW AND HOW TO USE IT.

Text of the Law and Explanatory Cuts and Sample Ticket—The Law Said to Be Safe Against Repeaters and Vote Buyers—Read It Over and File the Paper Away for Reference.

The new Australian ballot law is now in force in this state, and every voter is interested in knowing how to comply with the law in casting his ballot.

A few municipal elections have been conducted under the new plan, and others are yet to be held before the final test of the law is to be made at the fall general election. To assist voters to a proper understanding of the way to do it, we print herewith the full text of the law and illustrations of the voting booths.

Cut No. 1 shows the boxes or compartments in which the voter prepares his ballot.

Cut No. 2 shows the position of the ballot clerks, voters in the stalls, and the officers of election checking the voters as they deposit the ballots in the box near the exit. Enter with the man to the right of the cut, and get a ballot from the gentleman standing at the end of the table, provided the young man at the desk finds your name properly registered in the great register open before him.

Then walk over to one of the open stalls and mark your ballot in accordance with your wishes, and pass in front of the group at the left, and announce your name to the judges of election. If the young man sitting at the desk finds your name properly registered, you are permitted to deposit the ballot in the box and pass out. That is all there is to it. Cut No. 3 shows the ground plan of Cut No. 2, with the positions of each election officer and voter indicated.

It has been claimed by some that the new law can be beaten, and that vote buying cannot be prevented by the experiment. The following editorial from the San Francisco Examiner seems to state the case about as fairly as it can be done:

"A correspondent of the Examiner warned the California electors of the method by which the Australian ballot system was beaten in Montana. It was a variation of the 'Tasmania dodge,' a voter being bribed to bring out a ballot by substituting a piece of blank paper for the official ballot that was given him on entering the booth. In the 'Tasmania dodge' the voter was supposed to vote the blank paper, in the Montana case to tear it up. The official ballot

"But a second check, still more valuable, prevents any illicit use of the ballot even if it is taken outside. When the voter enters the booth the ballot clerks mark the check number of his ballot against his name on the printed register. When he marks the ballot he folds it with the counterfoil or tag that bears the number of the ballot exposed, and delivers the ballot to the inspector. The inspector announces the name and number, the ballot clerks verify it from their record, and the inspector tears off the tag and drops the ballot in the box. If the ballot does not bear the same number as the one he received from the ballot clerks he cannot vote.

"The California ballot system cannot be 'beaten' in this manner except by the collusion of the election officers, challengers and watchers of both parties. It is hardly possible to secure so large a number of corrupt men together, or at all events men corrupted by the same side. Whatever vote buying is done under the system will have to be carried out under the 'assistance to illiterates' provision. This will be a possible but dangerous game to play. It will require the collusion of election officers, and will be readily detected by the watchers. The November election will show whether an amendment on this point will be necessary."

The sample ballot given is intended to show how to mark votes. If a straight ticket is voted, an X in the space at the right of the party for which the voter desires to cast his ballot is sufficient. But a split ticket requires an X opposite each name voted for. Only one office is on this ticket. All are arranged in the same manner.

The Astor Fortune.

It is believed that the estimate of $60,000,000 which is made of the shares of his father's estate which John Jacob Astor received is under the mark. Upon the division of the property which William B. Astor left his two sons, William Astor's share was inventoried at about $60,000,000, and while his family have lived expensively, yet they did not begin to spend his income, and although he did nothing to increase his wealth, the yearly accumulations are believed to have increased the property by some $15,000,000. Deducting from this the $6,000,000 given to his daughters, or $2,000,000 apiece, and the charge on the estate of $500,000 a year for the benefit of his widow, it would still leave for John Jacob Astor between $65,000,000 and $70,000,000.

It is not the amount, however, which the young man receives that causes special interest. The sum is so large that a million either way is of little account. The question which interests people here is what is John Jacob Astor going to do with his property? If he becomes, as his cousin William Waldorf has, a man of keen business instinct, he will have to change remarkably. He has one trait of the Astors perhaps more strongly developed than it was in any of the others, and it is a trait which in some men would be called parsimoniousness. He is an extremely close figurer, and is of such disposition that when he secures a dollar he feels like making it a prisoner for life. Whether he branches out as a daring and conspicuous builder of real estate properties or not his fortune is certain to increase steadily, because no rich man in New York, not even Russell Sage, will figure more carefully over his expenditures, both personal and business, than John Jacob Astor will do.—New York Cor. Philadelphia Press.

It Finds Precious Metals.

Mr. Andrew Thompson has made an instrument resembling in its appearance the oil well locater, which will locate gold or silver ore. This instrument will act on these metals whether in ore deep in the earth or in the shape of coin or jewelry. Gold and silver money was placed on the floor and the instrument quickly located it. The coin was then placed high above the floor and its location was quickly and accurately determined. It was also tried on gold and silver ore with the same result. Many inducements have been offered Mr. Thompson to disclose the secret of the little machine, but he has refused all offers, some of them very liberal ones.

He has selected a well known resident of the south side, to whom he intends before he dies to impart the secret of the unattractive looking but most potent machine. The gentleman designated to receive this important trust as yet knows nothing about the instrument except its effects. He can handle it with as much dexterity as Mr. Thompson, but possesses no knowledge of the machine other than that imparted in this article.—Pittsburg Post.

The Latest Western Gold Story.

J. A. McConville, who lives on Montana street, killed one of his chickens for dinner, and on cleaning it was surprised to find a quantity of gold nuggets in the crop and gizzard. Having about thirty more chickens on hand, he began killing and examining them. In each of them he found a pro rata of nuggets, the total amount gathered from the thirty-one hens being $387.50—an average of $12.50 a head. The gold was sent to the State National bank and pronounced eighteen carat fine.

Mr. McConville immediately bought fifty more chickens and turned them out on the gold fields in the vicinity of the hencoop. As an experiment one of them was killed and $2.80 in gold taken from its inside works, the result of a four days' run. Mr. McConville has a virtual bonanza, and expects to be a millionaire before fall if the chickens hold out.—Butte Mining Journal.

An electric exhibit will be one of the features of the exposition to be held at Buffalo in August. A model of Niagara Falls tunnel, showing how it is to be utilized in the transmission of power, is one of the novelties suggested.

WEDNESDAY, Sept. 14, 1892.

In the matter of the estate of Wm. Ischinger—Filed petition to compromise certain debts.

Estate and guardianship of Maggie M. Campbell—Filed order of sale of personal property.

MARRIED.

REYNOLDS—DAVIS—Near Independence, Sept. 18, 1892, by Rev. H. J. Winsor, Edward John Reynolds and Elizabeth Davis.

Charley Meroney has returned to Independence.

District Atrorney Forbes spent the week at Bishop.

J. A. McKenzie and James Holland came up from Lone Pine on Tuesday.

Manuel Montana of Lone Pine spent several days in town this week.

Lone Pine and Fish Springs school districts are each to have a new school house.

The Nevada State Fair is in full blast at Reno and the Carson Fair will follow next week.

Letters from Bishop state that the metropolis will be well represented at the Fair next week.

Ex-Sheriff Johnny McGee lightened up the gloom in town last Friday evening. He returned home to Bishop next day.

Henry Rhine arrived home on Wednesday's train after a visit of several months at San Francisco. He has entirely recovered his health.

Mr. and Mrs. James Jones came down from Fish Spring last Tuesday. Mrs. Jones is in poor health and will remain in town for medical treatment.

The pavilion exhibit next week is expected to exceed anything yet seen here, which is saying a good deal as two years ago the display was magnificent.

Mrs. Chas. Parsons of Round Valley accompanied by Miss Nell Squires visited Independence a few days this week. They returnod home on Tuesday's train.

Independence has been enjoying "clarin' up time" during the week. Streets and door-yards have been cleaned preparing for the visitors at the Fair next week.

Mrs. and Mrs. Eibeshutz arrived home from San Francisco on last Friday's train. Mr. Wilcox of San Francisco accompanied them and will accupy a clerical position in Mr. Eibeshutz's store.

Charley Meroney and Fred Skinner will act as entry clerks of the pavilion and stock department respectively at the Fair next week. L. A. Anger will be superintendent of the pavilion.

Johnny Underwood got down from Bishop on Wednesday with two trotters. The others will probably arrive to-day with the exception of R. O'Neal's filly which will be shipped down on Monday's train.

Charley Collins arrived at Independence yesterday from Los Angeles accompanied by Mr. Bell of that place. The latter gentleman is interested in land and will examine Owens Valley thoroughly before returning.

All the events for the races next week have been filled with good fields of horses and there is sure to be good sport. In a number of races the horses entered are very closely matched and it will take more luck than sense to pick the winner.

A committee has been appointed by the Fair Directors to secure music for the ball and during the week. We understand that a string band has been secured from Virginia city and that $200 is offered for a brass band but that none has yet been secured.

Water was turned down the race track ditch this morning, and every effort will be made to get the track in as good condition as possible for the races next week. Lumber has arrived from Carson for a Grand stand and Judges stand and the work of construction begin this morning.

Jake Schober has been very ill for two weeks past, Drs. Woodin being in constant attendance. On Wednesday his condition was so alarming that telegrams were sent to Bishop for his parents and brothers to come and they arrived here Wednesday night. Yesterday morning he began to improve slightly and it is now hoped that serious danger is past.

By the kindness of of H. E. Wilkinson we have received the published report of last year's expedition to Death Valley. The work is entitled "Notes on the Climate and Meteorology of Death Valley." It contains matter that is highly interesting about a country that hitherto has been comparatively little known.

Fine Bread.

Mr. C. A. Walter of Camp Independence brought to this office on Wednesday samples of bread made from Bell's flour and Jones' flour. The bread is just as white and beautiful as any made from the Riverside mills at Reno. Both Messrs. Bell and Jones have this year laid out a great deal of money for new and improved machinery and can and do turn out just as good flour as any imported article. The very small difference in the cost of the Reno article from the home product has operated to a great extent in driving the home product from the market, and, by the way, is an exceedingly apt illustration of how the railroad benefits the farmers of Inyo county. Anything the farmers produce is hauled in here from other places at a nominal freight rate, and on all articles the farmers must consume and cannot produce the freight rate is exceedingly high. By all means give the home product a fair trial and we guarantee for it that you will not be disappointed. Every dollar sent out of the county for goods hauled over the C. & C. is gone never to return. And remember that with our very limited export dollars are steadily becoming scarcer.

On The Mend.

Dr. I. J. Woodin went out to Modock at the end of last week and brought in Frank Fitzgerald arriving here late Sunday evening. Mrs. Fitzgerald accompanied him. From Modock to Darwin the trip was very painful to the injured man. At that point he was met by J. G. Dodge with a four horse coach, the seats of which had been taken out and a spring bed covered with a spring mattress placed in it. On this Mr. Fitzgerald made the remainder of the journey very easily. The lower limbs are paralyzed and the wounds are extremely painful. However his condition has materially improved since his arrival here, and with the best of nursing and medical attendance he will soon be Fitz again.

The Chief Consideration.

Among voters at some of the Republican primaries on Saturday the railroad question seemed to be the chief consideration. The corporations are making a desperate effort to secure the Boards of Supervisors and the Legislature, and this the people are trying to prevent. Unless the railroad influence can be beaten in the coming election in the State there will be no relief from the burdens that oppress us and paralyze every industry.

The celebration of the Anniversity of Mexico's Independence at Lone Pine on the 16th was an unqualified success. A large number of visitors were in town, all orderly and well behaved and the day passed off most pleasantly. There was a horse race between a local sprinter and an animal brought from Mono County in which the home product proved victorious. Raphael Diaz won an excitieg foot race in the evening. At the ball the hall was rather crowded but all report having had a good time.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.

FRIED RICKE RHINE, Executrix of the will of Nathan Rhine, deceased, plaintiff, vs. W. L. HUNTER, CAROLINE HUNTER and J. L. PORTER, defendants.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and the Complaint filed in the office of the Clerk of said County.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIfornia send greeting to W. L. Hunter, Caroline L. Hunter and J. L. Porter, defendants:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiff, as such executrix, in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county, or if served elsewhere within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain a judgment of this Court for the foreclosure of a certain mortgage described in said complaint and executed by the said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L. Hunter on the 10th day of April, 1889, to secure the payment of a certain Promissory Note made by the said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L. Hunter to the said Nathan Rhine, now deceased, for the sum of $2,400, with interest thereon from the said 10th day of April, 1889, at the rate of 1¼ per cent per month, described in the complaint, which by the lapse of time is now due, no part of which has been paid excepting $60 paid April 10th, 1889, $144 paid October 10th, 1889, $410.35 paid May 10th, 1890, $75 paid September 20th, 1890, $72 paid December 27th, 1890 and $66 paid November 28th, 1891.

Said note is dated April 10th, 1889, that the premises conveyed by said mortgage may be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of said note and interest thereon and costs of suit and the further sum of 10 per cent on the amount of the judgment found due as counsel fees as provided in said mortgage, and in case such proceeds are insufficient to pay the same, that judgment be docketed against said W. L. Hunter and Caroline L. Hunter for the balance remaining due, and also that the said defendants, and all persons claiming by, through or under may be barred and foreclosed of all right, title, claim, lien, equity of redemption, and interest in and to said mortgaged premises, and for other and further relief, as will more fully appear by reference to the complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said Complaint, as above required, the said Plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the Complaint.

Witness my hand, and the Seal of the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, this 10th day of August, A. D. 1892.

A Discriminating Shot.

The following story is told of a couple of sportsmen. Their names were Hoffman and Cowan and both were excellent shots, and not a little given to boasting of their skill. One day they went on a deer hunting expedition, and, after getting into the woods where they expected to find deer, they separated. Shortly after Hoffman heard Cowan's gun fired off, when he immediately went over to the spot where he heard the shot, expecting to be called to help Cowan to hang up a deer. He found Cowan very busy loading his gun and shouted out:

"Hallo, Cowan! What did you shoot at just now?"

"None o' your business! Go along over the hill!"

Surprised at this short and crusty answer Hoffman looked around and discovered a calf among the bushes. Again he cried out:

"I say, Cowan, did you shoot at that calf?"

"Yes, I did; but it's none o' your business!"

"Why, what made you shoot at it?"

"I took it for a deer."

"Well, did you hit it?"

"No; I missed it!"

"How did you miss it?"

"I wasn't quite sure that it wasn't a calf."

"You are a pretty sportsman," rejoined Hoffman, "to shoot at a calf for a deer, and miss it at that!"

"Don't make a fool of yourself," replied Cowan. "I shot at it just so as to hit it if it was a deer and miss it if it was a calf!"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

She Made Him Put on the Box.

She was a little woman with keen eyes and her lips looked as if she often pressed them together in a determined fashion. When she stepped upon the station platform a boy came from behind her. He was carrying a box and he placed it gently on a baggage truck. Then he went into the station to buy her ticket for her, and she sent him "straight home."

The box still stood on the truck when the train ran in. The little woman was the first to board the train. She threw open a window and thrusting out her head, craned her neck that she might watch her box. Everything went into the baggage car except the box. Her eyes snapped.

"Put that box in the car," she cried in a shrill voice.

The man looked around, but made no motion to do as he was commanded.

"Put that box in the car," she screamed, in a higher key.

"It ain't checked," answered the man doggedly.

"I don't care if it ain't. Put it in."

"I won't unless it's checked."

"Put it in, I say."

"I won't."

In came the head like a dash, and a moment later the little woman stood on the car platform.

"Put that box in," she screamed; "it's my box."

The man stood still and the train gave a little jerk.

"Put that box on," she cried, bouncing on the platform, and she made a dash for the man, truck and box. The fellow looked at her for an instant, and then picking up the box hurled it into the baggage car.

"You'd better," she cried, climbing back to the moving train. Then as she reached the platform she leaned over and cried out, "And you'd better be more careful next time now you put my boxes on. You're a—." But the rest was lost in the rattle of the train.—New York Tribune.

Nero Wore a Monocle.

Spectacles were invented 600 years ago. The use of glass to aid the sight of defective eyes is, however, much older. Nero looked through a concave glass in watching the gladiatorial games, and many other historical men of his day were dependent on similar devices for lengthening their sight. Till the latter part of the thirteenth century only the single glass was in use.

In 1289 the double glass was invented, some say by Salvino degli Armati, others by the monk, Alexander of Spina. In the fourteenth century spectacles were used quite frequently by the very wealthy and high born, although they were so scarce that they were bequeathed in wills with all the elaborate care that marked the disposition of a real estate. The holy Antonius of Padua, who preached to the fishes when men refused to hear him, gave to the poor, according to the legend, not only his clothes, but also his spectacles.

The first spectacles, which were very expensive, were made in Italy. Somewhat later the manufacture of cheaper glasses sprang up in Holland, and it spread late in the fourteenth century to Germany. Nuremberg and Ratisbon acquired fame for their glasses between 1490 and 1500. For many years glasses were used only as means of aiding bad eyes. First in Spain appeared the fashion of wearing glasses merely for the sake of wearing them. It spread rapidly to the rest of the continent and brought about the transformation of the old thirteenth century spectacles into eyeglasses and eventually into the monocle, "the cosmopolitan trademark of the dandy."—New York Sun.

Lead in Laces.

Ph. de Clermont gives an account, in Le Moniteur de la Teinture, of a white satin dress totally ruined by its trimming with English lace. The dress had been worn but once, had then been packed into a trunk which was deposited in a damp place and exposed to emanations of hydrosulphuric acid from gas. When taken out it was found that the pattern of the lace, particularly of its tulle ground, had been printed in indelible black upon the white satin. The accident was not difficult to explain.

English lace is habitually charged with sulphate of lead, which in this case absorbed hydrogen and hydrosulphuric acid from the atmosphere, forming sulphide of lead, which had been imprinted and fixed upon the white satin, which naturally had also absorbed hydrogen and hydrosulphuric acid. The seller of the lace showed that charging English lace with white lead (sulphate of lead) was commercial usage, and thereby escaped paying the damage. An objectionable usage it is at any rate, as the absorption of lead through the skin from such lace may become dangerous to health.

Great Swimming Bath.

The greatest swimming bath in the world is situated four miles from Helena, Mont. The building is about 350 feet long by 150 feet wide, with a roof 100 feet high, supported by buttresses in a single span. The tank is 300 by 100 feet, at one end about four feet deep, running to ten or more at the other. Natural hot and cold water pours over the huge precipice of cyclopean masses of granite at one end, about fifty feet wide and forty feet high.

The precipice is pierced by three large openings, over which the water pours in great sheets and is so artistically erected that one would easily believe it to be a series of natural falls. The flow is so large that the tank is replenished several times a day. The temperature is about 80 degs. A swim in its deep waters is very fine. The whole is lighted by day through great areas of cathedral glass in different tints, terra cotta predominating. The tank house is illuminated at night by incandescent lights.—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

An Old Terrapin.

There is in Rutherford, N. C., a terrapin which was picked up in 1840 by Mr. M. S. McCurry, of Golden Valley, and the date cut on the shell. The same terrapin has been found and marked from time to time, until now it bears the dates 1840, 1865, 1875, 1876, 1880 and 1891.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Don't Pay.

A gentleman living in a small town kept a country store for a year or two, and gave it up in disgust. A friend inquired why he had quit the business and was answered, "I couldn't stand it to lie for sixpence and then charge it."—Philadelphia Guide.

Why It Is So Named.

A TRUTH.

Oft in a beauteous body
A soul obscene is hid,
As the noisome span worm nestles
The leaves of the rose amid.

Oft in a frame ill favored
A heart of gold we find,
As the brightest of earth's jewels
From the darkest caves are mined.

OLD CLOTHES.

"For once I've been made a fool of," said Mr. Pattipan, just before he went out to breakfast one morning. "I've taken bad money, and I no more know from whom than I know the Koran. And what is more," added Mr. Pattipan, "I shall offer it to some one if I carry it about with me, and get into difficulties. I'll leave it here."

He put it into the china bowl full of visiting cards that stood on a table in the corner of his wife's parlor as he spoke, kissed her, and took his way to those regions vaguely spoken of as "down town," and Mrs. Pattipan looked at the counterfeit note, and in order that she might not make some mistake herself tore it across the middle before throwing it back into the china bowl.

"Mr. Pattipan never observes sufficiently," she said to herself. "His organs of reflection are large, but his organs of observation are small."

Mrs. Pattipan had studied phrenology in her youth, when it was fashionable to do so, and had a habit of attributing people's virtues or failings to their bumps. Then she went about her household duties, ordered the dinner, scolded the servant, arranged her bureau drawers and attended to Mr. Pattipan's buttons, and in the middle of this task heard the door bell ring. It rang twice without being answered—cook and Sara Jane being in a deep quarrel, occasioned by the reproofs of their mistress—so Mrs. Pattipan, having peeped over the balustrades for some seconds, descended the stairs and opened the door herself. Through the glass she could see that it was only a peddler of some sort, who would be sent away at once, after which she would attend to the culprit below stairs.

As she opened the door she saw upon the steps without an old clothes man with a basket of china on his arm. A fat little old fellow with an immense nose and a benevolent smile, who pushed his basket into the door as an entering wedge, and said very softly and tenderly and with persuasive waves of his hand from the check outward:

"Laty—dear laty—a-me-aible-lety, vill you not exchange some ole clo'es which are of no goot for some elegant new vases vich vill make you always some bleasure even you look at dem? Elegant vases! Oh you shall see dem."

"No," said Mrs. Pattipan, "no, I think not."

But the woman who deliberates with an old clothes man at the door is lost. The basket wedged itself further in.

"It vill cost noding to look at dem," aid the old clothes vender. "It vill be a bleasure and cost noding."

"Very well," said Mrs. Pattipan, "I don't really promise, you know; you never give much for the clothes. I think your acquisitiveness is more largely developed than your benevolence. Seems to me so, looking at you."

"Madame is very good," said the old clothes man, waving from him the compliment he fancied he had received. "I go in—danks."

He entered the parlor. Mrs. Pattipan rested herself on a chair near the window, and the old clothes man exhibited his stock of common vases, at which Mrs. Pattipan looked contemptuously.

Finally regarding her with an acute eye the clothes man restored all these to his basket, and saying:

"No, dese are not to madame's superior taste," put his hand in his pocket and drew forth a little ornament of very beautiful china—a Cupid with a butterfly on its shoulder. "Zere!" he said, spreading both hands abroad. "'Ow about zis?"

"Well," said Mrs. Pattipan, "that is lovely."

"And zere is no more; 'e come from Paris," said the old clothes man.

"Oh, he is sweet!" said Mrs. Pattipan. "I'll see what I have."

And upstairs she rushed, and gathering from drawer and closet all the old pantaloons with baggy knees, and all the old coats with frayed cuffs and greasy collars which were in the house, laid them at the feet of the clothes man.

But now it was the old man's turn to be scornful.

"Zese rags! Oh, madame, not zese rags for my lofely Cupid from Paris!" he sighed, reproachfully. "Madame vill find somezing else; she vil not expect ze poor old clo'es man to cheat himself. Madame has some pretty silk dress—a cloak, a shawl—madame vill see!"

Madame, who could not give up the idea of possessing the Cupid, now that she had once harbored it, ran upstairs again. She searched her drawers, her wardrobe, but really she had nothing. Suddenly it occurred to her that she had a broche shawl, and that she never wore it. Shawls were out of fashion, and if she hated anything it was a shawl turned into a cloak. The thing would lie there useless for years, or she should give it to Mr. Pattipan's Aunt Jane. She would never wear it again, that was morally certain. Why not buy the Cupid with it?

She unfolded the shawl and felt an unusual contempt for it, it looked so old fashioned. It had cost $25 when it was bought, and was as good as ever; but what an ugly thing! Yes, she would do it! She carried it down stairs therefore, and the clothes man condescended to accept it. However, he also put into his bag the old cloth garments.

"I vill not leave zem about to trouble madame,' he said; "I vill oblige her by carrying zem away."

Mrs. Pattipan returned to her parlor to adore her Cupid—certainly a very lovely little being.

"How I admire it! It's my ideality and my 'form,' I suppose," she said, becoming phrenological again. "I should have been an artist, having form and color so largely developed."

Then she placed it on the cabinet shelves, and as she retired to a distance to observe the general effect, saw that the counterfeit bill that she had thrown into the china bowl after tearing it across had vanished. The old clothes man had taken it—there could be no doubt of that.

"But he was so acquisitive he could not withstand temptation," said Mrs. Pattipan. "Well, I hope he will not pass it on some poor person, and I don't care if he gets himself into trouble—he deserves it."

At all events she had her lovely Cupid—how much better than an old shawl that she detested! Still, she would not mention the old shawl or the coats to Mr. Pattipan. Since she had made the awful mistake of exchanging his best trousers for a match holder it was understood between them that old clothes men were not to be permitted to cross the threshold.

No; she could buy what she pleased, and Mr. Pattipan never thought of asking where it came from. It should go so. But, oh! her lovely Cupid—how she adored it!

At 5 o'clock in the afternoon Mr. Pattipan returned in very fine spirits.

"Well, Ducky," he remarked to Mrs. Pattipan, "I've got a surprise for you. Shan't tell you what it is until I have had dinner. It is a birthday present."

Then he concealed a bundle beneath the sofa.

Mrs. Pattipan felt pleased to be remembered. She was as charming as possible during dinner time, and Mr. Pattipan made her guess what he had brought her; but her guesses were all failures. Not roses—not a book—not his photograph—not a watch—not a ring—not a dress pattern—not a muff!

"I meant to buy a muff," said Mr. Pattipan; "but this was brought into my office by somebody—quite as though I had asked the spirits to help me, you know. Come along, my dear; I want to see you sail up and down the parlor in it. You are quite a queenly sort of figure, you know, and a shawl"——

"A shawl?" said Mrs. Pattipan.

"Ah!" said Mr. Pattipan, who was now unfolding his parcel beside the parlor table, "a shawl! It is a splendid one—a Cashmere, or some Indian place of that sort—wonderfully valuable; but, you know, he smuggled it, and so sold it for nothing. For a shawl like that forty-five dollars is nothing—and I knew you were out of shawls. You used to wear them so elegantly in our courting days, and I haven't seen one on you for years!"

"Nor on anybody else!" Mrs. Pattipan said within herself, but she beamed upon her husband.

"Here it is!" said he, flinging it abroad. "Now put it on."

The room was not a large one, and as the shawl swept into the air it struck the cabinet on that particular spot on which the Cupid was perched. The lovely bit of china danced wildly for a moment then toppled over and fell to the floor. Nothing remained of it but gleaming fragments as Mrs. Pattipan stooped to pick it up.

"Never mind the gimcrack, Ducky!" remarked her spouse. "I hope it is that confounded match safe that you gave my best trousers for—ha! ha! ha! Come, try on the shawl!"

Mrs. Pattipan, with a secret wail for her treasure, obeyed. She turned her back and allowed the drapery to fall over her ample shoulders, and glided as gracefully as possible up and down the room.

"Charming!" said Mr. Pattipan. "You must wear that freely. Don't save it for best. By Jove! I'm glad I bought it. The little old fellow came into my place with the parcel, and bless me if he wasn't a curiosity! He called me a worthy gentleman, and he wanted to show me a shawl. Well, I wouldn't look at it until he told me all about the Vale of Cashmere, where it was made, and asked me to smell the attar of roses; and suddenly says I, 'The very thing for Ducky!' and I had Pringle the clerk, in and put it on him, and he said he thought it must be genuine, for his grandmother had one just like it"—("No doubt," said Mrs. Pattipan to herself)—"and out came my little $50 bill and he gave me a $5 note, and done it was!"

Mrs. Pattipan had reached the end of the parlor and was standing quite still with her back turned. She could not control her features at that moment; she had just recognized her own old broche shawl—the one she had given to the clothes man! She know it only too well by the pattern. And there was the little fray darned by her own fingers five years before, when she did occasionally wear the shawl to market.

"Turn about, Ducky," said Mr. Pattipan. "Now, do you know, I haven't seen you look so elegant for a long while! We'll go to the opera to-night—comic—and show it off. I know women like to exhibit elegant things when they have 'em—and here's the change the old fellow gave me out of the fifty—a five dollar bill. Take care; it's been mended. You'll want some little failal."

As Mrs. Pattipan came to her husband's side she was aware that she should see the counterfeit bill that the old clothes man had stolen from the china bowl, and indeed she did; and I cannot help believing that some of the very finest phrenological developments must have been hers, for she smiled up into Mr. Pattipan's face and said: "My dear, you are really generous!" and put the worthless bill in her pocket with a little air of coquetry, and actually wore the faded old fashioned broche shawl to the theatre that evening and was happy in it!

But after all, to have a husband who thinks one a beauty at 45, and is only anxious to make one happy, compensates for any such little mortifications as that which Mrs. Pattipan experienced when the lady in the seat behind her whispered audibly:

"Well, that shawl must really have come out of the ark!"—Mary Kyle Dallas in Fireside Companion.

A Dream That Taught a Lesson.

No one realizes better than Eugene Field himself what Mrs. Field has had to endure by reason of his peculiarities, and he illustrates this by narrating a dream he claims to have had. "I thought," he says, "that I had died and gone to heaven. I had some difficulty in getting past St. Peter, who examined my record closely and regarded me with doubt and suspicion, but finally permitted me to enter the pearly gates. As I walked up the street of the heavenly city I saw a venerable old man with long gray hair and flowing beard. His benignant face encouraged me to address him. 'I have just arrived and I am entirely unacquainted,' I said. 'May I ask your name?'

"'Oh, yes,' he replied. 'I'm Job.'

"'Indeed,' I exclaimed, 'are you that Job whom we were taught to revere as the most patient man in the world?'

"'Yes,' he said, with a show of hesitation, 'yes, I did have quite a reputation for patience once, but I hear that there is a woman now on earth who has suffered more than I ever did and has endured it with greater resignation.'

"'Why,' said I, 'that is curious. I am just from earth and I do not remember to have heard of her case. What is her name?'

"'Mrs. Eugene Field,' was the reply.

"Just then I awoke."—John Ballantyne in Ladies' Home Journal.

AMPLY CONFIRMED.

EUROPEAN IDEAS VERIFIED IN AMERICA.

The Most Important Subject of the Present day Settled beyond Question.

The cable dispatches which recently appeared in the daily papers indicating the great interest felt throughout Europe upon a subject of international interest have naturally awakened great attention, not to say excitement, in this city and throughout the land. It is a well-known fact that the demands of modern life have caused a strain which seems to shorten life and undermine health universally. The efforts made abroad to investigate its cause are most commendable, and we are pleased to say have been supplemented by similar efforts in America. Careful inquiry has been made among prominent physicians, and it is surprising what uniformity of opinion is expressed by them all. That opinion seems to be that the great modern disease is kidney trouble, and that the kidneys are the first organs of the body to be attacked by over-exertion or over-indulgence, and the first to become weakened by the grip. That this is a most lamentable fact there can be no doubt, but that these troubles can be prevented and cured the investigations made abroad clearly show. In the interest of humanity we have made similar investigations, and the result is given herewith.

Dr. N. S. Davis said: "People do not know what Bright's disease is. The term is applied popularly to every trouble that even remotely affects the kidneys. There are two forms of the trouble—one an enlargement and the other a shrinking of the kidneys."

Dr. Frank T. Andrews says: "The term Bright's disease covers a great many complaints. In fact, any case of albuminaria is called Bright's disease. The majority of these cases are curable. The reason a man dies of kidney trouble is the inability of the organ to perform its functions."

Dr. S. Clarke declares: "There was a time when any man or woman suffering from any form of kidney trouble had cause for despair. That time has passed. For the past eight years I have treated every variety of kidney trouble in both men and women, and I do not believe there is a case so severe, no matter of how long standing, that it cannot be relieved or cured by the careful and conscientious use of Warner's Safe Cure."

Dr. Charles W. Purdy says: "There are many diseases grouped under the head of Bright's disease of the kidneys. One of the most serious forms is almost always accompanied by heart trouble, which frequently causes the death of the patient. The acute form will kill the patient within a few years unless he receives proper treatment."

Dr. R. A. Gunn, Dean of the United States Medical College, declares: "For years the treatment of Bright's disease has been largely experimental. I am independent enough and frank enough to commend most heartily that great remedy—Warner's Safe Cure."

Dr. A. B. Hosmer affirms: "Acute Bright's disease in children is curable. The kidneys, you see, are waste gates, and when they are partially closed trouble must result."

Dr. Tyre York, of Washington, D. C., asserts: "I think Warner's Safe Cure a great blessing to mankind, and if taken regularly will cure almost any disease of the kidneys. I prescribe it in my practice."

Dr. C. Washington Earle, of Chicago, says: "Diseases of the kidneys may be slight or aggravated. The object to be attained is to limit the over-worked and worn-out organs to as little exercise as possible."

Dr. John W. Mapes, of Paris, Ill., says: "I am a living example of the virtues of Warner's Safe Cure, without which I should long since have been dead."

Throughout the land wherever investigation has been made, the sentiment seems to be the same.

The above unquestioned and unquestionable testimony proves beyond a doubt what Mr. H. H. Warner, of Rochester, N. Y., boldly declared more than ten years ago, namely, that Bright's disease of the kidneys can be cured. Mr. Warner knew whereof he affirmed, for he himself had been cured of Bright's disease in its worst form. If any reader has peculiar pains, strange sensations, or unaccountable feelings, which all too often announce the coming on of kidney trouble, there is no need to despond; there is every reason for hope. A cure has been found and proven beyond question or the possibility of doubt.

THE LOTTERY TO END.

It would appear by the following item from a recent issue of the New Orleans Times-Democrat that the suggestion in several newspapers of late, that the Louisiana State Lottery Company intends setting up business elsewhere, is erroneous and that it will close up shop on the expiration of its present charter.

In view of the contradictory rumors circulated regarding the intentions of the Louisiana State Lottery Company and in order to accurately answer numerous inquiries, a representative of the Times-Democrat yesterday interviewed Mr. Paul Conrad, the president of the company, with the result expressed below.

Reporter—Mr. Conrad, it was asserted some weeks ago in the Northern newspapers, and the statement has since been revived recently, that the company is about to remove to Nicaragua, and there, under a government franchise open up the business on a grander scale than ever.

President Conrad—I have heard something of this, but there is no foundation for it. The company has officially stated that it bows to the decision of the Supreme Court and will respect the laws.

Reporter—Then have you no plans of future action?

President Conrad—I cannot state the case more strongly than was done at the time the company decided not to attempt to obtain a renewal of its charter. I can only repeat that the company will continue in business until the expiration of its present charter and then cease to exist. I cannot understand, after all that has been said, why there should be any confusion in the public mind about the matter.

Reporter—Have you any objection to my stating this as a finalty for the satisfaction of the public?

President Conrad—None whatever.

Reporter—Some of the Eastern papers, Mr. Conrad, persistently assert that the lottery company continues to use the United States mails in the prosecution of its business; will you kindly tell me if that is true?

President Conrad—It is utterly untrue. We are obeying the law in its letter and spirit, and our agents everywhere are instructed to obey it. We are using the express companies only in our business, and in all our circulars are printed instructions to all persons dealing with us to avoid the mails.

THE TEMPTATION

To go out of doors in rough weather is not strong, but we are, many of us, compelled to face rough weather frequently. Diseases which arise from a chill are peculiar to no season of the year. This is true, therefore there should be in the closet of every household—what? Not an unmedicated stimulant, absolutely devoid of anything but an excitive action, but a tonic combining, in the effective form of an invigorant and an alterative, the quality of defence against changes of weather. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has three or four properties that no other article of its class possesses. Not only does it relieve the complaints which it eventually cures, it fortifies the system against the bad effects of changes of temperature, fatally and too often shown in the deadly form of "la grippe;" it produces a radical change in the weakened condition of a system peculiarly liable to be attacked by it, and it tends to provide against the danger resulting from an impoverished condition of the blood and a disordered state of the liver or bowels.

"Which way are you tramping, pard," he said,
As they leaned on the haystack props.
"Anywhere, anywhere under the sun,
Except where they have good crops."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

LIFE AND DEATH.

From morn to eve they struggled—Life and Death.
At first it seemed to me that they in mirth
Contended, and as foes of equal worth,
So firm their feet, so undisturbed their breath.
But when the sharp red sun cut through its sheath
Of western clouds, I saw the brown arms' girth
Tighten and bear that radiant form to earth,
And suddenly both fell upon the heath.
And then the wonder came—for when I fled
To where those great antagonists down fell
I could not find the body that I sought,
And when and where it went I could not tell.
One only form was left of those who fought,
The long, dark form of Death—and it was dead.

Wonders of Alaska.

"Well, you must recollect that Alaska contains 600,000 square miles, and it will be a considerable period before all her resources can be named with certainty; but relating to my observations and reliable reports of experiments in several localities, I will say that Alaska can raise about everything possible to the more temperate belts. First, there are delicious wild berries of all kinds, and especially the strawberry, which grows in abundance and is of fine flavor. Within fifteen miles of the great Glacier bay our exploring party of ten Indians and three whites picked enough of these berries within two hours to furnish us with lavish dessert for three days. Nowhere in the world can finer vegetables and root crops be raised, while sheep and cattle raising has been tested to satisfaction, and encouraging experiments in grain have already been made. There is no doubt in my mind that the hardier fruits will do excellently in Alaska."

"Rather a dreary country after all."

"Dreary! It is the kind of dreariness that sent over a thousand tourists into the country last season. It has spots of dreariness that rival the wonders of the Yellowstone park and the grandeurs of the Yosemite valley. The glorious vision of the famed Glacier bay is worth crossing a continent to see, and makes pictures on the memory that will last a lifetime.

"Vegetation grows with tropical rankness to the south and west, while to the north the Arctic sun on the Artic seas, glaciers and snow fields invite the most prosaic and practical men to regret that they are neither poets nor painters; but when I discuss the fisheries, salmon canneries and mines and agricultural possibilities I grow tedious, and when I am permitted to expatiate on the natural beauty of that country I am simply interminable."—Interview in Washington Post.

Beans and Blushes.

The conversation of a little group ran the other evening on the odd replies that people often make through misunderstanding other people's remarks; and one of the company told a story of a humiliating circumstance of this sort of which he was once the victim. It happened quite a number of years ago, when the hero was a younger man than he is now and when it was the fashion, if one had ladies at the theatre, to take them to Copeland's to supper afterwards. The young man had taken two young ladies to the theatre, and when he entered the restaurant with them it was with the determination to do the wildly magnificent thing, and so distinguish himself before the ladies and all the other people in the place, that young men usually have on such occasions. But before he ordered he wished to consult the young ladies' preference. He bent toward them and remarked softly:

"What shall it be?"

The tall young waitress who stood behind the chair must have heard the last word and caught a familiar sound in it, for she spoke up, quite at the top of her voice and loud enough to be heard all over the restaurant:

"We're all out of beans!"

And it was quite out of the young man's power to get a public reputation for magnificence that night.—Boston Transcript.

Thieving in China.

According to a Chinese story a miser had three sons-in-law; one was a tailor, another a jeweler, and the third a spendthrift, who did nothing at all. One day the miser called his third son-in-law and said to him:

"See here! Your two brothers-in-law are thrifty men, and are gradually adding to the family fortune; the tailor, by cabbaging a little of his customers' cloth now and then, you know—bless you, they don't know it!—and the jeweler by—well, by debasing the jewelry just a little, don't you see. But you!" exclaimed the miser, "what do you do?"

"Father-in-law," said the ne'er-do-well, "you say well. Give me a crowbar; I will go out, and, watching my chance, I will break in merchants' doors, open their tills, and bring you back thousands of pieces of silver where my brothers-in-law bring you only paltry gains."

"What! How?" exclaimed the miser, in terrible anger; "can it be possible that you would actually be a thief?"—Boston Herald.

Making Pins and Needles.

Metal pins were introduced into England from France in 1543. Within a short time after machines were constructed in England for the manufacture of pins. "Previously they had been filed to a point and the head had been soldered by hand. Great opposition was made to the novelty," says Felkin, "but utility and cheapness prevailed in its favor. The common sewing needle was brought hither from India after the discovery of the route by the Cape of Good Hope. Before that time sewing was performed in the method still used by shoemakers."

For Testing Steel.

An ingenious method of testing the hardness of steel has been invented by a Swedish metallurgist. It is based upon the intensity of current necessary to fuse a wire of a standard size. By experiment the current required to fuse standard wires of different degrees of hardness can be determined, and upon this basis the quality of any sample can be ascertained.—New York Telegram.

DURING THE WAR.

Empty Larders, Empty Stomachs, and no Clothes Among the Southerners.

EXTREME HARDSHIP AND SUFFERING

Living on "Hard Tack" Biscuit.—Substitutes for Coffee and Tea.—Soldiers Who Wanted Pie.

To most people Virginia cooking has been a synonym for a delightfully prepared meal. And no doubt this universal opinion is a correct one. But Virginia cooking, when there wasn't anything to cook, is quite a different matter from what it is with a pantry to which the whole country supplies every delicacy in and out of season.

Those upon whom devolved the care of the larder during the days of the civil war tell a pitiful but ludicrous tale of the straits to which dire want and necessity often reduced them. The country was of course then torn up by excitement, and the marching troops' foraging kept it pretty well clear of everything in the edible line. Of course the northern soldiers appropriated all they could get for themselves and their horses, and the southerners expected nothing but liberality at the hands of those for whom they fought. Occasionally a woman who was hard pressed for money (Confederate bank notes being almost worthless) would concoct rare dishes and sell them to the passing Union troops at exorbitant prices.

A lady, who is famed for her shrewd and keen business wit, told a funny story of some such dealings. She found some old Norway raisins and mixed with them some stale, dusty honey that had been kept for years for poison mixing purposes. These ingredients she compounded into pies, and though she failed to taste them herself she sold every one of these pies to the passing troops. Uncle Sam had many foes to face, but it is safe to say none ever had a deadlier effect than those same pies.

Coffee, being an imported article, was impossible to obtain. Tea, mustard and a thousand other seeming necessities grew to be strangers at southern tables. Sometimes sweet potatoes were roasted, cut into several pieces and boiled as coffee, but rye was the usual substitute.

Corn bread was of course the usual dish, and chicken or turkey often served as meat when the soldiers left any such dainty. Salt was a scarce article, and a famine was staring the people in the face when salt works were started in West Virginia. Pork was the usual meat, and such vegetables as the dangerous times enabled the slaves who staid at the farms to raise, were the principal fare. Cattle were driven off by soldiers of either army, so beef was scarce. "Hard tack" biscuit were often the only bread to be gotten, and many poor soldiers lived on it for days at a time. "Hard tack," which is about as difficult to chew as a piece of marble tombstone, was soaked in water over night, then fried in milk in the morning.

In the matter of clothing, too, the south was nearly as bad off as it was for food. Most of the mills for making goods were at the north, so Miss Dixie found herself hard pushed to get the goods and ribbons for her frills and furbelows. Still fashion reigned in spite of war's alarms, and the rough homespun and cheap calico dresses were turned and made over and looked upon with truly feminine pride. When Confederate money had so much depreciated, fabulous prices were paid for the simplest thing—calico selling at $10 per yard, soap at $6 per pound, lawn $30 a yard, and a barrel of flour being worth $100 in greenbacks. Of course their value in gold was only the selling price at the north, but southern paper was almost worthless. Yet in spite of the depressions in the pantry, the scarcity of raiment in the wardrobe and the terrors of the raging war the Dixie girls amused themselves much in the manner of today.—New York Advertiser.

In a New Light.

The pastor was endeavoring to persuade the millionaire to give up at least a portion of his earthly interests and turn his attention to more spiritual matters.

"You say," said Cœsus, "that a rich man cannot enter the kingdom of heaven?"

"The Scriptures say so," corrected the pastor kindly, "and I only repeat what they say, believing them fully."

"And I can take none of my wealth with me?" inquired the rich man.

"You certainly cannot."

"No part of it?"

"No part of it."

"Then I shall be as poor as the poorest when I come to be judged, and what difference does it make one way or the other?"

The pastor took the question to his study for deliberation.—Detroit Free Press.

When you step on a loose brick and an ice cold stream of mud shoots up to your collar button, don't say any naughty words. Economical Foreigners.

"The thing with which I return home the most impressed," says an exceptionally intelligent woman who has lived abroad for some time, "is that of the real economy which exists among Europeans. At first we lavish Americans term it parsimony, and sniff at the accounting for candle ends in the household of a British peer or the careful thrift of the German housewife who binds her bed blankets with a deep, loosely caught binding of cheesecloth to preserve the nap that comes off infinitesimally from handling in daily bedmaking, but after awhile we discover that side by side with this rigid avoidance of waste and needless expenditure there are impressive results and generous, handsome outlays.

"They are all skillful, too, in making the most of everything, much more so than we with the Yankee ingenuity of which we boast—it seems inherent, not acquired. At this moment I think the French peasant woman can serve for five sous a better, a more nourishing and appetizing meal than our scientific kitchens can put forth for three times that sum, and this with no disparagement to the latter. As a people we seem to lack the faculty of getting the most out of the least; that is, the maximum of comfort out of the minimum of expenditure, in striking contrast to our transatlantic friends."—Her Point of View in New York Times.

How He Succeeded in Life.

The man with the self satisfied air had stopped to speak to a couple of men on the street, and when he had passed one of the men remarked:

"There's a man who has come up in the world rapidly."

"Is he a brilliant man?" asked the other.

"Well, no; at least no one ever thought so."

"He must be a hard worker then."

"No; he doesn't work any harder than he has to."

"Well, I suppose he has a lot of good hard sense, and that makes him valuable."

"He has never shown any evidences of it."

The second man thought the matter over for a moment and then said:

"Oh, well, some people have a faculty of making others think they are smart men even when they are not."

"He hasn't that to any marked extent. No one considers him a particularly able man."

"What is the secret of his success then?"

"His ability and readiness to say things reflecting on the work of others. His only hope is to convince people that others do poor work."—Chicago Tribune.

Antiquity of Nicknames.

The origin of the word as well as the exact date of appearance of the custom of "nicknaming" is unknown. Such names are as old at least as the most venerable chronicles, for, upon diving into ancient history, we have no trouble at all in proving that Plato was called the "Attic Bee" and Socrates "Old Flat Nose." There isn't the least doubt but that many of our surnames come from nicknames applied to our ancestors, such, for instance, as "Dollarhide," "Oxenrider," "Bright," "Lightfoot," "Walkingshaw," "Redhead," "Longman," "Longfellow," etc.

Julius Cæsar was popularly styled "Baldhead," and even the third Rameses is said to have been known by an Egyptian word which signifies "Limpy." No one has been able to escape the blighting or benign influence of the nickname. Kings, queens, philosophers, divines, statesmen, as well as many other eminent persons, have been made to prosper or suffer by having some appropriate or ridiculous sobriquet added after the lawful bestowal of the "Christian" name.—St. Louis Republic.

Why Leap Year?

To the inquiry why the leap years are so called there appears to be no satisfactory answer. What connection, it may be asked and has been asked, was the year or the added day supposed to have with a leap or with leaping? Were these years regarded as coming with leaps or bounds, as contrasted with the steps or paces of other years? Did days or years leap over something, or were they themselves somehow leaped over? All this seems matter for conjecture, and there is nothing left for us but to fall back on the "Century Dictionary's" statement, "The exact reason of the name is unknown."—Rev. George McArthur in St. Nicholas.

Waterproof Leather.

An Austrian chemist is reported to have solved the problem of waterproofing leather by a cheap and efficient method. He employs a solution of fifteen parts of gelatine and five parts of bichromate of potash dissolved in 1,200 parts of water. Impregnating the leather with this solution causes the albumen to coagulate in the pores.—New York Journal.

Gold in Brazil.

Brazil, which only a century ago was the richest of gold producing countries, has now ceased to be largely productive. The total output of the metal from that part of the world from the end of the Sixteenth century until now is estimated at $700,000,000.—Washington Star.

A BIG CHIPPEWA.

A Chief Who Cut a Wide Swath in the Northwest During Early Days.

HOLE-IN-THE-DAY AND HIS CAREER.

A Specimen of His Magnificent Nerve.—The Chief's Descendants.—A Pioneer's Reminiscences.

The reminiscent strain is quite a general and generous one with Maj. T. M. Newson. Among the interesting and historical stories in his fund of such is one of the noted Chippewa chief, Hole-in-the-Day, with whom he, in company with other early settlers of St. Paul, was personally well acquainted. The story, in his own language, is as follows:

While sitting in a small office in the old Fort Snelling house, St. Paul, Minn., in the year 1853, my attention was arrested by the imposing presence of a large Indian chief, who, with his blanket about him, strode into the room with the dignity of a Roman senator. He was a large man, with high cheek bones, a well poised head, brilliant black eyes and hair, and with a pleasant smile he exclaimed while passing: "Booshu nechee"—how to do, friend?—and took a seat near me. There was a massive characteristic about the man which did not belong to the ordinary Indian, and yet he had all the Indian peculiarities.

DIDN'T LESSEN HIS APPETITE.

Dinner was soon announced, and he took a seat near me at the table. He ate with ordinary deliberation and stowed away an ordinary amount of food, but while so engaged one of the windows was suddenly darkened, and on looking up I beheld many grimy faces and burning eyes, with war paint and feathers, the possessors of which belonged to the Sioux nation, and which nation had been for years and was then at war with the Chippewas. Gleaming knives and partially covered tomahawks made my position by the side of the Chippewa chief rather uncomfortable, so I moved; but he continued to eat, and then the door opened and some ten or twelve Sioux warriors filed along in front of the foe of their people, with clinched rifles and hearts glowing with revenge. Still calm, with not a muscle of his mobile face denoting fear, the chief finished his dinner, coolly arose, drew his blanket about him, and with a lordly tread, a compressed lip and a flashing eye, walked down in front of these hostile Sioux, and lighting his pipe, deliberately puffed the smoke into the very faces of his inveterate foes. That man was Hole-in-the-Day, the chief of the Chippewa nation, and the Sioux warriors were on his warpath, but they feared the white man's troops at Fort Snelling would dart down upon them the moment a blow had been given, so they restrained their wrath and let the great chief depart unmolested.

Hole-in-the-Day was an Indian of remarkable sagacity and intelligence. He associated with the whites and comprehended their ideas of civilization. He was very wily and very brave, and greatly feared by his enemies. It is said of him that he would float down the Mississippi river in his canoe to St. Paul, paddle across the stream to the opposite shore, secrete his boat, lay in wait for the Sioux, who were in the habit of following the trail to Mendota, then pounce down upon them, kill one or two, secure their scalps and make his way back to the east shore and thence home. He visited Washington several times, and became very well versed in the ways of tricksters and politicians. Once, while on a vist to the capital, he fell in love with a white waiter girl in the National hotel, proposed to her, was accepted, and they were married. He came west, repaired his home near Fort Ripley, installed his wife in his tepee as the white Indian queen, and soon after he was assassinated while riding home with his little son, probably growing out of the insane jealousy of his squaws.

HIS TWO SONS.

This white widow of Hole-in-the-Day lives at present, or did live, in Minneapolis, where her son held a position in the postoffice, but I believe he is now in some official position on the White Earth reservation. Ignatius Hole-in-the-Day, the eldest brother, and heir apparent to the chieftainship, was drowned in the Illinois river in Chicago about one year ago. Of course he was full blood. His brother, or rather his half-brother, the son of the white wife, is a fine, genteel, well educated young man, and quite attractive in his appearance. The head men of the tribe have been anxious to have him take the place of his father, but in an interview with me he said, while he would like to do something for his people, he could not go from civilization back into the habits of the Indians, as he would be obliged to do to hold any power over them.

The chief, Hole-in-the-Day, had a magnificent physical organization. He was very straight, quite dignified, and yet very affable, and withal he was very generally liked by the whites. During the Sioux outbreak in Minnesota in 1862 he had overtures from Little Crow, the great Sioux chief, to join with him in massacreing the whites, but he declined the honor, although some of his people were anxious to have him do so. St. Paul, in early times, without Hole-in-the-Day, would be like the play of "Hamlet" with Hamlet left out.

On the bank of the upper Mississippi, about Little Falls, in Minnesota, lies the body of the once great Chippewa chief and that of his father, Hole-in-the-Day, another noted chief before him, both bodies facing south, so they can watch the movements of their enemies—the Sioux. There is a depression between the two hills upon which the bodies lie, and in the middle of this depression stands a lone tree, conveying the idea from the roadside that a sentinel was guarding the graves. But how changed is everything now! Gone are the Indians and their chieftains, but in their places have come great cities, and back of these roar the great waves of civilization as they roll onward in their wild career to the Pacific ocean.

THE FOUR RED DEVILS.

When I first came to the city and went into Mr. Maltby's law office as a clerk I had seen nothing and knew nothing but that which could be seen and heard in one of the very smallest of all country villages. I had read enormously, for my parents would rather have been without bread than without books and magazines, and were besides very comfortably well off; but of the festivities of great cities, the balls, operas, concerts and receptions, I knew nothing by experience, and of course I fancied them much more delightful than they really were. What was my joy, then, when Mr. Maltby, coming into the office one day, placed a handsome envelope before me!

"My girls and boys are going to give a masquerade party," he said, "and they want me to ask you. They expect to have a jolly time. You'll rig up in something you know—you can get it at a costumer's—and wear a mask until supper time. You'll come?"

"Thank you! I shall be delighted," I said, and all day long visions of happiness danced through my head, and I could hardly wait for the closing of the office, so anxious was I to secure my costume. For I had had brief notice; the ball was to be that very night, and I fancy it was only a good natured afterthought of Mr. Maltby to ask "young Tom," as he always called me, having known my father intimately as "Tom" at school.

The envelope was addressed to "Mr. Thomas Parsons," in correct form of course, and rather proud I was of it. Later on I inclosed it in an envelope to my mother, that she might see into what elegant society her son had fallen, dropping it into a lamp post box on my way to the costumer's.

I had seen one, I remembered—a room on the second floor over a hair dresser's shop. The word "costumer" was painted on the long, narrow sign under the windows, and between them was a fanciful figure in ballet costume holding a little lace mask before her face—columbine of the pantomimes perhaps.

I discovered the house again after some little losing of myself in cross streets, and, climbing the steps, entered a square room, where a man was stitching on a sewing machine and four girls were working away on masses of gauze and silk as though they had no intention of stopping that night.

A fat lady, who seemed to be the owner of the place, advanced to meet me, and listened to me with a solemn countenance.

"A masquerade ball," said she. "At an elegant house? Oh, to be sure. You must get yourself up well for that, a young gentleman like you. I wouldn't advise you to hire a domino, I wouldn't. It's wery common, is a domino. A King Charles would be elegant, but we haven't one to-night. There is a Harry VIII but, bless you, it's too big—far too big."

"There's the red devil, ma'am," said the man at the machine.

"There is, and a handsome devil, too, if I say it that designed it—a handsome devil. A club of four gents ordered them, but only three came for them. They said the other one was obliged to leave the city, and the fourth is on my hands. You can look at it. Looking costs nothing, and it's a very handsome devil indeed. Get it out, Mat, get it out, and let the young gent look at it."

A red cloth costume, with a cloth tail, horns and mask was produced. On its bosom was embroidered an ace of spades. A black cloak belonged to it, and was fastened over the breast with a cord. It struck me favorably.

"Cost price you shall have it at, to get your custom," said the lady, "and cheaper than hiring it, for you'll be asked to a great many masquerades, no doubt, and what could be more elegant?"

She seemed to know all about it; I knew nothing. I paid her what I presume was a fine price for the red devil and carried it away with me. Shortly I attired myself in the costume and sent for a cab. I was an object of interest in the small boarding house where I dwelt, and was admired and wondered at in the front parlor to my heart's content.

"You've got stylish friends," said young Spruce, who was in a dry goods store, "if you know the Maltbys. I should go in for one of the girls if I were you. They're pretty and will have lots of money. I wish I had the chance you have."

All this was flattering; but time was flying and the cab at the door. I entered it, and soon found myself in the Maltby parlors.

Mr. Maltby and wife were receiving everybody.

"How do you do, Mephistopheles?" Mr. Maltby said. "You'll find some more of the family in there. Ha! ha! ha! I'll lay a wager you are Captain Jones."

Evidently he did not know me for young Tom Parsons.

I strutted in in as military a fashion as possible, and made my way through the crowd, admiring the kings and queens, contadinas and court ladies, Martha Washingtons and Spanish senoras, until at last I espied a figure which I at first fancied must be my own reflection in a looking glass. It was another red devil, in no particular different from myself, except that an ace of clubs was embroidered upon his bosom where the spade appeared on mine. As he came near enough for me to notice this slight difference the demon paused.

"How did you get here?" he said, with an oath that I had always been taught to consider as vulgar as it was profane. "I thought it was all up with you." He evidently took me for a friend. I knew enough of masquerade balls from a literary point of view to feel that it was my duty to carry on the mystification.

"Ask no questions," I said, solemnly. He nodded and walked away. Shortly two other demons approached, exactly like myself again, and like the other friend also, save that one had a heart, the other a diamond embroidered on his bosom.

"It's Dick, by heaven!" said he of the heart. "How did you do it?"

I laughed sardonically. This was going to a masquerade ball indeed.

"We'd better separate just now," said the demon of the diamond, "and dance with some of the girls. There's the music."

I had taken lessons in dancing in my boyhood, and when the master of ceremonies, a tall gentleman, attired as Don Quixote, approached me and asked me with whom I would dance, I indicated a pretty peasant girl in white sleeves and a laced bodice, and being led up to her and introduced as a great unknown, asked for her hand in the next lancers, as I had been taught to do it at Miss Pirrot's academy. I had no idea that the little peasant was one of the Misses Maltby; but I certainly had chosen the nicest dancer and the liveliest talker possible. She put me down for three dances more, and promised to go to supper with me.

"But suppose another demon comes to me. How shall I know you from your brother?" she asked.

"Behold the ace of spades!" said I. "The others are diamonds, clubs and hearts."

"I'll remember," she answered.

Then I resigned her to a grand Turk, who walked away with her, and I danced with a stately person, all black lace and gold stars, with a little golden crescent on her head, who told me she was Night.

So the evening wore away until it was nearly 11 o'clock, and a smell of coffee began to fill the house.

I was about to cross the room to speak to my peasant girl, when a hand touched my arm.

"Don't engage yourself to take any girl down to supper," said a voice in my ear. I turned; it was the devil with the heart on his bosom who had addressed me.

"You want her yourself, do you?" I asked.

A little further on the demon with a club touched me.

"This way," he said. "I've got a word for you. The trick must be done at supper time. If a girl gets her hooks on you it's all up. Keep out of the way."

"The tricks of a masquerade," I thought. I turned away to face the demon with the diamond.

"There is no one in the library," he said. "Get there somehow without being noticed; we must have a talk. Don't be seen following me."

No doubt some joke was afoot. I bowed to my peasant girl and went to the library, after a pause or two on the way in order to distract attention. The other three demons were already there. One of them—the one with the diamond on his bosom—produced several keys.

"Mag is a jewel," he said. "They've all been tried; everything is worth scooping. Gas turned off in the side street opposite the church. The bath room window opens on it. Bill and Dick down there to catch the sealskins, shawls and such. When they begin to march in to supper, pitch in." He gave us each a key, and in order to examine the numbers on them, removed his mask for a moment, revealing a villainous countenance—the face one would expect of a professional thief, and this I knew he must be.

The four demons had bought their costumes for the purpose of entering the house at a time when it would be easy to rob it. The servant, "Mag," was a confederate, and had provided them with cards of admission, and had tried the keys at odd times.

"How the devil you got here, I can't think," the leader of the band said to me as he replaced the mask. "I saw you nabbed with my own eyes. 'Good for six months,' says I. Counted you out of this game."

I gave a queer laugh under my mask.

"I say," I whispered, gruffly. "I've got to get rid of that girl or she'll be hunting me up to go to supper."

It was the most unlikely thing for a young lady to do; but these men did not know that. They only bade me "make haste about it."

"You're the third floor,' said the ace of clubs.

"Ay, ay," said I.

Away I went, but not to the side of my peasant girl. It was Mr. Maltby whom I sought. In his ear I whispered:

"I am Tom Parsons. Don't think I'm joking. Thieves are in the house. Send for the police. The girl Maggie is a confederate."

Mr. Maltby stepped into the hall and touched a call that was placed there. I was still at his elbow.

"The signal for the operations is to be the march to supper," I said.

Mr. Maltby turned to the musicians. "Another set of lancers," he said. "The cook is behindhand."

The lancers were played. Meanwhile I caught the faithless Maggie on the kitchen stairs and flirted with her, showing her my keys by stealth.

"There's a watch of cook's in the mansard room," the girl whispered. "A good gold one, and a ring or two on the cushion, if they are worth looking after."

"You are worth looking after, anyhow," I said, taking off my mask, for I saw the officers of justice enter the door; "and I'll try to do it." The girl smothered a shriek. There was a sound of scuffling in the library, and three red devils walked out of the house, each attended by a member of the police. A little later another called for Maggie. It was all very quietly done; only the servants guessed what was going on.

I went down to supper with my little peasant girl, who unmasked the loveliest face possible, and who was no other than the youngest Miss Maltby, whose name was Theresa, and after the other guests were gone the family made me a hero.

My story was pronounced a wonderful one, and assuredly I had been the means of saving Mr. Maltby from great loss and mortification. From that day I was an intimate friend of the family, and Theresa is now my wife. The red devil costume still hangs in a wardrobe of my room, and I occasionally put it on to amuse the children, though I have, it so happens, never attended another masquerade ball.—Mary Kyle Dallas in Fireside Companion.

MILLIONS FOR CHARITY.

Some Notable Benefactions by Men of Great Wealth.

John D. Rockefeller and Leland Stanford stand at the head of the list of liberal givers among multimillionaires. The latter has contributed the largest single sum, for the Leland Stanford university has cost at least $30,000,000; but the friends of Mr. Rockefeller claim more for him in the aggregate. It does not take a very large sum, either, to head the list, for our millionaires as a rule have given much less in proportion to their incomes than men of moderate means.

J. D. ROCKEFELLER.

The fact that Jay Gould's recent gift of $10,000 to a church was widely commented on shows what the world thinks of him in that line. According to the best estimates that amount absorbed his entire income for about nine hours. The amount subscribed to church charities in 1891 is set at $20,000,000, and one may see in any list that it is made up of separate small sums. Andrew Carnegie stands next to the two above mentioned, and all the rest of the multimillionaires are a long, long way behind.

It is a matter of dispute whether Jay Gould or Mr. Rockefeller is the richest American, but the latter is certainly worth $120,000,000, and some estimates double that. He has recently added $1,000,000 to his contribution to the Chicago university, making his total gift thereto $2,600,000. Yet it seems but a little while ago that he was running a modest produce store in Cleveland and just beginning to "dabble in oil." In 1865 he was joined by Samuel Andrews and Henry M. Flagler in a movement to unite all the oil companies under one general management, and the Standard Oil company, with a capital of $90,000,000, is the result. The world is familiar with the way pipe lines were laid and railway companies brought to terms till the name of that company became a synonym for resistless corporate power.

Personally Mr. Rockefeller is the most modest of millionaires, devoted to business, home life and the Baptist church, of which last he is a very ardent supporter. He lives in a very unpretentious house on West Fifty-fourth street, New York, and has a fine summer residence near Greenwich, on the sound. His wife and three daughters are quite reserved and homelike. The oldest daughter is the wife of Charles, son of Rev. Dr. Strong, a Baptist clergyman, and the rest of the family are very rarely absent on Sunday from the pew in Dr. Armitage's church.

The business of the family consists chiefly in examining and deciding upon applications for charity. The daughters decide all ordinary cases, while those requiring more thought are referred to the father and the letters placed on file. The mass of appealing mail matter is described as enormous. John and his scarcely less famous brother, William, were born in Cleveland, and John is now fifty-two years old, 5 feet 10 inches high and weighs about 170 pounds. The estimate of his wealth given above is the most conservative, but many who claim to know say he is worth at least $200,000,000, and therefore $40,000,000 ahead of Jay Gould.

A Land of Great Promise.

Every one who has read Stanley's book or who has followed the adventures of the great explorer in the newspapers will at once recognize the name of Jephson, who was one of his most trusted lieutenants on the last expedition. Jephson has been with Emin Pasha for a long time, and in his recent lectures he has said that central Africa has a great future before it, and that its development is only a matter of time. Tobacco of a very fine quality grows almost everywhere. Cotton, however, he thinks, will be the staple crop. Emin has already cultivated considerable quantities of it successfully. Mr. Jephson expects the proposed railroad to Lake Victoria Nyanza to work wonders. He says that the present cost of transportation of a bale of cloth from the coast to the lake is five times as great as the original cost of the fabric.

Female Suffrage Extraordinary.

Perhaps the most advanced idea with regard to female suffrage which has ever appeared in print was recently published in The Jewish Tidings. The correspondent magnanimously agrees with the generally accepted theory that "one vote is enough for a family," but naively adds, "and let the woman have it." His theory is that "large hearted women, with a knowledge of the world and their own sex, must form a society for the protection of men, and use their best endeavors to influence public opinion in the direction of making men safe from the attacks and machinations of unscrupulous and designing females."

Every Little Helps.

A sarcastic exchange cuttingly observes that "the success of the World's fair is assured, since Bulgaria has declared that she will participate." But, in spite of this newspaper's irony, it is quite safe to predict that Bulgaria's exhibit will be one of the most attractive at the exposition.

Give the Ladies a Chance.

It is not surprising that there is more or less discord among the woman managers of the World's Columbian exposition. It took men 1,200 years to learn how to act together in freedom and harmony, and the women have not had fifty years' experience yet. Give 'em time—give 'em time.

Much Traveled "Lane" Routes.

A steamer wrecked while traversing one of the four great Atlantic ocean routes ought to stand a pretty good chance of having her passengers rescued, inasmuch as there are said to be 1,100 boats which always use these "lanes" on their voyages between Europe and America.

To Annex Sinai.

Great Britain has asked the sultan of Turkey and guaranteeing powers to annex the Sinai peninsula to the dominions of the khedive, as it will be much more convenient for pilgrims, monks and missionaries to get their permits in Egypt.

Twenty-five Million Methodists.

The Methodists claim to begin the year with a church population of 25,000,000 and nearly 7,000,000 members in regular standing. Of these 5,383,944 are in America, 915,986 in Europe, 85,313 in Asia and 77,234 in Africa.

England's Benefactions.

England is on the gain, from a philanthropic standpoint. Her charitable bequests last year, outside of those of Baron Hirsch, amounted to $15,000,000. This was a gain of $4,000,000 over the preceding year.

THE NEW BALLOT LAW

AN ACT TO AMEND SECTIONS 1185, 1186, 1187, 1188, 1189, 1190, 1191, 1192, 1193, 1194, 1195, 1196, 1197, 1198, 1199, 1200, 1201, 1202, 1203, 1204, 1205, 1206, 1207, 1208, 1209, 1210, 1211, 1212, 1257, 1258, AND 1259 OF THE POLITICAL CODE, AND TO ADD FOUR NEW SECTIONS THERETO, TO BE NUMBERED 1213, 1214, 1215 AND 1216, ALL IN RELATION TO THE CONDUCT OF ELECTIONS IN THIS STATE.

The People of the State of California, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. Section 1185 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1185. All ballots cast in elections for public officers within this State shall be printed and distributed at public expense as hereinafter provided. The printing of general tickets and cards of instruction to electors of each county, and the delivery of the same to the election officers, shall be a county charge, the payment of which shall be provided for in the same manner as the payment of other county expenses; and the printing and delivering of "municipal tickets," and also in case of separate elections for city, city and county, or town officers, the printing and delivering of cards of instruction shall be a charge upon the respective city, city and county or town in which such "municipal tickets" and cards of instruction are to be used, the payment of which shall be provided for in the same manner as the payment of other city, city and county or town expenses.

SEC. 2. Section 1186 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1186. Any convention, as hereinafter defined, held for the purpose of making nominations for public office, and also electors, in the number hereinafter specified, may nominate candidates for public offices to be filled by election within the State. A convention, within the meaning of this act, is an organized assemblage of delegates representing a political party which, at the last election before the holding of such convention, polled at least 3 per cent of the entire vote of the State, county, district or other political division for which the nomination is made; provided, that in any county, township, city or district wherein no general election shall have been held after its organization, a convention of any party polling at least 3 per cent, of the votes cast in the precincts composing such county, township, city or district shall have the same power, and its nominations the same effect as though such county, township, city or district had been organized before the next preceding general election.

SEC. 3. Section 1187 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1187. All nominations made by any such convention shall be certified as follows: The certificate of nomination, which must be in writing, shall contain the name of each person nominated, his residence and the office for which he is nominated, and shall designate the party or principle which such convention represents. It shall be signed by the chairman and secretary of such convention, who shall add to the signatures their respective places of residence, and make oath before an officer authorized to administer the same, that the matter stated in such certificate is true to the best of their knowledge and belief, and a certificate of the oath shall be annexed to the certificate of nomination.

SEC. 4. Section 1188 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1188. A candidate for public office may be nominated otherwise than by a convention in the manner following. A certificate of nomination containing the name of the candidate to be nominated, with the other information required to be given in the certificates provided for in Sections 1187 of this code, shall be signed by electors residing within the district or political division for which candidates are to be presented, equal in number to at least 3 per cent of the entire vote cast at the last preceding election in the state, district or political division for which the nomination is to be made, provided, that 1,500 signatures shall be sufficient for the nomination of a candidate for any office in the State. Said signatures need not all be appended to one paper, but each signer shall add to his signature his place of residence, giving the street and number, when he resides in a city. One of the signers of each such certificate shall swear that the statements therein made are true to the best of his knowledge and belief, and a certificate of such oath shall be annexed. Such certificate, when made as above prescribed, shall have the same effect as a certificate of nomination made by a party convention.

SEC. 5. Section 1189 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1189. Certificates of nomination shall be filed with the Secretary of State for the nomination of candidates for offices to be filled by the electors of the entire State, or for members of the State Board of Equalization, State Board of Railroad Commissioners, or House of Representatives. Certificate of nomination shall be filed with the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town for the nomination of any candidate for an office under the government of any city or town, to be filled by the electors of such city or town. For all other nominations to public offices, certificates of nomination shall be filed with the Clerks of the respective counties wherein the offices are to be filled by the electors, and where the district or political division embraces more than one county, such certificate must be filed with the Clerk of the county in which the candidate resides, and the name of each such candidate as specified in the certificate of nomination shall be certified by said County Clerk to the County Clerks of the other counties within the district or political division, not less than fifteen days before the day of election.

SEC. 6. Section 1190 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1190. No certificate of nomination shall contain the name of more than one candidate for each office to be filled. No person shall join in nominating, under the provisions of this code, more than one nominee for each office to be filled, and no person who has voted in a convention for or against a candidate for any office shall join in nominating, in any manner, any other nominee for that office, and no person shall accept a nomination to more than one office.

SEC. 7. Section 1191 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1191. The Secretary of State shall preserve in his office for the period of two years all certificates of nomination filed therein under the provisions of this code, and each County Clerk shall preserve in his office for a like period all certificates of nomination filed therein under the provisions of this code, and each Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town shall for a like period preserve in his office all certificates of nomination filed therein under the provisions of this code.

SEC. 8. Section 1192 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1192. Certificate of nomination required to be filed with the Secretary of State shall be filed not more than sixty days and not less than forty days before the day fixed by law for the election of the persons in nomination when the nomination is made by convention, and not more than sixty days and not less than thirty days before the day of election when the nomination is made by electors as provided in Section 1188 of this code. Certificates of nomination required to be filed with the County Clerks, or with the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any city or town, shall be filed not more than fifty nor not less than thirty days before the day of election, when the nomination is made by a convention, and not more than fifty days nor less than twenty days before the day of election when the nomination is made by electors. Should a vacancy in the list of nominees of a convention occur, such vacancy may be filled by the convention, or if it has delegated to a committee the power to fill vacancies, such committee may, upon the occurring of such vacancy, proceed to fill the same; provided, that no nomination shall be made or certified at a period before the day of election less than the minimum number of days provided for filing certificates of nomination made under this code. The chairman and secretary of the convention, or of such committee, shall thereupon make and file with the proper officer a certificate setting forth the cause of the vacancy, the name of the person nominated, the office for which he was nominated, the name of the person for whom the new nominee is to be substituted, the fact that the committee was authorized to fill vacancies, and such further information as is required to be given in an original certificate of nomination. When a certificate to fill any vacancy shall be filed with the Secretary of State, he shall in certifying the nomination to the various County Clerks, insert the name of the person who has been thus nominated to fill a vacancy in the place of that of the original nominee. Any person whose name has been presented as a candidate, may, at least five days before the making of the publication of the nominations prescribed in this section, cause his name to be withdrawn from nomination by filing with the Secretary of State and County Clerk his request therefor in writing, signed by him and acknowledged before the County Clerk of the county in which he resides, and no name so withdrawn shall be printed on the ballot.

SEC. 9. Section 1193 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1193. Not less than twenty-five days before an election to fill any public office, the Secretary of State shall certify to the County Clerk of each county within which any of the electors may by law vote for candidates for such office, the names of each person nominated for such office, as specified in the certificate of nomination filed with the Secretary of State.

SEC. 10. Section 1194 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1194. At least ten days before an election to fill any public office, the County Clerk of each county shall cause to be published, in at least two newspapers of general circulation within the county, the nominations to office certified to him by the Secretary of State, and also all those filed with the County Clerk. He shall make not less than two such publications in each of such newspapers before election day, one of such publications being made upon the last day upon which such newspaper is issued before the day of election. The list of nominations published by the County Clerks of the respective counties shall be arranged in the order and form in which they will be printed upon the ballot. The Clerk or the Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town with whom the names of any candidates have been filed shall publish in the same manner the list of nominations filed with him; but where only one newspaper is printed in any county, city or town, then publication in such newspaper shall be deemed sufficient, and where no newspaper is printed in such county, city or town, publication shall be made through any newspaper designated by the Board of Supervisors of said county, or the legislative body of such city or town, and by posting copies of the ballot in three of the most public places in such county, city or town not less than ten days before the day of election.

SEC. 11. Section 1195 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1195. Whenever a proposed constitutional amendment, or other question, is to be submitted to the people of the State for the popular vote, the Secretary of State shall duly, and not less than twenty-five days before election, certify the same to the Clerk of each county of the State; and the Clerk of each county shall include the same in publication provided for in Section 1194 of this code.

SEC. 12. Section 1196 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1196. Except as in this code otherwise provided, it shall be the duty of the County Clerk of each county to provide printed ballots for every election of public officers, except elections for city or town officers, in which election or any of the electors within the county participate, and to cause to be printed in the appropriate ballot the name of every candidate whose name has been certified to, or filed with the County Clerk, in the manner provided for in this code. Ballots other than those printed by the respective County Clerks, or the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town, according to the provisions of this code, shall not be used nor received at any election. It shall be the duty of the County Clerk of any consolidated city and county to provide separate ballots for every election for city and county officers in which the electors or any of the electors of such city and county participate, and to cause to be printed in such separate ballots the name of every candidate for a city and county office, whose name has been filed with the said County Clerk in the manner provided in this code. It shall be the duty of the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town to provide separate ballots for every election for city or town officers in which the electors, or any of the electors of such city or town participate, and to cause to be printed in such separate ballots the name of every candidate whose name has been filed with such Clerk or Secretary in the manner provided for in this code. All ballots shall be of the necessary size and shape to contain the names of all the candidates, together with the necessary blank spaces hereinafter provided for, and shall be printed on tinted paper furnished by the Secretary of State. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to obtain and keep on hand a sufficient supply of paper for such ballots, and to furnish the same in quantities ordered to any County Clerk, or Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town upon payment by them of the cost of such paper. Such paper shall have the water marked with a design to be furnished by the Secretary of State, in such manner that the said water mark shall be plainly discernible on the outside of such ballot when folded according to law. Such design shall be kept secret from all persons not engaged in the preparation, printing or distribution of the paper or ballots until the day of election. Such design shall be changed for each general election, and the same design shall not be used again at any general election within the space of 14 years, but at any special or separate local election paper marked with the design used at the previous election may be used. Nothing in this code contained shall prevent any voter from writing upon his ballot the name of any person for whom he desires to vote for any office, and such vote shall be counted the same as if printed upon the ballot and marked as voted for.

SEC. 13. Section 1197 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1197. All ballots printed by County Clerks, other than the separate ballots containing the names of candidates for city and county offices, printed by the County Clerks of consolidated cities and counties shall be headed "General Ticket"; and all ballots printed by County Clerks of consolidated cities and counties, containing the names of candidates for city and county offices, and also all tickets printed by the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town, shall be headed "Municipal Ticket." Under the heading of all general tickets, the respective names of the Congressional, Senatorial and Assembly district in which such ticket is to be voted shall be printed, together with the following direction to voters: "To vote for a person [stamp] a cross (X) in the square at the right of the name." Immediately at the left of each office shall be printed a direction to the voter specifying the number of persons to be voted for for that office, and opposite each constitutional amendment or other question to be voted upon in separate lines the words "yes" and "no." All municipal tickets containing the names of candidates for ward or district offices, in addition to such direction to voters, shall have the number of the ward or district in which such ticket is to be voted printed thereon. All municipal tickets shall be printed upon paper of a different tint from that of the general ticket. On each ballot a perforated line shall extend from top to bottom, one-half inch from the right hand side of such ballot, and upon the half-inch strip thus formed there shall be no printing except the number of the ballot, which shall be upon the back of such strip in such position that it shall appear on the outside when the ballot is folded. The number on each ballot shall be the same as that on the corresponding stub, and the ballots and stubs shall be numbered consecutively in each county. All ballots shall be 9 inches in length and 4½ in width, and as many times such width as shall be necessary to contain the names of all candidates nominated. Where the names of candidates are printed in separate columns such columns shall be separated by heavy rules; and on all ballots the names of candidates shall each be separated by a rule extending to the extreme right of the column. All ballots shall be printed in plain Roman type, and shall contain the name of every candidate whose nomination for any office specified in the ballot has been certified to and filed according to the provisions of this code, and no other name; [and there shall be added to all the names of candidates their party or political organizations.] The names of the candidates for each office shall be arranged under the designation of the office, in alphabetical order, according to surname. [Except that the names of candidates for the office of electors for President and Vice President shall be arranged in groups as presented in the several certificates of nomination, and the voter may vote for the whole of said group by making one mark after such group.] There shall be left at the end of the list of candidates for each office as many blank spaces as there are persons to be elected to such office in which the voter may insert the name of any person not printed upon the ballot for whom he desires to vote as candidate for such office; and the names and blank spaces on the whole ticket shall be consecutively numbered, the figures being placed on the left-hand side of such names and blank spaces. There shall be a margin on the right-hand side of the names, at least one-half of an inch wide, so that the voter may clearly indicate, in the way to be hereafter pointed out, the candidate and candidates for whom he wishes to cast his ballot; the county, city or town in which each candidate resides may be printed in small type on the right-hand side of his name. Whenever any question is to be submitted to the vote of the people, it shall also be printed upon the ballot in such a manner as to enable the electors to vote upon such question in the manner hereinafter provided. At the head of each ballot shall be printed in separate lines the names of all political parties which have filed certificates of nomination of candidates in accordance with Sections 1186 and 1187 of this code, thus: "Regular Republican Ticket", (straight); opposite the names of each party, and on the same line therewith, there shall be a margin similar to that herein required, to be left opposite the name of each candidate, in which the voter may place the mark in the manner specified in Section 1209 of this code, if he desires to vote for all of the candidates of such party, but a ballot so marked shall not be counted if it be stamped in any other place except to indicate a vote or votes upon a constitutional amendment or other question.

SEC. 14. Section 1198 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1198. All ballots, when printed, shall be bound in stub-books of 100 ballots each. A record of the number of ballots printed by them shall be kept by the respective County Clerks, and by the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of each incorporated city or town.

SEC. 15. Section 1199 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1199. The County Clerk of each county shall provide for each election precinct in the county not less than one hundred general tickets for every fifty or fraction of fifty electors registered in the election precinct; and in case of a consolidated city and county, an equal number of municipal tickets when any city and county officers are to be elected; and the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town shall furnish a like number of municipal tickets when any city or town officer is to be elected.

SEC. 16. Section 1200 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1200. Whenever it shall appear by affidavit that an error or omission has occurred in the publication of the name or description of the candidates nominated for office, or in the printing of the ballots, the Superior Court of the county, or the Judge thereof, shall, upon application by any elector, by order, require the County Clerk to correct such error, or to show cause why such error should not be corrected.

SEC. 17. Section 1201 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1201. Before the opening of the polls at any election within any county, the County Clerk of the county shall cause to be delivered to the Boards of Election of each election precinct which is within the county, and in which the election is to be held, at the polling-place of the election precinct, the proper number of general tickets to be used in the election precinct, in sealed packages, with marks on the outside, clearly designating the precinct or polling-place for which they are intended, and the number of ballots inclosed, and in case of a consolidated city and county, also a like number of municipal tickets; and the Clerk or Secretary of any incorporated city or town shall in like manner cause to be delivered the proper number of municipal tickets. The County Clerk, Clerk or Secretary shall prepare a receipt for each polling-place, enumerating the packages and stating the time and day and date when the same were delivered by him to the Inspectors of Election. The Inspectors of Election shall sign said receipt upon receipt of the packages, which shall forthwith be returned and filed. The County Clerk, Clerk and Secretary respectively shall have authority to employ such messengers as may be necessary to insure the safe and expeditious delivery of the ballots to the Inspectors or Judges of Election, as provided in this code, and the Board of Supervisors, or other board or body having the control of elections, shall allow such messengers a reasonable compensation for their services, to be paid as other election expenses are paid. In case of the prevention of an election in any precinct by the loss or the destruction of the ballots intended for that precinct, the Inspector or other election officer for that precinct shall make an affidavit setting forth the fact, swear to the same before an officer authorized to administer oaths, and transmit it to the Governor of this State. Upon receipt of such affidavit the Governor may order a new election in such precinct, and upon the application of any candidate for any office to be voted for by the electors of such precinct the Governor shall order a new election in such precinct.

SEC. 18. Section 1202 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1202. At the same time and in the same manner as Inspectors and Judges of Election are now appointed in this State, two ballot clerks for each election precinct in the State shall be appointed, whose duty it shall be to have charge of the ballots on the day of election, and to furnish them to the voters in the manner hereinafter provided. Such ballot clerks shall possess the same qualifications, and shall be paid the same compensation, as Inspectors of Elections. In making appointments of such ballot clerks, one of them shall be taken from the political party that polled the largest number of votes at the last preceding election and the other from the party that polled the next largest number of votes at such election. They shall act as additional Clerks of Election when the polls are closed, and after they shall serve until the votes are counted and the returns are signed; provided, that whenever a general and municipal election shall be held at the same time, there shall be appointed one additional Inspector, one additional Judge, and two additional clerks in the manner now provided by law.

SEC. 19. Section 1203 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1203. All officers upon whom is imposed by the law of the State the duty of designating polling places shall cause such polling places to be provided with a ballot-box, to be marked on the outside, "general tickets," and when any city, city and county or town officers are to be elected a second ballot-box, to be marked on the outside "municipal tickets," and shall also provide a sufficient number of places, booths or compartments at which the voters may conveniently mark their ballots, so that in the marking thereof they may be screened from the observation of others, and a guard-rail shall be so constructed and placed that only such persons as are invited by the voter to approach within six feet of the ballot-boxes and of such booths or compartments. The arrangements shall be such that neither the ballot-boxes nor the box, booth or compartments shall be hidden from the view of those outside the ballot guard-rail. The number of such voting booths or compartments shall not be less than one for every fifty electors qualified to vote in the precinct. No person other than electors engaged in receiving, preparing or depositing their ballots shall be permitted to be within said rail before the closing of the polls except by authority of the Board of Election, and then only for the purpose of keeping order and enforcing the law. Each of said voting booths or compartments shall be kept provided with proper supplies and conveniences for marking the ballots.

SEC. 20. Section 1204 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1204. Any person desiring to vote shall give his name and address to one of the ballot clerks, who shall then, in an audible tone of voice, announce the same, and if the other ballot clerk finds the name on the register, he shall in like manner repeat the name and address, whereupon a challenge may be interposed, as provided in Section 1208 of this code. If the challenge be overruled, the ballot clerk shall give the ticket, and the clerk shall write on the register, opposite the name of the voter, the number of the general ticket given him, and also the number of the municipal ticket given him, when any city, city and county or town officer is to be elected; and the voter shall be allowed to enter the place inclosed by the guard-rail, as above provided. The ballot clerk shall give him but one general ticket, and where any city, city and county or town officers are to be elected, also one municipal ticket; and only one ballot of each kind.

SEC. 21. Section 1205 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1205. On receipt of his ballot the elector shall forthwith, and without leaving the inclosed space, retire alone to one of the places, booths or compartments provided to prepare his ballot. He shall prepare his ballot by marking a cross after the name of the person or persons for whom he intends to vote, thus, X, provided, however, that any elector who desires to vote for an entire party ticket, may make a cross above the emblem against the political designation of such party, and shall then be deemed to have voted for all persons nominated by such party; and in case of a constitutional amendment or other question submitted to the vote of the people, by marking in the appropriate margin, a cross (X) against the answer which he desires to give. Such marking shall be done only with a stamp, which, with necessary pads and ink, shall be provided by the officers who are by this code required to furnish election supplies for each booth or compartment provided for the marking and preparation of ballots. Before leaving such booth or compartment the elector shall fold his ballot in such a manner that the number of the ballot shall appear on the outside thereof, without displaying the marks on the face thereof, and shall keep it folded until he has voted. Having folded his ballot the voter shall deliver it folded to the Inspector, who shall announce in an audible tone of voice the name of the voter and the number of his ballot. The ballot clerk having the register in charge, if he finds the number to correspond with the number marked opposite the voter's name on the register, shall in like manner repeat the name and number, and shall mark opposite the name the word "voted." The Inspector shall then separate the number from the ballot, and shall deposit the ballot in the box. The numbers of all ballots voted shall be immediately destroyed.

SEC. 22. Section 1206 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1206. Not more than one person shall be permitted to occupy any one booth at one time, and no person shall remain in or occupy a booth longer than necessary to prepare his ballot, and in no event longer than ten minutes.

SEC. 23. Section 1207 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1207. Any voter who shall spoil a ballot shall return such spoiled ballot to the Ballot Clerk and receive another one in its place, one at a time, not to exceed three in all. All the ballots thus returned shall be immediately canceled, and, with those not distributed to the voters, shall be returned with the registered list and ballots, as now provided in Sections 1263 and 1264 of this code. Every elector who does not vote the ballot delivered to him shall, before leaving the polling place, return such ballot to the Ballot Clerks having charge of the ballots, who shall immediately cancel the same and return them in the same manner as spoiled ballots. The Ballot Clerks shall account for the ballots delivered to them by returning a sufficient number of unused ballots to make up, when added to the number of official ballots cast and the number of spoiled ballots returned, the number of ballots given to them, and it shall be the duty of the officers receiving such returned ballots to compel such accounting.

SEC. 24. Section 1208 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1208. Any elector who declares, under oath, to the presiding election officer that he cannot read, and that by reason thereof, or that by reason of physical disability, he is unable to mark his ballot, shall, upon request, receive the assistance of any one of the officers of election that he may choose in the marking thereof, and such officer shall thereafter give no information regarding the same.

SEC. 25. Section 1209 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1209. No member of the Board of Election shall deposit in the ballot-box any ballot from which the slip containing the number of the ballot has not been removed by the Inspector.

SEC. 26. Section 1210 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1210. The County Clerk of each county, or in case of separate city or town elections, the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of such city or town shall cause to be printed on plain white paper, without water-mark or indorsements (except the words "sample ballot") at least as many copies of the form of ballot provided for use in each voting precinct as there shall be registered voters in such precinct. Such copy shall be designated "sample ballots," and shall be furnished to registered voters at the office of such Clerk or Secretary five days before the day fixed by law for such election, and at any time during such five days; provided, that not more than one sample ballot shall be furnished to any one voter. Such Clerk or Secretary shall cause to be printed, in large, clear type, on cards, instructions for the guidance of electors in obtaining and marking their ballots. He shall furnish twelve such cards to the Board of Election in each election precinct in his county, at the same time and in the same manner as the printed ballots and sample ballots. The Board of Election shall post at least one of such cards in each booth or compartment provided for the preparation of ballots, and not less than three of such cards at other places in and about the polling places on the day of election. Sections 1214 and 1215 of this code and Section 61 of the Penal Code shall also be printed on each of said cards.

SEC. 27. Section 1211 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1211. In canvassing the votes any ballot which is not made as provided in this act shall be void, and shall not be counted; but each such ballot must be preserved and returned with the other ballots. Any name written upon a ballot shall be counted for the office under which it is written, whether or not a cross is marked after it. If a voter marks more names than there are persons to be elected to an office, or if for any reason it is impossible to determine the voter's choice for any office to be filled, his ballot shall not be counted for such office.

SEC. 28. Section 1212 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1212. Any person entitled to vote at a general election held within this State shall, on the day of such election, be entitled to absent himself from any service or employment in which he is then engaged or employed for the period of two consecutive hours, between the time of opening and the time of closing the polls; and such voter shall not, because of so absenting himself, be liable to any penalty, nor shall any deduction be made on account of such absence from his usual salary or wages.

[Amend Section 1.57 of the Political Code to read as follows:

After the lists are thus signed, the board must proceed to open the ballots and count and ascertain the number of votes cast for each person voted for. All the ballots must be taken out of the ballot box, one at a time, and opened by one of the members of the board, and as so taken out, the straight ballots must be placed in separate piles, according to their respective ticket headings, vignettes, or other designations in manner as follows, to wit: All the straight ballots of each such party must be placed in a separate pile, and straight undesignated ballots must be placed in a separate pile in a like manner. When all the straight ballots shall have been so placed in piles, the number of ballots in each such pile must be carefully, correctly and distinctly counted aloud by a member of the board, in presence of the board and of the bystanders, whereupon an official record must be made by each clerk of the total number of ballots in each such pile. Immediately thereafter all straight ballots, according to their respective headings, vignettes or other designations, shall be distinctly read by such clerks, and the official total of such pile so made by clerks shall be read in connection with the office for which he is a candidate, and said total shall be added to such candidate. Immediately thereafter all straight ballots must be by one of the Judges strung upon one string in such a manner that all the straight ballots of each party shall be in direct succession and immediate proximity upon said string, and all such ballots so strung shall thereupon be securely bound together by said string and replaced in the ballot-box.

All the ballots, other than straight ballots, of each separate political or other party must be piled in such a manner that when all the ballots have been so placed in a pile the number of ballots in such pile must be carefully, correctly and distinctly counted aloud by a member of the board in the presence of the board and of the bystanders, whereupon an official record shall be made by each clerk of the total number of ballots in such pile. Immediately thereafter all the ballots, other than straight ballots, must be by one of the Judges strung upon one string in such a manner that all the ballots of each distinct party ballots, shall be in direct succession and immediate proximity upon said string, and all such ballots, other than straight ballots, shall thereupon be securely bound and replaced in the ballot-box. In case there are more than one such pile of ballots, other than straight ballots, must be freed from such twine or other fastening without removal from the ballot-box, and such ballots must be taken out one at a time by one of the members of the board, and the name of each person voted for on the ballots so taken out shall be distinctly read in connection with the office for which he is a candidate. After the ballots, other than straight ballots, have been so counted, and an official record, as heretofore mentioned, made, such persons as are invited by the voter to approach within six feet of the ballot-boxes and of such booths or compartments. The arrangements shall be such that neither the ballot-boxes nor the box booth or compartments shall be hidden from the view of those outside the ballot guard-rail. The number of such voting booths or compartments shall not be less than one for every fifty electors qualified to vote in the precinct. No person other than electors engaged in receiving, preparing or depositing their ballots shall be permitted to be within said rail before the closing of the polls except by authority of the Board of Election, and then only for the purpose of keeping order and enforcing the law. Each of said voting booths or compartments shall be kept provided with proper supplies and conveniences for marking the ballots.

SEC. 29. Section 1259 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1259. The ballots, as soon as the names marked on them as voted for are read, must be strung on a string by one of the judges, and must not thereafter be examined by any person, but must, as soon as all are counted, be carefully sealed in a strong envelope, each member of the board writing his name across the seal.

SEC. 32. Four new sections are hereby added to the Political Code, to be numbered, respectively, 1213, 1214, 1215 and 1216, as follows:

Sec. 1213. No person shall falsely make, or fraudulently deface or destroy any certificate of nomination, or any part thereof, or file any certificate of nomination, knowing the same or any part thereof to be falsely made, or suppress any certificate of nomination which has been duly filed, or any part thereof, or make, use, keep or furnish to others, except as in this code so directed, any paper water-mark in imitation of ballot paper, or disclose the same to any person not engaged in making, printing or distribution of ballot paper or ballots.

Sec. 1214. No person shall, during an election, remove or destroy any of the supplies or other conveniences placed in the voting booths or compartments, as provided in this code, for the purpose of enabling the voter to prepare his ballot. No person shall, during an election, remove, tear down or deface the cards printed for the instruction of voters.

Sec. 1215. No officer of election shall disclose to any person the name of any candidate for whom any elector has voted. No officer of election, nor any person, shall do any electioneering on election day within one hundred feet of any polling place. No person shall remove any ballot from any polling place before the closing of the poll. No person shall apply for or receive any ballot at any election precinct other than that in which he is entitled to vote. No person shall show his ballot after it is marked to any person in such a way as to reveal the contents thereof, or the name or names of the candidate or candidates for whom he has marked his ballot, nor shall any person, except a member of the Board of Election, receive from any voter a ballot prepared by such voter, or examine such ballot, or solicit the voter to show the same. No person shall ask another at a polling place for whom he intends to vote. No voter shall receive a ballot from any other person than one of the ballot clerks; nor shall any other person than a ballot clerk deliver a ballot to such voter. No voter shall deliver to the Board of Election, or to any member thereof, any ballot other than that received from the ballot clerk. No voter shall place any mark upon his ballot by which it may be afterward identified as the one voted by him.

Sec. 1216. In all counties, and cities and counties, in this State, having a Registrar of Voters and a Board of Election Commissioners, the powers conferred and the duties imposed by this code upon the County Clerks and other officers, in relation to matters of election and polling places, shall be exercised and performed by such Registrar of Voters and Board of Election Commissioners, and all certificates of nomination required by this code to be made to County Clerks shall be made to the Registrar of Voters.

SEC. 33. This act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1892.

The Board of Supervisors meet in regular session on Monday.

Both parties have now nominated their county tickets and the rustling for election begins in earnest.

Independence was thronged with visitors this week. All parts of the county were well represented.

The premium list and awards will be published in our next issue. All orders for extra copies should be given immediately.

A sample sack of flour from Bell's Oak Creek mills gives entire satisfaction. The home product is just as good as the imported article.

T. C. Boland has so far recovered his health as to be able to return home to Keeler. He left Sunday morning in a comfortable conveyance.

On Thursday Sheriff Gorman arrested a Mexican for selling whisky to an Indian. He was brought before Justice Mulholland, plead guilty, and sentenced to a fine of fifty dollars.

There will be two sdecial races at the track Monday afternoon. One a trot for named horses, in which Golden and Nell are entered, and a match between Sagebrush and a sorrel horse that ran at Lone Pine on the 16th. Both races will be under the auspices of the Independence Track Association.

On one and a quarter acres of land on Sanger's farm at Alvord an Indian named Mose this season grew 4760 pounds of wheat. This is the amount sacked, and Mr. Sanger got half for rent.

There is not a word of complaint heard among the horsemen about the treatment they received at the late fair. All of them drew down money out of the purses, and the Judges treated all very fairly. Every warrant was promptly paid and there was enough money left over for a special race.

D. C. Hawes, the photographer, took a number of snap-shot views of the stock parade on Wednesday last He has taken proofs of the plates and the finished pictures will be excellent. All orders should be left at the studio immediately. As Mr. Hawes will remain here but a few days longer all parties desiring photographs should call immediately.

From 60 acres of land at Camp Independence Frevort & Madden have this season gathered the following crop. Wheat, barley and oats, 70 tons. Corn, 7 tons. Potatoes 3 tons. Total, 80 tons. In addition to this from thirty acres of land they have stacked fifty tons of hay, beside loose hay fed to stock. This could not be done without close attention and hard work, but it shows what industrious young men can do

Republican Convention

The Republican County Convention was called to order on Tuesday by Dr. J. D. Blair, Chairman of the Central Committee. Owing to a deadlock it took three days to nominate an Assemblyman, George Watterson being finally selected. John S. Gorman was nominated for Sheriff, J. N. Yandell for Clerk, W. T. Bunney for Treasurer, S. G. Sueden for District Attorney, I. J. Woodin for Coroner, Joseph Seely for County Surveyor, Wm. Watterson for Supervisor in the Second District, W. H. Uhlemeyer for Supervisor in the Third District, J. J. Stewart for Supervisor in the Fourth District, and A. J. Gould for Supervisor in the Fifth District. The business of the Convention was concluded and an adjournment taken on Thursday.

The Fair.

The various exhibits at the Pavilion were not so large as in former years, but in quality the average was as good. It has been a poor fruit season everywhere, and our district is no exception to to the general rule. But still a fine display of deciduous fruits was made, and visitors were warm in praise of the apples, pears, plums, peaches grapes and other fruits. Wheat, oats and barley were better than average quality, while roots and vegetables were perhaps not quite so good. The display of needle work showed a marked improvement over former displays, but the quantity shown was not so great. This is just as it should be, and proves that the aim is to improve in taste and skill; do less and do it better. It is curious that in painting the specimens shown were far more successful in the treatment of human or animal life and landscape than in the representation of fruit. Anyone familiar with the mountains would at once see that in the landscape pictures an earnest effort had been made to follow nature. The few pictures of human figures and animals also showed an intelligent effort to be true to nature. In this department the improvement in taste and skill is considerable. A very fine exhibit of the insect life of Owens Valley was made by Mr. W. Muth Rasmussen. The collection is large, and all the finely preserved, classified and arranged. This is a valuable collection and Mr. Muth Rasmussen deserves great credit for his skill and patience in making it. It would be a valuable object lesson at the public school, especially if the collector would give a brief history of the life and habits of the various kinds of insects.

In the stock department there is a great improvement over the exhibits of five or six years ago. The various classes of horses are now fully defined as in the most advanced fairs of the State, and the best strains of the different classes were here represented. This exhibit could not fail to convince anyone who keeps track of horse breeding in the State, that Inyo county is destined in the near future to have a State reputation for fine horses of all kinds.

The Races.

Taken as a whole the racing programme during last week was quite successful. The first race was an opening scramble of a mile for Indian ponies, won by a Round Valley horse. The second race was a half mile dash for two-year-olds, won by the Bronco colt. The 3:08 class was won in straight heats by Patsy, Golden second, Nell third, Gibraltar Jr. distanced. Wednesdays races were postponed till Saturday because of the weather. The first race Thursday was taken by Alvah B. winning the first and third heats. The horses were then called up for the 3 minute class, Patsey winning in straight heats. On Friday the free-for-all was decided by Fred B winning off the reel. Proxy won the first heat of the half-mile and repeat, Black Colt second; Bird flew the track on the stretch and was distanced. On Saturday Proxy won the second heat of the unfinished running race. Judge Kyle won the stallion trot in one heat. Sagebrush captured the last race of the fair by beating Hayseed in the mile dash. Following is is the summary:

GRANT'S HIDING PLACE.

It Was an Elegantly Furnished Room in the Stewart Mansion.

Now that the Stewart mansion, at Fifth avenue and Thirty-fourth street, is to be turned over to the Manhattan club for a club house, it has come out that there was one sacred room in the mansion. This room is on the second floor on the avenue side. It was originally furnished in 1872. The carpets for the room were made in Europe and fitted like a glove. The furniture was made in Paris and was of the most expensive kind.

There was a crystal chandelier in it whose prisms shone like diamonds. Marble statues from Italy and fine paintings were some of the costly adornments. The original outlay for furnishing the room was $50,000. Whom do you suppose it was so magnificently fitted up for? None other than Ulysses S. Grant, then in the first year of his first term as president of the United States.

It will be recalled that Gen. Grant sent A. T. Stewart's name to the senate for confirmation as secretary of the treasury. It was then discovered that the constitution would not permit an importer to take this place in the cabinet. But Mr. Stewart, appreciating the president's desire to honor him, became from that moment a warmer friend than ever of Gen. Grant. This room, in his palatial mansion, was furnished expressly for the use of the president. No matter how crowded the house might be, no person on earth except the general was to have the use of it even for a moment. A latch key to the mansion and a key to the room were sent to him, with the directions that whenever he wanted to come to New York and have a resting spell, this room would be at his disposal.

Gen. Grant, in the eight years that he was president, occupied it many more times than anybody except the Stewarts were aware of. Ostensibly he was at the Fifth Avenue hotel, but when the evening began to wane and when wearied with the day's callers, he would slip into a cab and be driven to his beautiful hiding place in the Stewart mansion.—Chatter.

The Latest Confections.

Cream strawberries are the newest and sweetest things in the candy market. The luscious red berry is first dipped in cold water and then plunged into a cream bath of rose, lemon, vanilla, orange or pistache flavor, the stem and little green leaf remaining. When dry the fruit bon bon is put into a little cap or bonnet of fluted paper and offered at the modest rate of $2 per pound. Another innovation of sweetness is the chocolate candle, a beautiful brown stick, three inches long, with a tuft of hard silk to represent the wick. Set in a papier mache candlestick of white, pink or blue the confection is at once a table ornament, a favor and a delicious morsel of dessert. There are chickens, eggs, pipes and tenpins of sweet chocolate that sell at ten cents each, and dainty little garden baskets of willow and grass filled with chocolate pastilles, frilled with lace paper and the cover tied down with a ribbon or wisp of straw. Judging from the display of sweetmeats and the various designs that are coming into the Broadway, Madison and Fifth avenue shops chocolate is the choice of fashion.—New York World.

Men with Several Offices.

A good many business men of this city have two, three and some four different offices. Sometimes these are four or five miles apart. There are well known lawyers here who have two offices and handle a wholly different class of business at each. Interested in big corporations, a live business man often necessarily has office hours at the corporation offices of the respective concerns. This not only enables him to discharge his mind of all other branches of his business while attending to one, but it enables those who have business with him to transact it without interfering with those who are bent on something else.

The mental strain thus put upon an active business man soon sends him to Florida or some more permanent resting place, so that it is doubtful if anything is gained by doubling up in this way. The matter is interesting, however, as illustrating the peculiar qualities of brain power and training.—New York Herald.

The Origin of Humbug.

Edward Nathaniel Lewer, who was all his life connected with the London Stock exchange, and died on May 7, 1876, aged eighty, once said in all seriousness that during the Napoleonic wars so much false news of politics and army movements came through Hamburg that anything that smacked of the incredible was received with the derisive phrase, "That's Hamburg," whence is derived by corruption the word "humbug." If the word does not date back beyond the period referred to, it seems a more reasonable derivation than the very labored one we get in Webster's Dictionary.—Notes and Queries.

Jerked Beef.

A remarkable instance of the tendency to change and even mutilate a word in order to give it a familiar and suggestive appearance is found in the expression "jerked beef," which is a ready English substitute for "charqui," the Peruvian word for meat cooked in smoke, or "jerked." Such a liberty taken with a foreign word may readily be pardoned when so happy in result, but the necessity for changing "lustrine," a French word for silk, into "lutestring" may be questioned, seeing we have many words, such as "luster" and "lustrous," from the same root. But there is no accounting for fancies.—Chambers' Journal.

THE PANSY'S FATE.

Once on a time a pansy grew
Close by a farmer's door;
It drank the sunshine and the dew—
What could it wish for more?
The farmers' children at their play
Watched it with pleasure day by day.

"How beautiful and sweet!" they cried,
"It is our guest, you see."
But to itself the pansy sighed:
"I would much rather be
A dweller in some mansion grand,
More admiration I'd command."

Now so it happened. Fate decreed
It should be plucked; and soon
'Twas in a mansion grand, indeed,
Where other flow'rs did bloom—
Flow'rs of such rare hue and grace,
The pansy felt quite out of place.

Great velvet roses, lilies fair
And flow'rs of every land,
Whose fragrance perfumed all the air
Within that mansion grand;
And guests in admiration vied—
But no'er the pansy once espied.

Too late this little flow'ret saw
What foolish pride had done;
Oh! to be in the field once more,
And drink the dew and sun,
Where e'en the children, day by day,
Stopped and caressed it while at play!

Some lives just like this little plant,
Because of humble spheres
In which they dwell, are discontent,
And waste vain sighs and tears,
Who, were they where they long to be,
Would find but pain and misery.

—Philadelphia Times.

THE QUEEN WINS.

The Bastile had not yet fallen. The thoughtless youth of the French aristocracy still danced through the salons of the royal castles. Maurepas still reigned prime minister—that same friend of humanity who made the compassionate decision concerning the people's welfare: "Why build hospitals? Can not the people die on the roads if they like?"

This evening Maurepas had the honor of being permitted to lead the beautiful Marie Antoinette to the card table, but, complaining of a severe headache as they passed through the salon, the good queen excused him from further attendance that the pain might not be increased. As he was hastening back through the ante-chamber to the dancing hall, where the king was taking his coffee, he perceived beneath the gobelin tapestry of the famous Louvois window a man in citizen's dress, who regarded him expectantly, and bowed low before him.

"It is all right, Dumonet," whispered the asthmatic old man. "This evening his majesty will taste of it." And he trilled out one of his hundred madrigals, which, in truth, were tame enough, but which his flatterers found very witty. In the royal apartment he saw just then Louis XVI take from a sugar basin two delicately broken lumps of sugar and sweeten his coffee with them. As the king took a mouthful of the coffee the ministerial friend of his people approached and asked respectfully:

"How does your majesty find the coffee this evening?"

"As usual, excellent."

"The best Mocha is always upon your majesty's table, but does the sugar sufficiently moderate the bitterness of the coffee?"

Louis XVI was sensitive to mockery and irony even to timidity; therefore he said inquiringly:

"What do you mean by that?"

Maurepas laughed. "Your majesty, permit me one question. How much, sire, do you think these two pieces of sugar cost?" The king looked uneasy.

"Do you wish to test my mathematical ability?" Maurepas continued to laugh.

"Well, then, I will answer your problem: Sugar costs the people about eighty cents a pound. If I reckon eighty pieces to the pound it makes one sou for each piece; but since to me as king everything is quadrupled, I have this evening consumed eight sous' worth of sugar."

"This sugar is the gift of one of your subjects, who counts himself happy that it is considered worthy of a place on your majesty's table; therefore it costs you nothing, sire, but the giver values every piece at a full louis d'or."

"You are beside yourself, M. de Maurepas. Eighty louis d'or for a pound of sugar! At that rate I should be compelled to sell Rambouillet to supply my brother with sugar for a year, for you know he takes a handful to every cup. But explain to me your jest."

"In a moment, your majesty." And he took the sugar basin and emptied the contents upon the marble table and counted the pieces. "Forty-three, with the ones used forty-five, worth 1,080 francs; but look, your majesty, what dazzling whiteness, and how light it is, and how sweet, without any bitter aftertaste."

"Come now," said Louis, interrupting his babble, "is sugar ever bitter?"

"And your majesty will never guess from what this sugar is made."

The king was not without some knowledge of chemistry, therefore answered hesitatingly:

"Naturally from the sugar cane."

"Pardon me, your majesty, it is beet root sugar."

"Beet root? What is beet root?"

The Duchess of Chartreuse, who was listening, drew near and said: "Beets, sire, are little red leaves, of which my servants make salad."

M. de Maurepas cut off her explanation with a malicious laugh. "Beets are edible roots, which people as well as cattle find palatable, and now they have been found to yield sugar."

Respect kept the brilliant company out of hearing distance, and they watched eagerly the strange proceedings. All this examining, weighing and counting of the sugar tossed up the court gossip among them like a bright soap bubble. Then it was whispered: "The king has been poisoned by a cup of coffee."

"Heaven forbid! And we have drank the same coffee!"

"No, not the coffee; it was the sugar."

"Some one go tell the queen!"

So whispered, murmured and chattered the excluded circle.

Marie Antoinette [illegible] with the Duchess of Polignac, her tenderly loving friend, at cards.

"What ails you, Agatha?" asked she kindly, as the favorite sighed.

Agatha de Polignac raised her roguish brown head and said, saucily, "Three millions, my adored queen!"

"Sigh not, my angel; I will beg Louis to grant them to you. We owe it to the great families."

The designing princess lifted the queen's lace sleeve to her red lips, whispered gratefully, "Oh, that I might be permitted to die for my beloved queen!"

"Live for me, you dear child, and, my word for it, I will provide the three millions for which you will be willing to live."

At this moment a courtier approached and broke to them the dreadful tidings:

"His majesty has been poisoned by M. de Maurepas with sugar."

A moment later the queen, white to the very lips, stood beside her husband.

"For heaven's sake, Louis," cried she, in her distress, unmindful of all ceremony.

"What is the matter, my queen?" asked Louis, in the gentle way he had never abandoned toward his beloved wife. "What brought you to me? You are very pale." He seized a glass of water, poured some of the newly discovered sugar in it and handed her the glass.

"Drink. It is too warm in the salon, and the company is too exciting. This sugar water will refresh you."

The queen cast a penetrating glance at Maurepas, who now fully understood what he had only half heard. With a quick movement he took the glass from the king's hand and drained it at a draught.

Red with anger, the king demanded an explanation of this insolence, but Marie Antoinette offered the minister her hand and was about to explain to the king, when suddenly the broad leaves of the great door flew open and the palace guard led in a man quite up to the feet of the king. The terrified appearance of the prisoner, his coarse coat, the brown waistcoat and pantaloons, the broad, clumsy shoes with leaden buckles, contrasted strangely with the gay silken attire, the gilded hangings, the laces and diamonds of the surroundings.

"What does this mean?" asked the king, astonished.

"Permit me, your majesty, to bring this man before you who understands how to make sugar out of vegetables. Dumonet is trying to ruin our colonies and make them useless to us. This is the discoverer of beet sugar."

"Discoverer? No, that honor does not belong to me," exclaimed the Chemist Dumonet. "It was a learned major, Serre, who, during the regency, deceived by the beautiful red color the beet gives out in cooking, fancied he could make red wine out of it. Instead of the desired wine he found the bottom of his retort covered with fine sugar. At that time France was rich in colonies on the Mississippi, therefore no one paid any heed to the discovery. Nor was it fully developed. I learned abroad, in Prussia, new improvements, expended my small possessions to test it, and I hope I have succeeded."

"It is not a poison, then?" cried Marie Antoinette, meaningly. The king for the first time understood what had preceded, and discovered also that the chemist was bound. At a sign the bond was cut and the guard left the room without Dumonet.

Meanwhile the queen bravely took a piece of sugar in her lovely mouth. That was the signal for the young courtiers to rush upon the before distrusted sugar, vying with each other to exhibit their courage, their devotion, through this harmless poison.

"Gently, my ladies, my lords!" cried Maurepas; "every little piece of that sugar cost a golden louis."

"But the sugar is not one bit better than our ordinary sugar," remonstrated the queen, "and it is only a curiosity leading to ruin."

Dumonet dropped on one knee. "Your majesty is in a measure correct. Experimenting in a small way, at the same expense as a great trade, naturally makes this sample excessively dear; but if your majesty will advance me two millions for the development of larger facilities for the manufacture, I shall be able to furnish a pound of sugar for ten sous instead of four francs."

The king recoiled involuntarily, and Marie Antoinette grasped her famous necklace, which had cost two millions, as if the plain man before her had been a robber. Her disapproving glance gave direction to the king's answer.

"Dr. Dumonet, I honor enterprise: accept this snuff box as a recognition of it. But two millions the state cannot possibly lend you. That is too much money for the exhausted exchequer."

Dumonet received the gift respectfully. "Sire, sooner or later my enterprise will find the money."

The whole, shallow, subservient swarms of courtierlings cried out an excited echo to the royal words:

"Two millions for sugar! Two millions! The man should be in a mad house! How can any one be so shameless? Just as if it were not all the same whether one pays ten sous or four francs for a pound of sugar. And if any can't pay it let him take his food unsweetened. What has the government to do with that?"

And so Dumonet was dismissed. He had only needed a million; the second was the price demanded by the minister for the introduction. This evening Maurepas composed the only good verse of his life, which, translated, runs somewhat thus:

Although his life to sweeten
Is all his royal care,
Two million francs for sugar
The king finds rather dear.

The furor which his wit created at the court consoled him somewhat for the lost million, and was it not all the same whether at his death there should be a deficit of one paltry million more or less? He left, in fact, a round ten millions in debts. It was a noble sum; nine would not have sounded so impressive.

Dumonet migrated to Belgium, where he found more appreciation, and lived safe and respected while the revolution storm swept over his unhappy fatherland. "Who laughs last," etc. * * *

"And my queen would have died with me?" asked Louis, as he accompanied her to their chamber that night. She was so beautiful, so dainty; in her wonderful eyes beamed the reflection of loving tears. The next morning the king granted 3,500,000 out of the state coffers to the "unfortunate" Duchess of Polignac.—Translated from the French for The St. Paul Globe.

Gold Nuggets in a Meteoric Stone.

A meteor fell on the larger of the two Comanche peaks recently. It came on an incline of about 45 degs. and struck the edge of the peak, where the bowlders hung over the side of the mountain. It came from the south. Its descent was very bright and rapid, fairly illuminating the peak as it fell. It knocked off large stones, which went rolling down the mountain, followed by the celestial visitor, barely missing Maj. Torre's house at the foot of the mountain. The meteor will weigh several tons. Fragments brought in by those who went to see it contains nuggets of what is believed to be gold.—St. Louis Republic.

The large stone church of the Methodists at Johnstown, Pa., which cost over $100,000, and which withstood the recent flood, has been thoroughly refitted and was reopened by a great multitude.

The British ironclad Vulcan, which is being built now, is having put in a rudder weighing twenty-two tons, the largest ever put on a British vessel.

A REMARKABLE LETTER.

A Prominent Professional Man's Extraordinary Statement.

(N. Y. Sun)

To the Editor. SIR.—As my name and face have appeared in your paper and the public prints lately, and as many of my professional brethren are wondering at it, I feel it only just that I should make an explanation. The statement published over my name was made ten years ago, after long and mature investigation, and I have never changed my mind as to the fact then stated. At that time I said, as a physician, that I believed Warner's Safe Cure was the best of all known preparations for the troubles it was advocated to cure, and I say so still. I know it is considered the proper thing for the medical profession to decry proprietary and other advertised articles; but why should they do so? As the late Dr. J. G. Holland, writing over his own name in Scribner's Monthly, said:

"It is a fact that many of the best proprietary medicines of the day are more successful than many physicians, and most of them were first discovered or used in actual medical practice; when, however, any person knowing their virtue and forseeing their popularity secures and advertises them, in the opinion of the bigoted all virtue went out of them."

Dr. Holland was an educated physician, an unprejudiced observer, and he spoke from a broad and unusual experience. Proprietary medicines should not be decried. The evidences of their value are overwhelming. I have seen patients recover from gravel, inflammation of the bladder, and Bright's disease after using Warner's Safe Cure, even when all other treatment had failed.

I make this frank and outspoken statement in the interests of humanity and because I know it to be true. I trust for the same reason you will give it to the public. Respectfully,

R. A. GUNN.

Sarah's Buffalo Hunt.

"You know that during Sarah Bernhardt's recent tour through the south she had a mania for hunting," said Phil Greenwall, of Fort Worth, Tex., at the Lindell. "She played in my house at Fort Worth. She got into town on Sunday morning, and as she had nothing to do until Monday night I suggested that she take her gun and go out in the country for a spin. The suggestion delighted her, but the only kind of game she wanted was buffalo. I told George Loving, a cattleman, of the actress' thirst for buffalo blood, and though of course there are none within 1,000 miles of Fort Worth, Loving declared that he would improvise a buffalo for the divine Sarah's benefit. I accompanied her and Abbey to a prairie twelve miles west of town, where, by appointment, I was to meet Loving and the buffalo.

"Loving had scared up a little woolly bull with short crumpled horns, and when the Frenchwoman saw the hideous animal, which had been whipped into fury by Loving's quirt when he saw us coming, I thought she would go wild. The bull bellowed, pawed the earth, and throwing his tail straight into the air turned from us and fled. Abbey stood transfixed and Bernhardt was screaming like a maniac.

"Finally she recovered herself sufficiently to take aim and blaze away at the supposed buffalo. The bull fell to his haunches with a bullet through his carcass, and then we all took a shot at him until he was dead. Some member of the company was mean enough to tell Mme. Bernhardt how we had fooled her with the common bull, that there were no buffalo in Texas at all, and she was so disappointed that she burst into a flood of tears. We all felt so bad about it that we didn't allow the papers to write it up, but it is too good to keep longer."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Columbus Was Not the First.

It was at Lisbon that Columbus first planned his voyage. But long before, when Lisbon was a flourishing Arab city, intelligent and splendid, Edrisi relates that an expedition was sent out from its port to explore the dark and unknown ocean. The commanders were brothers known as the Almagrurins, or the Wandering brothers. They must have set sail before the year 1150. They crossed the Atlantic, it is said, visited unknown islands and discovered new lands. After a weary voyage of many months they returned in safety. A street was named after them in Moorish Lisbon, called the street of the Almagrurins.

Possibly the attempt might have been renewed, and a Moorish city might have sprung up in Cuba or Hispaniola, at Philadelphia or New York. But soon the conquering Christians took Lisbon and checked its advance in knowledge. For many centuries it was given up to war and chivalry. At length it revived the Moorish instincts of trade and commerce. Lisbon became the center of discovery, and Columbus learned in its traditions perhaps the story of the Almagrurins.—Eugene Lawrence in Harper's.

A Clever Rooster.

George Eliot once wrote that she knew no such medicine for tired nerves as watching the movements of a flock of ducks. Chickens are just as entertaining if they are observed, and if the occupation seems trivial it may with justice and propriety be dignified as the study of natural history. Chickens have as marked individuality as humans. Captain Jinks was the son of his mother and she a widow. He early developed spurs that were a terror to the chicken yard. His amusement was to go about kicking out sideward and sticking the shins of the other chickens and particularly at feeding time.

For this reason the lady who thought she controlled this chicken yard used to stand guard and keep him off. Once she missed her footing and fell prone, dish in hand. Before she could recover herself Captain Jinks ran up in front of her prostrate face and crowed in triumph. When the hour came for his mother's egg laying he always went to nest with her, and when the deed was accomplished crowed as lustily as if it had been his act.—New York Evening Sun.

THE TEMPTATION

To go out of doors in rough weather is not strong, but we are, many of us, compelled to face rough weather frequently. Diseases which arise from a chill are peculiar to no season of the year. This is true, therefore there should be in the closet of every household—what? Not an unmedicated stimulant, absolutely devoid of anything but an excitive action, but a tonic combining, in the effective form of an invigorant and an alterative, the quality of defence against changes of weather. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has three or four properties that no other article of its class possesses. Not only does it relieve the complaints which it eventually cures, it fortifies the system against the bad effects of changes of temperature, fatally and too often shown in the deadly form of "la grippe;" it produces a radical change in the weakened condition of a system peculiarly liable to be attacked by it, and it tends to provide against the danger resulting from an impoverished condition of the blood and a disordered state of the liver or bowels.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address, F. J. LOST IN NEW YORK BAY.

It was just after New Year's day, about twenty-four years ago, and New York city was then full of seafaring men, who had served in the volunteer navy, and many of whom had even carried muskets in the army.

American shipping had been, so to speak, run off the high seas, and even the packet ships—that is, many of them—flew the English flag, although they were owned in New York as much as in Liverpool.

Sailor Town, as the Fourth and part of the Seventh wards of New York were styled then, was full of sailors' boarding houses, many of them places of dreadful repute, wherein Jack was taken to live on his return from sea, fleeced and shanghaied—that is, placed insensible on board of an outward bound ship, without any money and with very little wardrobe in his canvas bag.

There were a few, a very few, reputable sailors' boarding houses there, and the safest place for a mariner ashore was assuredly the Sailors' Home, at No. 190 Cherry street, which had been conducted on the most excellent plan, under the admirable guidance of Capts. Walford and Richardson, who were connected with the directorate of the Seaman's Savings bank.

The "Home" at the time of which I speak was full of sailors, some of whom were in arrears in their board and most of whom were down to their last dollar.

Nevertheless they were well treated, for they were, as a rule, sober men, desirous of seeking employment and willing to go to sea if they could get a ship.

Among the boarders were three men, Isaac Reed, an elderly Englishman who had fought the Merrimac in the first Monitor; Harry Elliott, a curly headed lad from Newburyport, Mass., who had just felt that he could "ship" as an able seaman, for he had turned 21, and had been seven years a mariner; and the third was a Spaniard named Antonio, who had sailed out of the United States so long that he was very jealous of his citizenship and took great care of an old American "protection" — a document similar to that with which all foreign-born seamen in American vessels were furnished to protect them from being held for military or naval service in their own countries in Europe when they went thither from American ports.

These three men were types of the seamen of that day. They had been filled with the importance of the victories gained by Farragut, and as they hailed from the "States" themselves, were very anxious to obtain berths together, on board of an American ship if possible, or an English one if it must be.

Day after day they had struggled from shipping office to shipping office along South street in quest of employment. And day after day they returned to the Sailors' Home at No. 190 dejected and disappointed.

They had been ashore for more than three months, all their money was gone and they were gradually getting deeper and deeper in debt to the managers of the Home, who, it must be noted, were very lenient with worthy men.

Night after night the three poor fellows sat together in the smoking room conversing in low tones about their wanderings and the morrow's prospects, and night after night they went into prayers and listened to the sweet voices of the young ladies of the managers' families singing the good old fashioned penny-royal tunes that Downeasters loved to hear.

At last, about the latter end of January, the three sailors sallied forth one morning determined to take anything that might present itself, and they crossed over to Brooklyn, where a lot of English vessels were moored, almost ready for sea, in the Atlantic dock basin.

They boarded a brig called the Elliott, because the name attracted Harry Elliott's attention, and he said: "Men, this looks like luck. She's a juicer, but that makes no difference. Her name's the same as mine. Who knows but there may be a berth for one or more of us on her?"

Over the side went the three sailors, and they spoke to the mate, a Scotchman, and learned from him that the captain was going to ship a crew the very next day, as the brig was ready for sea. While the lads were conversing with the mate, the captain came down the quay and over the gangway. The work of introduction and explanation did not take long, and the captain being pleased that these sailors boarded at the "Home" and could not therefore be "packet rats"—a class of voyageur much feared by all reputable skippers because of their habits and lack of seamanship—bade them come up to the British consul, No. 15 Broadway, the next day and sign articles.

The three seamen returned to the "Home" that night with light hearts and a prospect of half a month's advance apiece, which would enable them to pay a part, at least, of their overdue board bills and save their good names with the kind managers.

To make a long story short, the three men, Reed, Elliott and Antonio, were shipped, and attended the last prayer meeting at the Sailors' Home on Feb. 4, as they were to haul the brig out and sail on the morrow.

The old man and his mates thanked the good lady superintendent of the "Home," after prayers that night, for her kindness to them, and they promised to bring her a lot of "curios" when they returned.

"And should we not return, we will expect to meet you on the other side sometime. But if our lives are spared, you will see us here again, and we will not forget the curios."

There was a sad and wistful look in the faces of the men as they left the Home, though for a long time they had been looking forward to an engagement to sail. Did they feel a foreboding that their voyage might not end happily?

No one can tell.

Next morning the brig Elliott was hauled out below Buttermilk channel and towed down through the Narrows, while the crew rigged out her jibboom, set up her topmasts and bent her sails.

Before she reached Fort Wadsworth the crew were able to make sail, which they did not do until the vessel got over the bar and just outside the "station boat," as the pilot boat which waits to receive pilots from outward bound vessels is called.

The tugboat had left, sail had been made on the brig, and she began to gather way under a heavy northerly breeze.

The weather at this time, about 4 p. m., looked very unpropitious and lowering, and the brig had hove to for the yawl from the station boat to take the pilot off when, as the main topsail was flat back against the mast, the forward yards braced the other way, a squall from north-northeast struck the vessel and nearly threw her on her beam ends.

There was no time to be lost. She was rapidly gathering sternway, and was in imminent danger.

The pilot forgot his station boat in the immediate peril, shouted to the man at the wheel to shift his helm so as to bring the brig around on her keel, and then gave the orders to swing the mainyard, lower the topsail yards down on the caps, haul out the reef tackles, to haul up the mainsail and foresail, run down the jib and clew down the head of the spanker so as to get the brig under easy working sail.

She careened over until her lee scuppers were under water, and the wind blew so hard that the topsails would not run down, nor the jib obey the force upon the downhaul.

In a few minutes the whole face of nature had changed. A blinding snow storm obscured the Jersey shore outside the Hook as completely as a fog, and vessels to windward were only dimly outlined through the biting flakes.

Where had the pilot boat gone?

Nobody on board the brig had stopped to ask, for night was setting down rapidly on the waters and the storm was raging with all its might, the wind veering and varying every half hour between north and east-northeast, so that the brig, which had not got into "shipshape," with its spare spars, water casks and chain cable loose on deck, adding to the difficulties of the situation and the momentarily increasing dangers, was almost unmanageable.

The crew, though good seamen, no doubt, with the exception of the three men from the Sailors' Home, did not know each other, and, naturally, did not work well together, and the officers had no knowledge of the capacities of their men, so that they could not order them about with surety.

"Lay aloft and double reef the foretopsail," shouted the Scotch captain, acting as first officer for the pilot, who had now taken the wheel, fearful lest the brig should go on the shore under her lee, over which the rollers were thundering and leaping scarcely a cable's length away.

As this order was given another squall struck the brig, and she heeled over as if she would certainly capsize. But the pilot swept her to windward, shivered her foreyard and brought her up shaking and trembling like a scared bird in the trough of the sea, while all hands, cook, captain, boys and steward, tried to clew down the topsail yards, haul out the reef tackles, and spill the wind out of the sails by hauling taut the buntlines.

"Up, now, men," shouted the captain, "and reef the maintopsail. You can manage that easiest. Goosewing the foretopsail while it is aback," he shouted to the second mate, "and haul the head of the spanker out to keep her steady."

Efforts, with more or less success, were made to obey all these orders. But the foretopsail split as soon as the sheet was started, and the jib, which could not be pulled down the stay, was in ribbons.

Still the foretopmast staysail, the spanker and the maintopsail held on, while the brig plunged and labored and snorted in the sea like a terrified horse.

The men mounted to the topsail yard. The first man outside the lift to the "weather reef earring was Antonio.

"Luff up, and shake her! Light out to windward!" he shouted to the deck and to the men inside him on the yard. Even as he spoke the brig "broached to," the heavy sail flapped, and, as it filled forward again with the gale, it tore Antonio from the yard as he held on to the leach and hurled him far ahead into the sea. He disappeared forever.

His requiem was the faint alarm, "Man overboard!" unheard on deck, and the thunderous explosion of the topsail itself, which was blown clean out of the bolt ropes by another squall which struck the now seemingly doomed vessel.

"Come down from aloft! Come down!" shrieked the captain and pilot to the unfortunate men on the topsail yard, which was being whipped and lashed by the strips of the torn canvas of the bursted sail.

The poor fellows tried to do so. Those from the weather side succeeded. Only one of those on the lee yardarm reached the deck in safety. Two had been cut and slashed by the strips of wet, frozen canvas and literally beaten off the yard into the dark, seething waters careering to the Jersey beach a few hundred yards away.

These two were Elliott and Reed!

Before 10 o'clock that night the wind went down. Next morning the brig cast anchor in the Horseshoe.

But the three sailors who two nights before had prayed with, parted and promised to return with many curios for the superindendent's wife of the Sailors' Home, No. 98 Cherry street, lay fathoms deep beneath the waters of the lower bay, drowned in that one day's cruise of the Elliott.—R. BONE TO MARBLE.

A Man's Body is Changed by Heat into Stone Instead of Ashes.

A STRANGE YARN FROM MISSOURI.

A Corpse Subjected to the Fire of a Lime Kiln Four Days Becomes a Perfect Marble Statue.

Great interest is manifested at Cassville, Mo., over a remarkable circumstance which has just come to light. It happened on Off Davis near Buzzard Roost. When old man Clayback came out of the late war he was a physical wreck, but like many others of the state militia was too independent to ask for a pension, even if he could have secured one, and made his living in the best way he could until his six boys and seven girls got old enough to help him.

About five years ago the old man began to get very bad with rheumatism, as he thought, and although he used the entire crop of spicewood berries which grew on the creek, he continued to get worse. Two years ago he got so stiff as to be confined to his home and called in a physician, who, after carefully diagnosing the case, gave as his opinion that instead of rheumatism ailing the man it was a true case of ossification. Nothing could be done, and he advised his patient to make ready for the end, although he might live for some time. The old man took the doctor's advice and did not seem to have any fears of death, but dreaded the yawning grave and the cold, clammy earth. To make his thoughts more pleasant and relieve him of his only terror, a friend suggested cremation as an avenue of escape from the grave, a plan which he hailed with joy, and gave directions accordingly.

The disease continued, complete ossification took place and the man died. How to carry out the wishes of the deceased at first troubled the bereaved family, until they learned that Stephen Symphony was burning lime in his kiln, which had been fired three days and was reaching a white heat. Desiring to save the ashes they procured a large evaporating pan belonging to a molasses mill. Placing the remains in this, they carefully shoved the whole into the kiln, which was an open one on top, and being built in the side of the hill, was easily accessible. The sorrowing family gathered around, expecting the rapid incineration and disintegration of the departed. In a few minutes the winding sheet was gone and the naked body was exposed to the intense heat. From the ears, nostrils and mouth came jets of steam, broken at first, then solid, and in an hour had ceased, but no change was perceivable in the silent form.

More wood was fed to the glowing furnace to make the vigil of the bereaved briefer, but still no change. More wood was pitched in and hotter still the fire raged. Hour after hour passed, and from a glowing red to an opaque white the body turned, while on the countenance seemed to rest an expression of infinite peace and satisfaction. So three days wore away, and the fire must be drawn or the lime spoiled. Twenty-four hours later, by means of grappling hooks, the pan and body were raised, and to the surprise of every one the body was still intact and glowing.

A greater and more pleasant surprise, however, awaited the family, for when the body became cold it was ascertained that the intense heat, acting upon the ossified body, had changed it to perfect marble, a little lighter in color than the natural body, but retaining its natural shape, except on the back, which is a little flattened. The only defects are where there was a bullet wound and in the left foot, which is broken in two. In 1870 Mr. Clayback cut his foot very severely, splitting it between the second and third toes, and following this wound a rupture appeared which caused the loss as above stated. Where a small blood vessel had burst in his leg there appeared a delicate tracing of the circulation. The family are having a pedestal cut out of native limestone and will mount the "statue," but at present they are using a black gum block for the purpose.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Prince Hatzfeldt's Nemesis.

Prince and Princess Hatzfeldt, who are traveling about on a tour in Europe, are being followed from city to city by a mysterious French beauty of the keen Parisian stamp.

This woman has only presented herself once to the princess in person, but both the prince and princess are in constant receipt of abusive letters and demands for money under threat of some unknown exposure. These threats are principally directed against the prince, who has yet taken no steps to prevent the annoyance.

Although their movements are persistently followed by this solitary Nemesis, she is not usually seen by them, and their notification of her presence with them en voyage is always by post.—New York Society Review.

Given Due Credit.

A gentleman who has just returned from France says that the American ambulances, which were introduced into Paris a year or two ago, are now one of the recognized institutions of the French capital. People stand and cheer as they go up along the street, and ambulance drills are given to all distinguished foreigners. The French government has given full credit to America for the ideas which at present prevail on the subject, and indeed the words "American Ambulance" appear on the sides of the hospital wagons. They have not quite reached the proficiency of our own ambulance service, but they have made a very good beginning.—Paris Letter.

HE WAS "PRIVATE JOE."

Now He Has Just Been Renominated for Governor of Illinois.

The career of "Private Joe" Fifer, recently renominated by the Republicans of Illinois for governor, would furnish the material for an entertaining novel. He was born in Staunton, Va., of German parentage. His father was a bricklayer, and being very poor moved to Missouri in the hope of bettering his condition. In this he was disappointed, and his wife dying he returned to Virginia. Ill fortune continued to pursue him, and once more he went west with his family, settling in Dry Grove township, McLean county, Ills., where he opened a brickyard. His son Joseph visited Bloomington, heard a lawyer make a speech, and returned to his humble home and calling firmly resolved that he would one day become an attorney.

GOVERNOR J. W. FIFER.

The war began about this time, and Joseph and his brother George walked barefooted to Bloomington and there enlisted as privates. This explains why Candidate Fifer in 1888 was referred to as "the Barefoot Boy of Bloomington." The brothers saw much active service, and one day before Jackson, Miss., when the list of those mortally wounded was made up the name of Joseph Fifer appeared on it. His fine constitution enabled him to pull through, and long before he had entirely recovered he was again at the front doing such duty as his condition permitted. He served several months beyond the term of his enlistment, and when the war closed he returned to Illinois with $155, no education and the still strong desire to become a great lawyer. He and his brother lived in a room and attended the Wesleyan university. Every Friday afternoon "Private Joe" was wont to set out for a tract of land the timber on which he had bought, and managed to eke out a living by wood-chopping.

He was graduated in 1868, and the following year his ambition was gratified to the extent that he became a practicing lawyer at Bloomington. In 1872 he was elected corporation counsel, and a year later he became state attorney. In 1884 he went to the state senate. In 1888, when the Republicans were casting about for a candidate for governor, the title "Private Joe" was accidentally applied to him, and as he had but a short time before made himself exceedingly popular with the G. A. R. men by a pension controversy with General Black, his name aroused great enthusiasm in the state convention, and he was nominated and elected. In appearance Fifer is more like a minister than a statesman. Mrs. Fifer was a Miss Gertrude Lewis, the daughter of a Bloomington lumber dealer. The governor has two children—Herman, aged seventeen, and Florence, aged fourteen.

The Three Hypnotic Conditions.

In speaking of the three phases of hypnotism, a New York scientist said the other day:

"The cataleptic is an absolute automaton without any true consciousness, purpose, or volition. The lethargic is simply a person under spiritual chloroform. The somnambulist has a personality different from his own real self. He obeys it or else the will of the operator. When he recovers consciousness he never remembers what has happened. These states are not as distinct in practice as in theory. They pass one into another imperceptibly. It is also found that by the use of various expedients one stage can be changed immediately to another. Oddest of all, it is possible to change the stage as to one-half of the body without affecting that of the other. Thus Professor Charcot caused a somnambulist to begin taking a bath and as the ablution started produced a lethargic condition of the right half of the body. The left half kept on working as if nothing had happened."

Important, if True.

According to the Indianapolis Journal Mrs. Stephen Clark, living near Heltonsville, Ind., has been seeing strange lights among the maple trees near her house, and recently a boy who was doing work for her in digging away some rocks at the foot of these trees is reported to have dug up about $4,000 in greenbacks, together with some counterfeiting tools and a revolver belonging to her husband, who was hanged by a mob fifteen years ago for murder. The people had found in a cave the corpses of five men and a woman, together with counterfeiting tools, and feeling sure that Clark was the murderer, and as he was known to be a desperate character he was lynched. The greenbacks found are said to be genuine.

St. Paul's New Mayor.

Colonel Frederick P. Wright, recently elected mayor of St. Paul, is thirty-eight years of age. His victory is the more notable because this is but the second time in its history that the city has been carried by the Republicans, and also because Colonel Wright's opponent was Mr. Robert A. Smith, a most popular politician, who has been mayor for several terms. The new mayor was born in Pittsburg, and when about eighteen years old became a resident of the city which he has now been called upon to govern. He secured a position with a business firm of which he is now the senior member. Colonel Wright had not, up to the time of his nomination as mayor, been actively identified with politics, although he has always been a warm Republican. He has long taken a great interest in the welfare of the national guard, of Minnesota, and has done much toward building up and improving that organization.

ELECTRIC METERS.

Method of Measuring the Amount of Electricity Used by Consumers.

RESULT OF EDISON'S INGENUITY.

A Plain and Easily Comprehended Description of a Very Interesting Process.

Probably few people when turning on a water faucet in their house, or playing a hose in their garden, ever realize that the laws controlling the flow of water have a great similarity to those governing the subtler fluid, electricity; and whether they turn on a faucet or an electric light certain conditions exist and certain actions follow which are analogous.

The water in the faucet is under a certain pressure, and an amount of water flows out of the faucet dependent upon this pressure and upon the size of the faucet.

An electric current in a wire is under a certain pressure, and an amount of current flows through the wire dependent upon the pressure and upon the size of the wire.

In a garden hose, water under good pressure, if allowed to escape through a small nozzle, will be forced a considerable distance. In an incandescent lamp, current under a fair pressure is allowed to escape through the minute filament of the lamp, heats the filament to incandescence and throws out beams of light. Not that electricity is a fluid in the sense that water is, or that there is any actual transference of matter when current passes through a wire, as there is when water flows through a pipe; but there is a close analogy between the laws governing the two, and it is just as easy and as simple to predict the actions of one within a certain range of conditions as it is of the other.

The great trouble has been that electricians have thrown a veil of mystery over their calling by naming all their units after French and German celebrities. This has led to no end of confusion. Volts, amperes, ohms, watts, joules and coulombs are becoming common words in print in these days of great electrical activity, but they express about as much meaning to the average person as a Chinese laundryman's sign.

Pounds, quarts and the rest of our everyday units of measurement are familiar to every school child; so will volts and amperes be some day when the American people are better acquainted with the doings of these distinguished foreigners and the units their names now represent.

Alexander Volta was a professor of physics in Pavia who accomplished a great deal in a scientific way; consequently electricians not only erected a marble tablet to his memory, but agreed to name the electrical pound per square foot after him, and so the unit of electrical pressure is the volt. Similarly we are compelled to write our electrical gallon with an accent over the last syllable of ampere. Ohm has had his name used as the unit of electrical resistance ever since he gave to the world his celebrated law on the flow of current. Ohm said that the amount of current going through a copper wire was proportioned to the pressure under which this current worked and to the size of the wire.

This is not very different from what anybody's common sense would see was true of water flowing through a hose. The amount of water is of course proportional to the pressure under which it works and to the size of the hose. Ohm made a great reputation on this discovery, and since his time other people have been finding out that what is true of water is also analogously true of electricity. Look at an electric road! A wire carrying current is stretched through the air and all a man has to do to move a car containing 100 people along a street is to connect the car machinery with the wire by a pole.

If the wire was a pipe carrying water under a considerable pressure and this pipe could be connected to the car by a movable hose, a water motor would make the car move just as the electric motor does, and moreover, the water would flow through the pipe, and the hose, and the motor to the ground, falling from a considerable pressure to zero pressure just as the current flows through the wire, and the trolley arm and the motor to the ground falling from 500 volts pressure to zero pressure or potential as it may be called, which is the potential of the earth just as the zero potential of water is the sea level. Moreover, as a certain number of gallons of water will flow through the pipe, the hose and the motor, dependent upon the size of the pipe, the hose, and the motor and the pressure of the water, so will a certain number of amperes of current flow through the trolley wire, the trolley arm and the motor winding dependent upon the size of the wire in them all and the electrical pressure of the current.

A line of electric arc lights are made to burn by inserting them one after the other in series in a line carrying current of a high pressure, and the passage of the current through each light uses up a certain percentage of this pressure just as a series of water wheels may be introduced in a brook or a river where each wheel will similarly use up a certain amount of the pressure of the running water.

Incandescent lights are burned without affecting the pressure in two wires run parallel to each other by connecting the two terminals of each lamp to the wires and allowing the current to pass through their filaments, just as two water pipes running parallel to each other may be punctured with small holes wherever it is desired to have the currents of water escape. In neither case will the pressure be diminished at any point, except by an inconsiderable amount due to friction, though a large quantity of water or electric fluid will be used.

A man's body offers a resistance to the passage of an electric current dependent upon the muscular and nerve fibers of the body, the thickness of his skin and the conditions under which the current enters and leaves his body. This resistance depends, therefore, upon three variable factors, and therein lies the uncertainty of "electrocution." A man's ability to withstand the effects of a waterfall depends similarly upon the strength of the man and the point of application of the water's force. Here are two variable facts which can be disregarded so long as we have Niagara falls. This would seem to be an argument in favor of "hydrocution."

All electrical current phenomena have their exact parallel in the flow of water, and for the ready explanation of the one it is only necessary to understand the other. Everybody understands their water faucets, though they may not understand their plumber. So should people understand the common uses of the mysterious current, though they do not comprehend the useless and perplexing technicalities of expert electricians.—New York World.

Advice for Boys and Girls.

Nothing is good enough that is not as good as it can be made. The verdict "good enough," says a well known writer, which in boyhood passes the defective task, will become "bad enough" when the habit of inaccuracy has spread itself over the life.

"You have planed that board well, have you, Frank?" asked a carpenter of an apprentice.

"Oh, it will do," replied the boy. "It don't need to be very well planed for the use to be made of it. Nobody will see it."

"It will not do if it is not planed as neatly and as smoothly as possible," replied the carpenter, who had the reputation of being the best and most conscientious workman in the city.

"I suppose I could make it smoother," said the boy.

"Then do it. 'Good enough' has but one meaning in my shop and that is 'perfect.' If a thing is not perfect it is not good enough for me."

"You haven't made things look very neat and orderly here in the back part of the store," said a merchant to a young clerk.

"Well, I thought it was good enough for back there where things cannot be seen very plainly, and where customers seldom go."

"That won't do," said the merchant sharply, and then added in a kinder tone: "You must get ideas of that kind out of your head, my boy, if you hope to succeed in life. That kind of 'good enough' isn't much better than 'bad enough.'"

The girls who don't sweep in the corners or dust under things, and the boys who dispose of tasks as speedily as possible, declaring that things will "do" if they are not well done, are the boys and girls who are very likely to make failures in life because the habit of inaccuracy has become a part of their characters.

The old adage, "What is worth doing at all is worth doing well," is as true now as it was when first spoken, and it will always be true.—Youth's Companion.

How Cats Fight Dogs.

The mastery of herself which a cat shows when, having been caught in a position from which there is no escape, she calmly sits down to face out the threats of a dog, is a marvelous thing. Every body has seen a kitten on a street doorstep attacked by a dog ten times her size, as apparently self possessed as if she were in her mistress' lap. If she turns tail and runs down the street she is lost; the dog will have a sure advantage of her. Even as it is, if he could get up courage enough to seize her on the spot he would be able to make short work of her.

"You dare not touch me, and you know it," is what her position tells the dog. But she is intensely on her guard, in spite of her air of perfect content. Her legs, concealed under her fur, are ready for a spring; her claws are unsheathed, her eyes never move for an instant from the dog; as he bounds wildly from side to side, barking with comical fury, those glittering eyes of hers follow him with the keenest scrutiny. If he plucks up his courage to grab her, she is ready; she will sell her life dearly. She is watching her chance, and she does not miss it. The dog tries Fabian tactics, and withdraws a few feet, settling down on his forepaws, growling ferociously as he does so.

Just then the sound of a dog's bark in the next street attracts his eyes and ears for a moment, and when he looks back the kitten is gone. He looks down the street and starts wildly in that direction, and reaches a high board fence just as the cat's tail—a monstrous tail for such a little cat—is vanishing over the top of it. He is beaten. The cat showed not only more courage than he had, but a great deal more generalship.—Boston Transcript.

Saying "Good Morning."

Just how to say it is what somebody wants to know. One of you, as impulsive as possible, bows as if all her heart was in it when she meets a man who is a mere acquaintance. Shall she then be surprised if the next time he is a bit familiar in his mode of conversation? Another, in her desire to be dignified, gives a rigid bow that announces her acceptance of a pleasant acquaintance under protest. Then when she meets him next he is chilling and decidedly unfriendly in his manner.

But what to do? You will have to act the happy medium. When you incline your head give a suggestion of a smile that means, "I know you;" but we don't tell any more than that in a public place.

Women are said to have won battles by the sweet bows given to opposing generals. One should be thankful that one is not in the midst of any great battle now, except that wondrous battle of life when a smile and a pleasant greeting do more to remove the stumbling blocks from the way of the weary wanderer than anything else.

The "good morning" is the beginning of every day of life, and, my dear girl, to say it pleasantly is to open the golden door of a day and to make all the sunshine of life seem to rest upon you and reflect upon everybody else and make them feel pleasant, and that is a great deal. Can't you work faster and find work easier when your heart is full of that liquid of love we call "pleasantness?" Just think it over. It is worth while.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A Man Who Has a Cigar Collection.

"A good dinner without a cigar is like a beautiful woman with one eye," says the Spaniard.

Every one knows what a cigar is and the use to which it is put. No one will deny its widespread popularity, although some question its beneficent effects upon the human family. Yet, while postage stamps, monograms and cigarette pictures have all found enthusiastic collectors, but one man has been found to face the many difficulties attending a collection of cigars gleaned from all parts of the world.

Capt. Mike Flaherty is well known in the tobacco world and has a wide circle of acquaintances among the pilots, from whom he now and again received a present of a queer looking cigar from some foreign land, and it was this decided him to commence his present collection, which now numbers about 150 varieties of cigars, about each one of which a quaint, interesting story might be told.—New York Telegram.

Single Blessedness.

If I had to decide for my daughter whether, in view of her greater happiness, she should marry or remain single, I would find the task difficult. In marriage the ordering of her life is taken in a great measure out of her own hands; she must bend to circumstances; she is modified by the influences which have surrounded her husband all his life; she takes to herself in his relatives a new set of kindred, who may or may not be agreeable to her. The single life is much less complex, and it offers her what poets have sung and heroes died for—independence. But, she points out, a woman will rarely enjoy her state of single blessedness unless she is prepared for it in training and is allowed to be independent if she remains at home.—Olive Thorne Miller.

ADVERTISING.

An Expert Who Says Newspapers are the Only Satisfactory Medium.

STYLES WHICH HAD BIG RUNS.

Pointers for the Enterprising Business Man.—Be Truthful in Your Advertisements.—A Science.

"Nobody has tried more different kinds of advertising than we have," said a member of a well known clothing firm, a few days ago, "or tried the different kinds more thoroughly, but we have settled down now to regular newspaper advertising, and believe that, for a permanent business, that alone pays. We were the first to use the sails of vessels in the harbor as an advertising medium. Then we got up the 'alphabet puzzle,' and gave away a half a million puzzles while the craze lasted. Afterward we invented the Waterbury watch idea. We had to do something, because three of our principal competitors had failed, and their stocks were being sold for next to nothing by assignees, so we decided to give a Waterbury watch with every twelve dollars' worth of goods purchased. We advertised the watches 'wound and set.' To wind them fast enough we had to rig up a little machine, worked like a sewing machine, that would do the winding, and we kept several boys at work winding and setting them. Before we quit we had given away forty thousand of the watches.

NEWSPAPER "ADS."

"But nothing ever pays us like the ordinary newspaper advertising. The fact is, there has come to be in this city a class of advertisement readers, just as there is of news readers. They read the advertisements every day, and, of course, the man who wants to attract them has to get up an advertisement that will do it. The day of standing advertisements in the paper, 'Go to So-and-So's for clothing,' or 'Go to This-and-That's for shoes' has passed, just as the day for painting signs on rocks and fences or on the sails of boats has passed. You must have something interesting and fresh every day in the advertisement, and it will be read. We have proof of this all the time in our business, for an advertisement of any certain thing is sure to bring throngs of people into the stores inquiring for next day. By the number of such inquiries we rate the success or failure of an advertisement. I can guarantee to bring a thousand people to our stores any day by the insertion of an advertisement of some specialty in the morning papers.

"We were the first firm to introduce the use of outline cuts in newspapers. An Englishman who had done caricaturing on the other side, offhand sketches as a part of the entertainment of a show of some sort, and had come to this country, first brought the matter to our attention, and we tried a few of the cuts as an experiment. They succeeded so well that we made them a regular feature. After a while the papers themselves caught onto the outline idea, and now that is almost the only style of newspaper illustration used. A while ago we concluded to try the experiment of dropping the cuts. They are expensive, because besides the cost of them, the papers charge double rates for the space they occupy. It has been poor economy, however. The cuts were worth much more than they cost as an advertisement, and we shall go back to them.

MUST BE TRUTHFUL.

"Another thing about advertising of late years is the gradual increase in the truthfulness of it. People are learning that it doesn't pay to lie in an advertisement any better than it does anywhere else. The theory that 'a sucker's born every minute and he's just as likely to come in here as anywhere else' won't do for a permanent thing. I think that there has been a noticeable improvement in this respect lately, and that business men are rapidly learning that honesty is the best policy in an advertisement as well as outside of it.

"A curious thing is the difference there is between advertising for women and for men. For a man an advertisement must be short and to the point. It ought to treat of but one subject and to be written as tersely as possible. Men read advertisements on the jump; they never deliberately sit down to go through the advertisements in a paper. For the women, on the contrary, you can put in as much detail as you please; once a woman is attracted to an advertisement she will read it all through, no matter how long it is or how fine the type is. Then there is no use putting an advertisement for a man in a Sunday paper. If you make it big enough to be seen in one of those enormous sheets it will be too long to be read by a man. An ordinary advertisement, such as would attract him in a week day paper, is buried in the great Sunday editions. But you can take a page on Sunday and be certain that the women will look for it and read it all through carefully. Thousands of them buy the papers, and especially the Sunday papers, for no other thing than to read the advertisements. The big dry goods houses know that, and that is why they all use the Sunday papers so freely."—New York Sun.

What an Average Cow Can Do.

It is a popular belief that the dog is the most intelligent of all four footed animals, and that next in the mental scale is the horse. That is a mistake. The cow knows more than horse and dog combined are capable of learning. An ordinary town cow, which has been accorded reasonable facilities for acquiring general information, is much wiser than some men who have been honored with proud positions and expensive funerals. The average town cow can open a gate that fastens with a time lock, get into the garden and do fifty dollars' worth of damage before the exasperated owner can ram a charge of slugs into a muzzle loading gun.—Exchange.

THE NEW BALLOT LAW

AN ACT TO AMEND SECTIONS 1185, 1186, 1187, 1188, 1189, 1190, 1191, 1192, 1193, 1194, 1195, 1196, 1197, 1198, 1199, 1200, 1201, 1202, 1203, 1204, 1205, 1206, 1207, 1208, 1209, 1210, 1211, 1212, 1257, 1258, AND 1259 OF THE POLITICAL CODE, AND TO ADD FOUR NEW SECTIONS THERETO, TO BE NUMBERED 1213, 1214, 1215 AND 1216, ALL IN RELATION TO THE CONDUCT OF ELECTIONS IN THIS STATE.

The People of the State of California, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. Section 1185 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1185. All ballots cast in elections for public officers within this State shall be printed and distributed at public expense as hereinafter provided. The printing of general tickets and cards of instruction to electors of each county, and the delivery of the same to the election officers, shall be a county charge, the payment of which shall be provided for in the same manner as the payment of other county expenses; and the printing and delivering of "municipal tickets," and also in case of separate elections for city, city and county, or town officers, the printing and delivering of cards of instruction shall be a charge upon the respective city, city and county or town in which such "municipal tickets" and cards of instruction are to be used, the payment of which shall be provided for in the same manner as the payment of other city, city and county or town expenses.

SEC. 2. Section 1186 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1186. Any convention, as hereinafter defined, held for the purpose of making nominations for public office, and also electors, to the number hereinafter specified, may nominate candidates for public offices to be filled by election within the State. A convention, within the meaning of this act, is an organized assemblage of delegates representing a political party which, at the last election before the holding of such convention, polled at least 3 per cent. of the entire vote of the State, county, district or other political division for which the nomination is made; provided, that in any county, township, city or district wherein no general election shall have been held after its organization, a convention of any party polling at least 3 per cent. of the votes cast in the district comprising such county, township, city or district shall have the same power, and its nominations the same effect as though such county, township, city or district had been organized before the next preceding general election.

SEC. 3. Section 1187 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1187. All nominations made by any such convention shall be certified as follows: The certificate of nomination, which must be in writing, shall contain the name of each person nominated, his residence and the office for which he is nominated, and shall designate the party or principle which such convention represents. It shall be signed by the chairman and secretary of such convention, who shall add to the signatures their respective places of residence, and was sworn to before an officer authorized to administer the same, that the matter stated in such certificate is true to the best of their knowledge and belief, and a certificate of oath shall be annexed to the certificate of nomination.

SEC. 4. Section 1188 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1188. A candidate for public office may be nominated otherwise than by a convention in the manner following. A certificate of nomination containing the name of the candidate to be nominated, with the other information required to be given in the certificates provided for in Section 1187 of this code, shall be signed by electors residing within the district or political division for which candidates are to be presented, equal in number to at least 3 per cent of the entire vote at the last preceding election within the state, district or political division for which the nomination is to be made, provided, that 1,000 signatures shall be sufficient for the nomination of a candidate for any office in the State. No signature shall be accepted to more than one paper, and each signer shall add to his signature the place of residence, giving the street and number when he resides in a city. One of the signers of such certificate shall swear that the signatures thereon made are true to the best of his knowledge and belief, and a certificate of such oath shall be annexed. Such a certificate, when made as above prescribed, shall have the same effect as a certificate of nomination made by a party convention.

SEC. 5. Section 1189 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1189. Certificates of nomination shall be filed with the Secretary of State for the nomination of candidates for offices to be filled by the electors of the entire State, or for members of the State Board of Equalization, State Board of Railroad Commissioners, or House of Representatives. Certificates of nomination shall be filed with the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town for the nomination of any candidate for an office under the government of any city or town, to be filled by the electors of such city or town. For all other nominations to public offices, certificates of nomination shall be filed with the Clerks of the respective counties wherein the offices are to be filled by the electors, and where the district or political division embraces more than one county, such certificate must be filed with the Clerk of the county in which the candidate resides, and the name of each such candidate as specified in the certificate of nomination shall be certified by said County Clerk to the County Clerks of the other counties within the district or political division, not less than fifteen days before the day of election.

SEC. 6. Section 1190 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1190. No certificate of nomination shall contain the name of more than one candidate for each office to be filled. No person shall join in nominating, under the provisions of this code, more than one nominee for each office to be filled, and no person who has voted in a convention for or against a candidate for any office shall join in nominating, in any manner, any other nominee for that office, and no person shall accept a nomination to more than one office.

SEC. 7. Section 1191 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1191. The Secretary of State shall preserve in his office for the period of two years all certificates of nomination filed therein under the provisions of this code, and each County Clerk shall preserve in his office for a like period all certificates of nomination filed therein under the provisions of this code, and each Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town shall for a like period preserve in his office all certificates of nomination filed therein under the provisions of this code.

SEC. 8. Section 1192 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1192. Certificate of nomination required to be filed with the Secretary of State shall be filed not more than sixty days and not less than forty days before the day fixed by law for the election of the persons in nomination when the nomination is made by convention, and not more than sixty days and not less than thirty days before the day of election when the nomination is made by electors as provided in Section 1188 of this code. Certificates of nomination required to be filed with the County Clerks, or with the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any city or town, shall be filed not more than fifty nor not less than thirty days before the day of election, when the nomination is made by a convention, and not more than fifty days nor less than twenty days before the day of election when the nomination is made by electors. Should a vacancy in the list of nominees of a convention occur, such vacancy may be filled by the convention, or if it has delegated to a committee the power to fill vacancies, such committee may, upon the occurring of such vacancy, proceed to fill the same; provided, that no nomination shall be made or certified at a period before the day of election less than the minimum number of days provided for filing certificates of nomination made under this code. The chairman and secretary of the convention, or of such committee, shall thereupon make and file with the proper officer a certificate setting forth the cause of the vacancy, the name of the person nominated, the office for which he was nominated, the name of the person for whom the new nominee is to be substituted, the fact that the committee was authorized to fill vacancies, and such further information as is required to be given in an original certificate of nomination. When a certificate to fill any vacancy shall be filed with the Secretary of State, he shall in certifying the nomination to the various County Clerks, insert the name of the person who has been thus nominated to fill a vacancy in the place of that of the original nominee. Any person whose name has been presented as a candidate, may, at least five days before the making of the publication of the nominations present to the officer in this section, cause his name to be withdrawn from nomination by filing with the Secretary of State and County Clerk his request therefor in writing, signed by him and acknowledged before the County Clerk of the county in which he resides, and no name so withdrawn shall be printed on the ballot.

SEC. 9. Section 1193 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1193. Not less than twenty-five days before an election to fill any public office, the Secretary of State shall certify to the County Clerk of each county within which any of the electors may by law vote for candidates for such office, the names of such persons nominated for such office, as specified in the certificate of nomination filed with the Secretary of State.

SEC. 10. Section 1194 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1194. At least ten days before an election to fill any public office, the County Clerk of each county shall cause to be published, in at least two newspapers of general circulation within the county, the nominations to office certified to him by the Secretary of State, and also all those filed with the County Clerk. He shall make not less than two such publications in each of such newspapers before election day, one of such publications being made upon the last day upon which such newspaper is issued before the day of election. The list of nominations published by the County Clerks of the respective counties shall be arranged in the order and form in which they will be printed upon the ballot. The Clerk or the Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town with whom the names of any candidates have been filed shall publish in the same manner the list of nominations filed with him; but where only one newspaper is printed in any county, city or town, then publication in such newspaper shall be deemed sufficient, and where no newspaper is printed in such county, city or town, publication shall be made through any newspaper designated by the Board of Supervisors of said county, or the legislative body of such city or town, and by posting copies of the ballot in three of the most public places in such county, city or town not less than ten days before the day of election.

SEC. 11. Section 1195 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1195. Whenever a proposed constitutional amendment, or other question, is to be submitted to the people of the State for the popular vote, the Secretary of State shall duly, and not less than twenty-five days before election, certify the same to the Clerk of each county of the State; and the Clerk of each county shall include the same in publication provided for in Section 1194 of this code.

SEC. 12. Section 1196 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1196. Except as in this code otherwise provided, it shall be the duty of the County Clerk of each county to provide printed ballots for every election of public officers, except elections for city or town officers, in which electors or any of the electors within the county participate, and to cause to be printed in the appropriate ballot the name of every candidate whose name has been certified to, or filed with the County Clerk, in the manner provided for in this code. Ballots other than those printed by the respective County Clerks, or the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town, according to the provisions of this code, shall not be cast nor counted at any election. It shall be the duty of the County Clerk of any consolidated city and county to provide separate ballots for every candidate for city and county officers in which the electors or any of the electors of such city or county participate, and to cause to be printed in such separate ballots the name of every candidate for a city and county office, whose name has been filed with the said County Clerk in the manner provided in this code. It shall be the duty of the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town to provide separate ballots for every election for city or town officers in which the electors, or any of the electors, of such city or town participate, and to cause to be printed in such separate ballots the name of every candidate whose name has been filed with such Clerk or Secretary in the manner provided for in this code; and such ballots shall be of the necessary size and shape to contain the names of all the candidates, together with the necessary blank spaces hereinafter provided for, and shall be printed on tinted paper furnished by the Secretary of State. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to obtain and keep on hand a sufficient supply of paper for ballots, and to furnish the same in quantities ordered to any County Clerk, or Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town upon payment by the officer of the cost of such paper. Such paper shall be water marked with a design to be furnished by the Secretary of State, in such manner that the said water mark shall be plainly discernible on the outside of such ballots when folded according to law. Such design shall be kept secret from all persons not engaged in the preparation, printing or distribution of the paper or ballots until the day of election. Such design shall be changed for each general election, and the same design shall not be used again at any general election within the space of 14 years, but at any special or separate local election paper marked with the design used at the previous election may be used. Nothing in this code contained shall be construed to prevent the printing upon his ballot by any voter from without upon his ballot the name of any person for whom he desires to vote for any office, and such vote shall be counted the same as if printed upon the ballot and marked as voted for.

SEC. 13. Section 1197 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1197. All ballots printed by County Clerks, other than the separate ballots containing the names of candidates for city and county offices, printed by the County Clerks of consolidated cities and counties shall be headed "General Ticket", and all ballots printed by County Clerks of consolidated cities and counties, containing the names of candidates for city and county offices, and also all tickets printed by the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town, shall be headed "Municipal Ticket." Under the heading of all general tickets, the respective number of the Congressional, Senatorial and Assembly district in which such ticket is to be voted shall be printed, together with the following direction to voters: "To vote for a person (stamp) a cross (X) in the space at the right of the name." Opposite the title of each office shall be printed a direction to the voter specifying the number of persons to be voted for for that office, and opposite each constitutional amendment or other question to be voted upon in separate lines the words "yes" and "no." All municipal tickets containing the names of candidates for ward or district offices, in addition to such direction to voters, shall have the number of the ward or district in which such ticket is to be voted printed thereon. All municipal tickets shall be printed upon paper of a different tint from that of the general ticket. On each ballot a perforated line shall extend from top to bottom, one-half inch from the right-hand side of such ballot, and upon the half-inch strip thus formed there shall be no printing except the number of the ballot, which shall be upon the back of such strip in such position that it shall appear on the outside when the ballot is folded. The number on each ballot shall be the same as that on the corresponding stub, and the ballots and stubs shall be numbered consecutively in each county. All ballots shall be 18 inches in length and 4½ in width, and as many times such width as shall be necessary to contain the names of all candidates nominated. Where the names of candidates are printed in separate columns such columns shall be separated by heavy rules; and on all ballots the names of candidates shall each be separated by a rule extending to the extreme right of the column. All ballots shall be printed in plain Roman type, and shall contain the name of every candidate whose nomination for any office specified in the ballot has been certified to and filed according to the provisions of this code, and no other name; [and there shall be added to all the names of candidates their party or political organizations.] The names of the candidates for each office shall be arranged under the designation of the office, in alphabetical order, according to surnames. [Except that the names of candidates for the office of electors for President and Vice-President shall be arranged in groups as presented in the several certificates of nomination, and the voter may vote for the whole of said group by making one mark after such group.] There shall be left at the end of the list of candidates for each office as many blank spaces as there are persons to be elected to such office in which the voter may insert the name of any person not printed upon the ballot for whom he desires to vote as candidate for such office; and the names and blank spaces on the whole ticket shall be consecutively numbered, the figures being placed on the left-hand side of such names and blank spaces. There shall be a margin on the right-hand side of the names, at least one-half of an inch wide, so that the voter may clearly indicate, in the way to be hereafter pointed out, the candidate and candidates for whom he wishes to cast his ballot; the county, city or town in which each candidate resides may be printed in small type on the right-hand side of his name. Whenever any question is to be submitted to the vote of the people, it shall also be printed upon the ballot in such a manner as to enable the electors to vote upon such question in the manner hereinafter provided. At the head of each ballot shall be printed in separate lines the names of all political parties which have filed certificates of nomination of candidates in accordance with Sections 1186 and 1187 of this code, thus: "Regular Republican Ticket, (straight); opposite the names of each party, and on the same line therewith, there shall be a margin similar to that herein required, to be left opposite the name of each candidate, in which the voter may place the mark in the manner specified in Section 1200 of this code, if he desires to vote for all of the candidates of such party, but a ballot so marked shall not be counted if it [be stamped in any other place] except to indicate a vote or votes upon a constitutional amendment or other question.

SEC. 14. Section 1198 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1198. All ballots, when printed, shall be bound in stub-books of 100 ballots each. A record of the number of ballots printed by them shall be kept by the respective County Clerks, and by the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of each incorporated city or town.

SEC. 15. Section 1199 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1199. The County Clerk of each county shall provide for each election precinct in the county not less than one hundred general tickets for every fifty or fraction of fifty electors registered in the election precincts; and in case of a consolidated city and county, an equal number of municipal tickets when any city and county officers are to be elected; and the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town shall furnish a like number of municipal tickets when any city or town officer is to be elected.

SEC. 16. Section 1200 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1200. Whenever it shall appear by affidavit that an error or omission has occurred in the publication of the name or designation of the candidates nominated for office, or in the printing of the ballots, the Superior Court of the county, or the Judge thereof, shall, upon application by any elector, by order, require the County Clerk to correct such error, or to show cause why such error should not be corrected.

SEC. 17. Section 1201 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1201. Before the opening of the polls at any election within any county, the County Clerk of the county shall cause to be delivered to the Boards of Election of each election precinct which is within the county, and in which the election is to be held, at the polling-place of the election precinct, the proper number of general tickets to be used in the election precinct, in sealed packages, with marks on the outside, clearly designating the precinct or polling-place for which they are intended, and the number of ballots inclosed, and in case of a consolidated city and county, also a like number of municipal tickets; and the Clerk or Secretary of any incorporated city or town shall in like manner cause to be delivered the proper number of municipal tickets. The County Clerk, Clerk or Secretary shall prepare a receipt for each polling-place, enumerating the packages and stating the time and day and date when the same were delivered by him to the Inspectors of Election. The Inspectors of Election shall sign said receipt upon receipt of the packages, which shall forthwith be returned and filed. The County Clerk, Clerk and Secretary respectively shall have authority to employ such messengers as may be necessary to insure the safe and expeditious delivery of the ballots to the Inspectors or Judges of Election, as provided in this code, and the Board of Supervisors, or other board or body having the control of elections, shall allow such messengers a reasonable compensation for their services, to be paid as other election expenses are paid. In cases of the prevention of an election in any precinct by the loss or the destruction of the ballots intended for that precinct, the Inspector or other election officer for that precinct shall make an affidavit setting forth the fact, swear to the same before an officer authorized to administer oaths, and transmit it to the Governor of this state. Upon receipt of such affidavit the Governor may order a new election in such precinct, and upon the application of any candidate for any office to be voted for by the electors of such precinct the Governor shall order a new election to be held in such precinct.

SEC. 18. Section 1202 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1202. At the same time and in the same manner as Inspectors and Judges of Election are now appointed in this State, two ballot clerks for each election precinct in the State shall be appointed, who shall be the assistants in the charge of the ballots on the day of election, and to furnish them to the voters in the manner hereinafter provided. Such ballot clerks shall possess the same qualifications, and shall be paid the same compensation, as the Judges of Election. In making appointments of such ballot clerks, one of them shall be taken from the political party that polled the largest number of votes at the last preceding election and the other from the party that polled the next largest number of votes at such election. They shall act as additional Clerks of Election when the polls are closed, and they shall serve until the votes are counted and the returns are signed; provided, that whenever a general and municipal election shall be held at the same time, there shall be appointed one additional Inspector, one additional Judge, and two additional clerks in the manner now provided by law.

SEC. 19. Section 1203 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1203. All officers upon whom is imposed by the laws relating to the duty of discharging polling places shall cause such polling places to be suitably provided with a ballot-box, to be marked on the outside, "general tickets," and when any city, city and county or town officer is to be elected a second ballot-box to be marked on the outside "municipal tickets," and shall also provide a sufficient number of places, booths or compartments at or in which voters may conveniently mark their ballots, so that the marking thereof they may be screened from the observation of others; and a guard-rail shall be so constructed and placed that only such persons as are inside such rail can approach within six feet of the ballot-boxes and of such booths or compartments. The arrangement of the booths or compartments for the voters for the box or boxes shall be such as to prevent the view of these just outside the said guard-rail. The number of such voting booths or compartments shall not be less than one for every fifty voters and be open in the precinct. No person other than electors engaged in receiving, preparing or depositing their ballots shall be permitted to be within said rail before the closing of the polls except by authority of the Board of Election, and then only for the purpose of keeping order and enforcing the law. Each of said voting booths or compartments shall be kept provided with proper supplies and conveniences for marking the ballots.

SEC. 20. Section 1204 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1204. Any person desiring to vote shall give his name and address to one of the ballot clerks, who shall then, in an audible tone of voice, announce the same, and if the other ballot clerk finds the name on the register, he shall in like manner repeat the name and address, whereupon such ballot clerk may be interposed, as provided in Section 1200 of this code. If the challenge be overruled, the ballot clerk shall give him a ticket, and the clerk shall write on the register, opposite the name of the voter, the number of the ballot given him, and also the number of the municipal ticket given him, when any city, city and county or town officer is to be elected; and the voter shall be allowed to enter the place inclosed by the guard-rail, as above provided. The ballot clerk shall give him but one ballot of each kind, whether any city, city and county or town officers are to be elected, also one municipal ticket, and only one ballot of each kind.

SEC. 21. Section 1205 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1205. On receipt of his ballot the elector shall proceed immediately, without leaving the inclosed space, retire alone to one of the booths or compartments provided to prepare his ballot. He shall prepare his ballot by marking a cross after the name of the person or persons for whom he intends to vote, thus, X; provided, however, that if any elector who desires to vote for an entire party ticket, may mark a cross as above described against the political designation of such party, and shall then be deemed to have voted for all persons named for office by said party, and for or against a constitutional amendment or other question submitted to the vote of the people, by marking in the appropriate margin, a cross (X) against the answer which he desires to give. Such marks shall be made with a lead pencil, which, with necessary pads and ink, shall be provided by the officers who are by this code required to furnish election supplies, for each booth or compartment provided for the marking of ballots. The elector, before leaving the booth or compartment the elector shall fold his ballot in such a manner that the number of the ballot shall appear on the outside thereof, without displaying the marks on the face thereof, and shall keep it folded until he has voted. Having folded his ballot the voter shall deposit it folded to the Inspector, who shall announce in an audible tone of voice the name of the voter and the number of his ballot. The ballot clerk having the register in charge, if he finds the number to correspond with the number marked opposite the voter's name on the register, shall in like manner repeat the name and number, and shall mark opposite the name the word "voted." The Inspector shall then separate the number from the ballot and shall deposit the ballot in the box. The numbers of all ballots voted shall be immediately destroyed.

SEC. 22. Section 1206 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1206. Not more than one person shall be permitted to occupy any one booth at one time, and no person shall remain in or occupy a booth longer than necessary to prepare his ballot, and in no event longer than ten minutes.

SEC. 23. Section 1207 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1207. Any voter who shall spoil a ballot shall return such spoiled ballot to the Ballot Clerk and receive another one in its place, one at a time, and to exceed three in all. All the ballots thus returned shall be immediately canceled, and, with those not distributed to the voters, shall be returned with the registered list and ballots, as now provided in Sections 1203 and 1204 of this code. Every elector who does not vote the ballot delivered to him shall, before leaving the polling place, return such ballot to the Ballot Clerks having charge of the ballots, who shall immediately cancel the same and return them in the same manner as spoiled ballots. The Ballot Clerks shall account for the ballots delivered to them by returning a sufficient number of unused ballots to make up, when added to the number of official ballots cast and the number of spoiled ballots returned, the number of ballots given to them, and it shall be the duty of the officers receiving such returned ballots to compel such an accounting.

SEC. 24. Section 1208 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1208. Any elector who declares, under oath, to the presiding election officer that he cannot read, and that by reason thereof, or that by reason of physical disability, he is unable to mark his ballot, shall, upon request, receive the assistance of any one of the officers of election [illegible] chosen in the manner [illegible], and such officer shall thereafter give no information regarding the same.

SEC. 25. Section 1209 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1209. No member of the Board of Election shall deposit in the ballot-box any ballot from which the slip containing the number of the ballot has not been removed by the Inspector.

SEC. 26. Section 1210 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1210. The County Clerk of each county, or in case of separate city or town elections, the Clerk or Secretary of the legislative body of such city or town shall cause to be printed on plain white paper, without water-mark or indorsements (except the words "sample ballot") at least as many copies of the form of ballot provided for use in each voting precinct as there shall be registered voters in such precinct. Such copy shall be designated "sample ballots," and shall be furnished to registered voters at the office of such Clerk or Secretary five days before the day fixed by law for such election, and at any time during such five days; provided, that not more than one sample ballot shall be furnished to any one voter. Such Clerk or Secretary shall cause to be printed, in large, clear type, on cards, instructions for the guidance of electors in obtaining and marking their ballots. He shall furnish twelve such cards to the Board of Election in each election precinct in his county, at the same time and in the same manner as the printed ballots and sample ballots. The Board of Election shall post at least one of such cards in each booth or compartment provided for the preparation of ballots, and not less than three of such cards at other places in and about the polling places on the day of election. Sections 1214 and 1215 of this code and Section 61 of the Penal Code shall also be printed on each of said cards.

SEC. 27. Section 1211 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1211. In canvassing the votes any ballot which is not made as provided in this act shall be void, and shall not be counted; but each such ballot must be preserved and returned with the other ballots. Any name written upon a ballot shall be counted for the office under which it is written, whether or not a cross is marked after it. If a voter marks more names than there are persons to be elected to an office, or if for any reason it is impossible to determine the voter's choice for any office to be filled, his ballot shall not be counted for such office.

SEC. 28. Section 1212 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1212. Any person entitled to vote at a general election held within this State shall, on the day of such election, be entitled to absent himself from any service or employment in which he is then engaged or employed for the period of two consecutive hours, between the time of opening and the time of closing the polls; and such voter shall not, because of so absenting himself, be liable to any penalty, nor shall any deduction be made on account of such absence from his usual salary or wages.

[Amend Section 1257 of the Political Code to read as follows:

After the lists are thus signed, the board must proceed to open the ballots and count and ascertain the number of votes cast for each person voted for. All the ballots must be taken out of the ballot-box, one at a time, and opened by one of the members of the board, and as so taken out, the straight ballots must be placed in separate piles, according to their respective ticket headings, vignettes, or other designations in manner as follows, to wit: All the straight ballots of each such party must be placed in a separate pile, and straight undesignated ballots must be placed in a separate pile in a like manner. When all the straight ballots shall have been so placed in piles, the number of ballots in each such pile must be carefully, correctly and distinctly counted aloud by a member of the board, in presence of the board and of the bystanders, whereupon an official record must be made by each clerk of the total number of ballots in each such pile. Immediately thereafter all straight ballots, according to their respective headings, vignettes or other designations, shall be distinctly read by such clerks, and the official total of votes made for each party shall be in connection with the office for which he is a candidate, and said total shall be so credited to such candidate. Immediately thereafter all straight ballots must be by one of the Judges strung upon one string in such a manner that all the straight ballots of each party shall be in direct succession and immediate proximity upon said string, and all such straight ballots thereupon be securely bound together by said string and replaced in the ballot-box.

All the ballots, other than straight ballots, of each separate political or other party must be placed in a pile. When all the ballots shall have been so placed in a pile the number of ballots in such pile must be carefully, correctly and distinctly counted aloud by a member of the board in the presence of the board and of the bystanders, whereupon an official record must be made by each clerk of the total number of ballots in such pile. Immediately thereafter all the ballots, other than straight ballots, must be by one of the Judges strung upon one string in such a manner that all the ballots, other than straight ballots, shall be in direct succession and immediate proximity upon said string, and all such ballots, other than straight ballots, shall thereupon be securely bound together by said ballot-box. Immediately thereafter such pile of ballots, other than straight ballots, must be freed from such twine or other fastening without removal from the ballot-box, and such ballots shall be read as one pile, by one of the members of the board, and the name of each person marked in the ballots as voted for shall be distinctly read in connection with the office for which he is a candidate. After the ballots, other than straight ballots, have been so counted, and an official record, as heretofore mentioned, made, all ballots rejected for illegality must be strung upon said string of ballots, other than straight ballots; whereupon all the ballots thus strung shall be securely bound and be replaced in the ballot-box.]

SEC. 29. Section 1258 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1258. Each clerk must write down each office to be filled and the name of each person marked in each ballot as voted for to fill such office, and keep the number of votes by tallies as they are read aloud.

SEC. 30. Section 1259 of the Political Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1259. The ballots, as soon as the names marked on them as voted for are read, must be strung on a string by one of the judges, and must not thereafter be examined by any person, but must, as soon as all are counted, be carefully sealed in a strong envelope, each member of the board writing his name across the seal.

SEC. 32. Four new sections are hereby added to the Political Code, to be numbered, respectively, 1213, 1214, 1215 and 1216, as follows:

Sec. 1213. No person shall falsely make, or fraudulently deface or destroy any certificate of nomination, or any part thereof, or file any certificate of nomination, knowing the same or any part thereof to be falsely made, or suppress any certificate of nomination which has been duly filed, or any part thereof, or knowingly or furnish to others, except as in this code so directed, any paper water-mark in imitation of ballot paper, or disclose the same to any person not engaged in making, printing or distribution of ballots or ballot-paper.

Sec. 1214. No person shall, during an election, remove or destroy any of the supplies or other conveniences placed in the voting booths or compartments, as provided in this code, for the purpose of enabling the voter to prepare his ballot. No person shall, during an election, remove, tear down or deface the cards printed for the instruction of voters.

Sec. 1215. No officer of election shall disclose to any person the name of any candidate for whom any elector has voted. No officer of election, nor any person, shall do any electioneering on election day within one hundred feet of any polling place. No person shall remove any ballot from any polling place before the closing of the poll. No person shall supply or receive any ballot at any election precinct other than that in which he is entitled to vote. No person shall show his ballot after it is marked to any person in such a way as to reveal the contents thereof, or the name or names of the candidate or candidates for whom he has marked his ballot; nor shall any person, except a member of the Board of Election, receive from any voter a ballot prepared by such voter, or examine such ballot, or solicit the voter to show the same. No person shall ask another at a polling place for whom he intends to vote. No voter shall receive a ballot from any other person than one of the ballot clerks; nor shall any other person than a ballot clerk deliver a ballot to such voter. No voter shall deliver to the Board of Election, or to any member thereof, any ballot other than the one he has received from the ballot clerks. No voter shall place any mark upon his ballot by which it may be afterward identified as the one voted by him.

Sec. 1216. In all counties, and cities and counties, in this State, having a Registrar of Voters and a Board of Election Commissioners, the powers conferred and the duties imposed by this code upon the County Clerks and other officers, in relation to matters of election and polling places, shall be exercised and performed by such Registrar of Voters and Board of Election Commissioners, and all certificates of nomination required by this code to be made to County Clerks shall be made to the Registrar of Voters.

SEC. 33. This act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1892.

As Others See Us.

"John B. Merrill the bookkeeper, is in town after a vist to Bishop, Inyo County. He says there are many good features about parts of Inyo county and some bad ones. The valleys bordering the streams are supplied with an abundance of fine water and the people do not fully appreciae their splendid water supply. Freight is very high. At Bishop and the other towns on the same line of railroad it cost 3¼ cents a pound for freight. Some kinds of fruit grow in the country, but the elevation is too great to raise citrus fruits. Alfalfa fields and fine stock are plentiful.—Tulare Times.

It is a significant fact that what most strikes a visitor to Owens Valley is our unrivalled water supply and exorbitant freight rates.

The Directors of the Independence Track Association held a meeting last night and settled up the business of the corporation for the present year. There remains a total indebtedness of $360, and to meet this an assessment of $23 per share has been levied. All claims against the Association will be paid in full, and the stockholders will have a valuable property free from incumbrance.

D. C. Hawes, the photographer, took a number of snap-shot views of the stock parade on Wednesday last. He has taken proofs of the plates and the finished pictures will be excellent. All orders should be left at the studio immediately. As Mr. Hawes will remain here but a few days longer all parties desiring photographs should call immediately.

Another Pioneer Gone.

On Wednesday morning about ten o'clock Joseph Fernback died at Independence. Mr. Fernbach was one of the very early pioneers of Inyo county coming here among the first white settlers. He took an active part in the welfare of Inyo county, and his genial disposition and thorough kindness of heart made him well known and highly regarded by all. A brewer by occupation, he was engaged in that business for upward of thirty years in Inyo county. He was with the expedition that drove the Indians into the lake in January 1866, and forever put a quietus on the reds in this section. He was public spirited and one of the most generous and open hearted men who ever lived. Of late years he has been financially embarrassed, and the increasing effect of a sad infirmity kept him much to himself. But old-timers remember the Joe Fernbach of his best days and deeply regret the sad death of an honorable, warm hearted man.

To Make Hot Bread Wholesome.

With most persons it is necessary that bread raised with yeast should lose its freshness or become stale before it can be eaten with safety. Distressing results also follow from eating biscuit, cake, pastry, etc., raised by the cheap, inferior baking powders that contain lime, alum, phosphates, or other adulterants. The hot roll and muffin, and the delicious hot griddle cakes, raised by Royal Baking Powder, can be eaten without inconvenience by persons with the most delicate digestive organs, and are as wholesome and digestible as warm soup, meat or any other food.

No leavening agent or baking powder, except the Royal Baking Powder, possesses this great qualification.

THE "SAFETY" PARACHUTE.

A Successful Experiment with a New Kind of Balloon Device.

A very interesting and successful experiment has been made here by M. Capazza, the well known aeronaut, with a "safety parachute" which he has invented. The apparatus is placed above the balloon, and to it are attached a number of very long ropes. If the balloon bursts, the gas swells out the parachute and so helps to diminish the rapidity of the descent. At the top of it is a small funnel, through which the gas passes slowly, and by this arrangement the parachute is kept steady.

This is the principle of M. Capazza's invention. The parachute used in the experiment is of rather voluminous dimensions, and the car is fixed at the longest possible distance from the balloon in order that it may not be entangled in the debris. In rather squally weather M. Capazza made his ascent from the gasworks at La Villette, his wife being among the spectators. The lady, however, did not seem at all nervous. "I married Capazza," she said, "because I was sure of his courage. I am not a bit afraid."

The couple were only wedded a few weeks ago. It was amid loud cheers from the assembled spectators that the order "Lachez tout!" was given, and then the balloon, drifting in a northeasterly direction, rose in about five minutes to the altitude of 1,200 meters, which the aeronaut desired to attain. M. Capazza then burst the balloon by means of a knife placed at the top, and to which a cord had been attached.

Most of the spectators were horrified at the sight of the aerostat, now reduced to a shapeless mass, as it fell slowly on the car, but not interfering in any way with the development of the parachute, which, filling out until it looked like a large saucer turned upside down, hardly swerved in its motion, but came steadily down at the rate of six feet per second. M. Capazza finally alighted in a corn field at Drancy, in the neighborhood of Pantin, the descent having occupied a little more than ten minutes.

The experiment is regarded as satisfactory in every way, and there is only one opinion as to the success of the invention and the pluck displayed by the enterprising aeronaut. Connoisseurs were much impressed with the manner in which the "safety parachute" behaved from the moment when the balloon was burst, and also with the practical character of the precautions taken to prevent the aerostat from encumbering its movements.

The steady balance for which M. Capazza had provided was maintained from the first, and the ladies, many of whom were so panic stricken at the moment when the balloon was ripped up that they nearly fainted away, were reassured long before the bold aeronaut reached terra firma. As for his wife, her confidence never forsook her, for her faith in M. Capazza's skill and presence of mind is unbounded.

It is believed that an immense advance has been made through this invention in the ballooning art, and that, thanks to it, all chance of accidents occurring is now reduced to the minimum.—Paris Cor. London Telegraph.

The Ruling Passion.

The bays had taken fright and the handsome turnout was racing down the crowded street. A big blond woman had the reins and was putting what strength and weight she possessed into a desperate effort to check their headlong career. She tugged at the reins and sawed the bits, but without avail. Every moment the speed increased, and the shouting, arm waving crowd only made matters worse. A blue coated gentleman flourished a baton ten yards from the horses' heads, but they refused to obey the mandate of the law. A block of heavy wagons through which a horse car had tried for ten minutes to pass scattered like summer leaves before a cyclone, and left a broad and open path for the runaways.

The crowd in the street as it yelled and hooted at the flying team scarcely noticed a little figure that crouched at the bottom of the rig, except when a loose cedar block or an uneven car rail sent it bouncing skyward and threatened to fire it like a round shot from a mortar's mouth. One hand held a silk hat firmly on his head, and the other grasped the arm of his better half convulsively. "Can't you shtop 'em, Maria?" he shouted between the bumps. "No!" she gasped. "Well"—bump—"for heaven's sake, run into somedings sheap!"—Chicago News.

The Baby's Substitute.

The story is related of a well known auctioneer, who formerly lived on Walnut hills, but is now a resident of Mount Auburn. On one occasion he had been entertaining some New York friends in a lavish manner, and returned home in the early morning hours a little the worse for his reception. His wife, who was awaiting him, saw his condition, and being in negligee costume tossed the key out of the window to him. He finally effected an entrance into the house, and meeting the reproachful glance of his better half made a vain effort to conceal his real condition from her by taking the baby from the cradle and rocking it in an unusually sober manner. He left the room for a moment and when he returned picked up the nursing bottle instead of the babe. His wife says he rocked the nursing bottle for three solid hours until he fell asleep singing a lullaby to it.

Lincoln's Shocking Hat.

When on his way to Washington to be inaugurated as president of the United States Lincoln passed through New York. The almost studied negligence which characterized his apparel excited much mirth and ridicule. But the keenest shafts of ridicule were aimed at his hat, an exceedingly seedy looking "stovepipe." It was publicly dubbed "that shocking hat." This didn't worry Lincoln a bit, but it pained some of his sensitive friends very much. So they arranged a little scheme to secure an exchange of "tiles" which would give the president a presentable hat.

The dimensions of Lincoln's cranium were secretly but accurately ascertained, and a brand new hat was provided that would exactly fit him. Things were so fixed that when the procession which was escorting Lincoln passed up Broadway the carriage in which he was seated halted just opposite the store of a popular hatter. Out rushed the hatter with the hat which the committee of Lincoln's friends had selected, and begged the privilege of exchanging it for the one which Lincoln wore. Without any suspicion that he was the victim of a "put up job" Lincoln good naturedly complied with the request.

The late William Gibson, one of New York's greatest curio and relic hunters, secured the "shocking hat," and it figured conspicuously at many fairs and exhibitions for charitable purposes. When Mr. Gibson died, some eight years ago, the hat passed to one of his sons, who kept it under a glass globe in his factory. There it was seen last week by F. R. Kaldenberg, of this city. He wrote to his friend, C. F. Gunther, of Chicago, who has a large collection of Lincoln relics, about it. Mr. Gunther opened up negotiations and purchased for a good round sum the hat, which is intrinsically not worth five cents.

The hat is an ordinary old fashioned "stovepipe" and was made by a hatter at Springfield, Ills., named George Hall. It is lined inside with paper in imitation of silk and on it in pencil Lincoln had written his name and address, "A. Lincoln, Springfield, Ills." It is this autograph which adds so immensely to the value of the hat.—New York Herald.

Girls in Peril on a Trestle.

Miss Ollie Tuller, a well known young lady of Columbus, O., has had a thrilling escape from a terrible death, and is lying in a serious condition as a result of slight injuries and extreme nervous prostration.

In company with Mrs. Minnie Thurston, Miss Rena Little and another lady, Miss Tuller started from her residence on Forsythe avenue to attend church at the penitentiary. Just within the shadow of the prison wall stands a long trestle, over which run the tracks of the Little Miami railroad. The street crossing beneath was muddy from the recent rains, and instead of descending the slope from the street upon which they were walking, the party of ladies started to walk across the trestle, which would bring them near the penitentiary gates. All but Miss Tuller made the journey in safety, but when she reached the middle of the framework an engine came swiftly steaming around the corner and bore straight down upon her.

With a frightened shriek Miss Tuller started to run from the huge iron monster, which seemed almost upon her, while her companions stood helpless and speechless with horror. Before she reached the end of the trestle Miss Tuller slipped and fell between the crossties, where she lay or rather hung suspended directly in the path of the approaching engine. The opening between the ties was not large enough to permit the passage of her body, and her feet and limbs having dropped through she found herself wedged between the ties so tightly that escape was impossible.

At this critical moment the engineer saw her, and reversing his lever the locomotive was brought to a standstill within a few feet of the helpless girl. She was extricated from her perilous position and carried into the private office of Warden Jones at the penitentiary, where Drs. Heinlin and Ireland examined her injuries. She was found to be badly bruised, but, save for the shock, not seriously injured, and was able to ride home.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Literary Paris.

The history of French literature is that of the perpetual storming of Paris by a handful of young adventurers whose object is to demolish the existing formulas of an always incomplete art, and to enthrone themselves victoriously in a new edifice which they propose to build upon the ruins. But no sooner has one set of innovators achieved success than another band begins to attack the victors of yesterday, and so battle follows battle and revolution follows revolution, with the accompaniment of violent polemics, and of envy, hatred and all uncharitableness. The documents, the exactitude, the experimentation and the professed scientific method of the naturalist evolution, which only a few years ago was proclaimed to be definitive, now sicken the elite. The cry at present is for golden winged dreams, or at any rate for something new. Enough of the gross language of Naturalism, its ignoble ideas, its exclusive materialism!—Theodore Child in Harper's.

No Wonder Robbie Was Puzzled.

There used to be a theater in the town in which Robbie lives, but the pious people of the place having had it closed, Robbie missed the lithographs, and he determined one day to find out what had become of the theater, but he is still in a quandary. When he asked his big brother what had become of it he said, "It is out of sight;" his older sister said, "It is plain to be seen;" his father said, "It has gone up," and his mother said, "It has been put down."—Philadelphia Times.

Two Extremes.

"I'm so hungry," hoarsely whispered a large, well dressed man in my ear.

No, it wasn't the plea of a street beggar, but was the sad wail of a rich and popular club man, at that moment busily engaged in holding down one of the blue plush sofas at the Fifth avenue. Weighing about 300 pounds the club man was admirably adapted to that line of business.

"I'm hungry all the time. I dare not eat. I am dieting myself to get rid of some of this flesh. Every mouthful of meat or drink seems to make a pound of adipose tissue. I work with the clubs and bells and eat so little I'm half starved. Yes, sir; starved! You think that's funny, don't you, but it isn't. It may be easy for a man without money or friends or tastes who sleeps in the park, but to a man like me it's terrible! terrible! But I lost three pounds last week," he added, brightening up a bit, "and hope to pull off five this week."

While the unfortunate man was talking and moaning I was not smiling at him. I was thinking of a clever and pretty young lady who had a similar grievance and who that very day had tremblingly faltered in my other ear:

"Do you think I'm any thinner than I was last Thursday. Honest, now, am I growing thinner? I weigh only 125 pounds today; a month ago I weighed 126. Awful, isn't it?"

I admitted that it might be awful, but at the terrible rate of falling off given she couldn't have lost more than three ounces since I saw her last, and this was quite imperceptible.

"Now you're making fun of me," said she. "It is too serious. I'm getting to be nothing but skin and bones! Everything I eat and drink makes me thinner! Everybody says I look badly, and I know I'm just wasting away!"

I must introduce these two unhappy people and let them talk it over.—New York Herald.

The Green Fisherman.

It is amusing to a veteran when visiting angling resorts to watch the beautiful way in which the guides seduce the greenhorns into buying tackle or outfits from them or from the local stores. There is always some particular fly or spoon without which it is useless to fish, and then when it comes to going out to the fishing grounds, woe to the man who has not been there before, for unless he happens to have an unusually conscientious boatman the chances are that he will be taken over some very convenient ground where there are few if any fish.

"They are not biting today," or "You ought to have been here last week," etc., are the consoling remarks made by the guides; we have all listened to these remarks time and time again. Anglers on their first trips to the Thousand Isles suffer from this to a very great extent; there are so many good looking and convenient localities barren of fish while the best and prolific waters are at considerable distance from the hotels and require hard work at the oars to reach them. In fact the experience of sportsmen is that the first season at a new resort, whether for fishing or shooting, is usually wasted.—Forest and Stream.

The Evidence Was Against Her.

Finally, when the end of the meal was marked by the appearance of half a dozen new cut glass finger bowls, infantile wonderment could contain itself no longer.

"Mamma," piped the eldest cherub, "what's all this for?"

"All what?"

"Oh, havin the real silver out, and all these new things an two kinds of meat.'

"Why, Willie, what do you mean by talking in that fashion? You know this is the way we dine every day. Really, Cousin Mary, that child is losing his memory."

"No, I ain't. We had Irish stew six times this week, already, an if Cousin Mary don't believe what I say"——

"Willie!"

"Well, just let her come in some day without tellin nobody, and if she don't get stew, too, I hope the boogey man'll get me."

"Yes, tome offen," piped the other two children, "an let mamma know you're comin, for we're orful tired of stew."—Troy Standard.

Day by Day.

"While I live I purpose to live," one of our modern world conquerors is credited with having said, and it was a noble sentiment to which any earnest individual is equal, since God sets our task every twenty-four hours and watches with us to its close as well as rehearses us for the drama of death as often as our limbs and faculties become weary from the strife. Then let us gather up the golden days as heavenly treasures and roll them on before us into the greater sphere of eternity, when we shall come to possess them again as the least of the bright dowry of one who awakes from pleasant dreams of days well spent, to behold "the perfect day."—Christian Advocate.

A Gilded Refusal.

There is a girl in town who tells this story on herself. She is a zealous member of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Seeing in the street one day a cab driver cruelly maltreating his horse she went up to him, and, showing her badge, demanded his number.

"Lord, miss," said the man in a condescending voice and a commiserating smile, "ef I wuz ter tell yer it would go out of that pretty head afore yer got to the next corner."

Then he drove on, leaving the girl torn between conflicting emotions, anger and the desire to laugh.—Washington Post.

A Strange Pond.

Hicks pond, in Palmyra, Me., is a strange body of water. It is only twelve acres in area, but it is more than 100 feet in depth. It has no visible inlet, although a fair sized stream flows from it into Lake Sebasticook. The volume of its waters is not materially affected by either drought or freshet, and the water is always cold.—

"EVERY WORD TRUE."

SO SAYS THE WRITER OF THAT FAMOUS LETTER.

He Reiterates His Statements, Produces Additional Proof and Clearly Defines His Position.

[N. Y. Sun.]

It would be difficult to measure the interest and comment, not to say excitement, which the published letter of Dr. R. A. Gunn, which appeared in the papers yesterday, has occasioned. The prominence of the doctor and the unusual nature of the letter have both tended to add interest to the subject and make it really the talk of the town.

I called upon Dr. Gunn at his residence, No. 124 West Forty-seventh street, yesterday afternoon. I found the reception room crowded, and it was only after an hour's waiting that I succeeded in obtaining an interview.

Dr. Gunn is a distinguished looking man, and impressed me at once by his manly bearing and air of sincerity. I took the seat he courteously offered me and said:

"Are you aware, doctor, of the commotion your letter has caused?"

Dr. Gunn smiled, and replied: "Things out of the ordinary usually cause comment. It is not a common thing for physicians to indorse and cordially recommend medicines other than those in the Materia Medica. History is full of instances of scientists who have indorsed discoveries they believe to be valuable, and have been denounced for so doing, and yet these same discoveries are blessing the world to-day. I hope I have the manhood and courage to be true to my convictions, and that is why I so openly and unhesitatingly indorse Warner's Safe Cure as being the greatest of modern discoveries for the cure of diseases which have baffled the highest skill of the medical profession."

I was impressed with the earnestness of the doctor, and saw that he meant every word that he said.

"How long have you known of this remedy, doctor?" I asked.

"Nearly ten years," he replied. "My attention was originally called to the Safe Cure by a serious case of Bright's disease, which was considered hopeless, and yet, much to my surprise, under its use the patient recovered. I have tried it in other cases since then constantly, and my original faith in its power has been confirmed. I have seen patients recover from inflammation of the bladder, gravel and Bright's disease when all other treatment had failed, and I have found it especially efficient in all female troubles."

"Can you specify any particular cases, doctor?" I asked.

"That is a delicate thing to do," the doctor replied; "but, as I always keep a written record of my cases, I can accommodate you."

Thereupon the doctor opened his desk and produced his record book. Turning over the leaves he said:

"Here is a case of a gentleman who was a great sufferer from inflammation of the bladder of long standing. He had consulted a number of physicians without benefit. When first consulted I myself tried the usual methods of treatment, but without success, and I finally advised him to try Warner's Safe Cure. He felt better from the start, and in a few weeks was entirely cured."

The doctor turned a few pages further, and then said:

"Here is another case. It is that of a gentleman who had frequent attacks of renal calculi, which, as you know, is gravel forming in the kidneys. He had never been able to prevent these formations, but after an unusually severe attack I recommended him to try the Safe Cure, which he did, and, although it is three years since he took the remedy, he has never had an attack since."

The doctor continued to turn the leaves of his book, and suddenly exclaimed:

"Here is a most remarkable case. It is that of a lady who had suffered for some time from Bright's disease. She became excreinte, and about the fourth month suddenly became blind, had convulsions and finally fell into a state of coma, caused by uremic or kidney poison. Several physicians who saw her said she could not live, and in this view I fully concurred. As she could still swallow I said, as a last resort, that they might try Warner's Safe Cure. They did so, and to the surprise of every one she recovered. She has since given birth to a living child, and is perfectly well."

"Those are certainly most wonderful cases, doctor," I said, "and while I do not for a moment question their authenticity I should consider it a great favor if you would give me their names. I think the importance of the subject would fully justify it."

"In the interest of other sufferers I think you are correct," Dr. Gunn finally observed, after a moment's thought. "Both the lady and her husband are so rejoiced, so greatful, over her recovery that I know she is only too glad to have others hear it. The lady is Mrs. Eaves, wife of the well known costumer. She was not only restored, but is in perfect health to-day."

I thanked the doctor for his courteous reception, for the valuable information imparted, and I feel assured that his generous and human nature will prevent him from feeling other than glad at seeing this interview published for the benefit of suffering humanity.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

WHAT THEY ARE GOOD FOR.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are the best medicine known.

First—They are purely vegetable, in fact a medicated food.

Second—The same dose always produces the same effect—other purgatives require increased doses and finally cease acting.

Third—They purify the blood.

Fourth—They invigorate the digestion and cleanse the stomach and bowels.

Fifth—They simulate the liver and carry off vitiated bile and other depraved secretions.

The first two or three doses tell the story. The skin becomes clear, the eye bright, the mind active, digestion is restored, costiveness cured, the animal vigor is recruited and all decay arrested.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold in every drug and medicine store, either plain or sugar coated.

RIGHT OR WRONG.

Which will ye have? It does seem as if some folks prefer to have the last condition of the liver rather than the first. They perpetually dose themselves with purgatives totally without virtue as alterative of liver trouble. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the successful candidate for the people's choice, and yet, popular and well known as it is, there are unfortunates who keep on trying the drastic remedies of former days. It is to the intelligent portion of the public that the well-known and long tried properties of the Bitters appeal. Reason should be guided by experience in the matter of medication. "The best guide to our feet is the lamp of experience," said a great patriot of the early revolutionary period, and the exclamation is pregnant with truth. For over a third of a century the Bitters daily has met with the endorsement of people suffering from liver complaint, malaria, constipation, rheumatism, debility and troubles accompanied by dyspepsia. Latterly it has declared itself and been thoroughly approved as a remedy for "la grippe."

Johnny's Opinion.

Who does not remember the blood curdling picture in the old Sunday school books, where the two she bears were devouring the hapless children who had pointed out the excelsior path to Elisha of the high forehead. A few days ago a bright little boy of four, who, though most carefully guarded, sometimes picks up phrases which are the last his parents would have him hear, saw a company of Salvationists pass him with their beating of drums and their odd attire. He hailed them from the doorstep with "Pound it harder, Aunt Thump Thump! Step higher, Uncle Big Hat," &c.

His grandmother from the country heard and was horrified. She at once proceeded to teach him a lesson in reverence. "Don't you know, Johnny," she said, "that those people are working for the Lord, just as the prophets used to do in old times. It is wicked to make fun of them. Once some children cried out as the prophet Elisha passed, 'Go up, thou baldhead!' and God sent two she bears out of the woods and they ate them all up." Johnny's eyes grew big, and bursting into tears he chilled the pious expectations of his anxious teacher by exclaiming between his sobs, "I—think—it—was—a—blamed—shame!"—Boston Herald.

Struck by an Elephant's Trunk.

When I was in the country once with the show we turned a sick elephant, well hobbled, into a pasture field, by consent of the owner. A little mare was in that field with her colt, and she evidently thought her baby was in danger, so she made a fierce attack on the elephant with her heels. She played a merry tattoo on the ribs of that astonished brute, I tell you, till he actually turned his big back upon her and tried to run away. He was hobbled so that running was a ludicrous failure, and besides the little mare caught him with her sharp teeth on the "slack" skin around his hind legs, which always makes an elephant look as if his suspenders were not braced up short enough, and she hung on to him fiercely.

Seeing that he could not get away from her, the elephant twisted about and hit her just once with his trunk on the neck. The brave little mare lay right down and never got up, and we had to write her price on the expense side of our ledger.—Interview in New York Tribune.

The Phrase "Jack Robinson."

The use of the phrase "Jack Robinson," originated in the British house of parliament during the debates on what was known as the "Indian bill," and when John Robinson was first lord of the treasury. Sheridan was the man who first used the phrase. It came about in this manner: Sheridan was speaking concerning Fox's waning chances, when he said: "Mr. Speaker, this state of affairs is not to be wondered at. When a member of this august body is employed to corrupt everybody, what else could be expected?" Instantly there was a great cry of "Name him!" "Name him!" "Who is it?" "Sirs," said Sheridan, "I shall not name the person; it is a most unpleasant thing to do. But don't suppose that I abstain because there is any difficulty in naming him. I could do so, sirs, as quick as you could say 'Jack Robinson.'"

They naturally inferred from his remarks that Jack or John Robinson was the person whom he alluded to.—Philadelphia Press.

What War Has Cost During Thirty Years.

It appears, according to the estimates of French and German statisticians, that there have perished in the wars of the last thirty years 2,550,000 men, while there has been expended to carry them on no less than the inconceivable sum of $13,000,000,000. Of this amount France has paid nearly $3,500,000 as the cost of the war with Prussia, while her loss in men is placed at 155,000.

Of these, 80,000 were killed on the field of battle, 36,000 died of sickness, accidents or suicide, and 20,000 in German prisons, while there died from other causes enough to bring the number up to the given aggregate. The sick and wounded amounted to 477,421, the lives of many thousands of whom were doubtless shortened by their illness or injuries.—San Francisco Post.

Potatoes Growing Like Pease.

Wellbaugh and Chening, in their explorations in the Colombian Andes, have discovered a species of potato, the vines of which were covered with well developed tubers growing in the open air like pease or tomatoes. Each potato is protected by a thin film or membrane, not unlike that which envelops the "ground cherry." They do not grow in clusters, each being given plenty of space in which to thoroughly mature. The natives say that during the dry season the membrane surrounding each potato is filled with water, which in a measure protects it from the rays of the sun.—St. Louis Republic.

Masonic Intelligence.

"What do those letters stand for?" asked a curious wife of her husband as she looked at his Masonic seal.

"Well, really, my love," he replied encouragingly, "I presume it is because they can't sit down." She postponed further questioning.—Texas Siftings.

LIKE ONE FAMILY.

Twelve Hundred Persons Who Eat and Sleep Under the Same Roof.

LONDON'S IMMENSE SUPPLY STORE.

A Firm Which Provides all the Comforts of Home for its Army of Employees at a Trifling Cost.

Twenty-five years ago the government employes of Great Britain organized themselves into a "Civil Service Supply association" in order to enable each member to purchase at wholesale prices food, clothing and furniture.

A chest of tea was the first investment. This was equally divided among the originators and subscribers, and the price of one pound of tea to each member was so small that the news quickly spread, and thus originated "The Civil Service Supply association, limited," which has now become in England one of the most powerful corporations. None but civil service employes are admitted to membership. These include all branches of the service, such as the war office, foreign office, British museum, postoffice and custom house. A man or woman who, having passed a severe competitive examination, once enters any branch of the service is secure of a place for life, advanced according to ability and worth, pensioned if incapacitated by age or sickness to perform his or her duties, and only dismissed for serious offenses or misbehavior.

From that first chest of tea purchased twenty-five years ago by a fair, level headed man has sprung up a business in England the like of which does not exist in any other country.

One of the largest of these stores, if not the largest, is that of John Barker & Co., of High street, Kensington. The firm occupy thirty stores, covering an entire square block all merged into one vast business, which is carried on from the cellars to the highest stories. They employ 1,200 clerks, salesmen and saleswomen, besides a small army of mechanics and workingmen and women of all classes.

AN ARMY OF SALESMEN.

"We have in our employ," said D. T. Barker, "900 salesmen and saleswomen. Besides these we have on our pay roll about as many clerks, bookkeepers, drivers, porters, carpenters, plumbers, butchers, grocerymen, tailors, dressmakers and workingmen and women. They are paid full union rates, as I have made it a point in my business never to contend with what the working classes consider their rights.

"From practical experience I believe in the employer supporting workingmen's unions, for I have always found that by doing so I get the best workmen and accordingly the best work done. Every employe in the store, from the commonest porter to the highest graded, has three weeks' holiday, with full pay, every year. The hours of attendance are from 8:30 in the morning until 6:30 in the evening. The stores close sharp at 2 o'clock every Saturday the whole year round, and even during the holiday rush there are no extra hours.

"It is the custom in England, and I am astonished to hear that it is not adopted in the United States, for all stores employing many clerks and salesmen and women to board and lodge those who are unmarried."

Mr. Barker then took the correspondent to the top floors of his thirty stores. In each of the buildings were set aside two floors used as lodgings for the employes, of whom more than three hundred are there accommodated. The rooms are not only comfortably but handsomely furnished and carpeted. The rental of these rooms, the correspondent found from personal experience with the lodging houses of London, was so small, considering the locality, the furnishing and comforts of the rooms, as to seem almost incredible that such comforts could be provided for at such cost.

CO-OPERATIVE LODGINGS.

Mr. Barker then took the correspondent a short distance from the stores into one of the quietest and prettiest streets in Kensington. He led the way to a row of fine, large private house, with pretty gardens in front. Pointing to six of the handsomest houses that stood alongside each other Mr. Barker said:

"Our firm not only leases these buildings, but has furnished them throughout, and we have divided them into rooms, which we rent out to our employes on the same principle as those I have shown you. Now, instead of the system being unpopular, as you in America would think, we are, on account of the increase of our business, going to rent more houses, so great is the application made to us for rooms by our employes."

Two of the houses were specially set aside for the female employes, and while all the rooms were well and comfortably furnished some showed that their occupants were women of taste and refinement from the books, pictures and ornaments in the rooms. One of the larger rooms is set aside as a parlor. In this room, which was handsomely furnished, was a grand piano. "We have among our employes some really accomplished musicians," said Mr. Barker, "and many are highly trained vocalists.

"Every month our employes are allowed to give a concert to which their friends are invited. Twice a month they are also permitted to give a dancing party to which also they are allowed to invite their friends. Once a year they give a concert at St. James' hall, a smoking concert and a banquet. On these occasions tickets of admission are sold, and the amounts thus gathered are set aside to swell a general benefit fund."

Mr. Barker then led the correspondent into another large room. This room was not only handsomely furnished and thickly carpeted, but around it were elegant bookcases, fine engravings, large tables and rows of comfortable chairs. The library contains 20,000 volumes, embracing all classes of literature, history, travels, biographies, poems and selections from the best novelists.—London Cor. New York World.

Snakeskin Neckties.

A west side dealer in rainbow hued novelties for the adornment of the masculine neck has recently developed a new thing in that line which may become very popular. This new scarf is made from the dried skin of the rattlesnake and makes a very handsome tie, although the effect is rather startling, as the rattles and buttons are utilized for a scarfpin.

The dealer says that he intends to send samples to the leading society men, and has no doubt that he can find a market for all the snakeskins that he can get.—New York Herald.

She Didn't Like Church Organs.

A novel case has just ended in the common pleas court at New Philadelphia, O. The Centenary Methodist Episcopal church purchased an organ a short time ago on payments of Professor Ortt, and it seems on account of this the congregation became sadly divided. The testimony showed that there was one pious old lady particularly, known all over the neighborhood as "Aunt Eliza," who looked upon the organ as the creation of the devil. She attended services regularly, but the minute the organ began playing the old lady would walk out of the church and sit upon the steps until the music ended, and she would return for the sermon, at the close of which, when the music began for the closing hymn, the old lady would resume her seat on the church step and then return for the benediction.

The organ being the cause of so much trouble, the trustees were at their wits' ends how to get rid of it. One rainy morning Professor Ortt, having occasion to pass the church, was amazed to see the organ sitting out in the corner of the field. There was no shelter over it, and the neighboring chickens found it a pleasant place to roost. The professor brought suit at once against the trustees of the church. The testimony developed the fact that the trustees had thoughtlessly set the organ out in the weather merely to please old pious "Aunt Eliza." The case was hotly contested and a verdict rendered in favor of Professor Ortt for the amount of the purchase price of the organ.—Chicago Tribune.

Curious Feat of the Wind.

J. R. Love spent Sunday at his farm, near Christiana, and it was there that the incident occurred during the high wind on Wednesday night, February 12.

Mr. James J. Hodge is a tenant on Mr. Love's farm and lives with his four children, one a grownup daughter, in a little two-room frame house, 32x17 feet in size. He says that near midnight he heard the house creaking like it was about to fall to pieces, then there was a jar and all was still. The children cried out in alarm, and he jumped out of bed to find that the house had been lifted from its foundations by the wind, carried about five feet beyond them and deposited that upon the ground.

The house was not injured and not an article in it was broken. A lamp that was placed on the mantelpiece was not thrown down.

The next day the neighbors gathered and raised the house and placed the foundation stones under it where it stood, and the family is still living there as heretofore.

The house is a well built little structure, ceiled with pine planks.—Nashville American.

He Saved Her Life.

Miss Susannah Warfield, by her will filed at Westminster, left $100 to Mr. Julius A. Hood, formerly Baltimore and Ohio telegraph operator at Sykesville, now at Mount Airy switch. This money was left to Mr. Hood to show her appreciation of his bravery when he once saved her life at Sykesville. It was about seven years ago. Miss Warfield was going to Baltimore and had to cross both tracks to get to the platform. She was in the middle of the east bound track and the passenger train was coming along. Mr. Hood was in his office a short distance away and saw the danger. The train was then only about 100 yards away, and she could not hear it. Mr. Hood ran and caught her and carried her off the track. The engine came so close to her that it touched her dress. It was a very narrow escape, and Miss Warfield often expressed her high appreciation of Mr. Hood's bravery.—Baltimore American.

Post Horses on Snow Shoes.

The first stage through from Sierraville since Jan. 14 came into Truckee Saturday night. The sleigh was constructed specially for the purpose. The runners were made like a pair of snow shoes, very wide with a groove in the center to keep the sleigh from drifting sideways, and the bottom was well doped. The frame of the sleigh was light; the whole structure did not weigh over eighty pounds. The sleigh was drawn by two horses on snowshoes, hitched tandem. Myrom Manchester engineered the outfit, which was unique in appearance. The trip was made from Sierraville to Truckee in less than two days. A load of mail was brought in and a big load was taken out.—Truckee Republican.

Knocked Them In Again.

During the civil war Mr. Charles Ness, of Searsmont, was a member of a Maine regiment. While in the south he had a bad fall, striking the back of his head heavily on the ground. It left him partially blind and for nearly twenty-five years he has been in the same condition. While he could see somewhat, yet he was unable to read. Recently Mr. Ness fell while carrying a pail of milk into the house and struck the back of his head heavily on the ice. Strange to say, his eyesight has been restored and he can see to read as well as before the first accident.—Pittsfield Advertiser.

The Queen and Turtles.

Among the delicacies which graced Queen Victoria's table at a recent dinner was a turtle 100 years of age, which had been brought from the Ascension island a week previously by the government cruiser Wye. So thoroughly did her majesty enjoy the soup produced from the fat of the reptile that the Wye has just been dispatched to Ascension—a distance of many thousand miles—for a further supply of turtles.—London Letter.

Living with a Broken Neck.

John Dailey, a farm hand employed near Brunswick, N. J., fell from a haymow and unjointed his neck. Dr. Carroll was called and said that the man couldn't live more than a few hours. Dailey said that he could, and he is still alive. The next morning he was quieting his shattered nerves by smoking a cigar. His neck is still unjointed.—Philadelphia Ledger.

RARELY COMBINED

Physical and Moral Courage are Very Seldom Found in One Person.

MEANING OF PHYSICAL COURAGE.

Lofty Motive of Moral Stamina and the Injury That it Often Brings to its Possessor.

It is a rare thing to meet a person, either man or woman, who combines in one both physical and moral courage. Mental courage is a frequent thing—to dare to have opinions, to dare to follow out their consequences in one's mind—and its absence is always pitiable where "the poor heart would fain deny, but dare not." But moral courage is a far rarer quality, and is as much higher than physical courage as the soul is higher than the body. Physical courage is indeed the commonest of the virtues. Most soldiers have it who go into battle; most mothers have it as they approach the great gates of maternity; the child has it who goes to bed in the dark; the boy who challenges the bigger boy to fight; the girl who drives the cattle home.

It is true there is something that passes for physical courage which is not that at all, and which, if it is not exactly moral courage either, is a courage that deserves a name of its own—a disregard of one's lower self, a pride of one's lofttier self, that is far nobler than any mere fearlessness, which a dog can share—and that is the experience of a deadly terror before any act, but the doing it nevertheless, concealing the terror and achieving the result. There is the heroism in that which takes one to the stake.

Physical courage is apt to demand applause, but moral courage leaves every consideration but truth in the background, and is more likely to bring one ostracism than admiration. With moral courage one speaks one's mind, one goes forward to one's conception of duty, one treads one's chosen way without the thought, and so without the fear, of consequences, or even if with the fear, still treads it just the same.

One does not pause to measure the possible effect upon one's self. One does and says what right and the moment require. One is not intimidated by the frown, the brutal word, the threat, the blow, the probable loss of prestige, the force of any contrary opinion, public or private, the possible deprivation of office or of position. One has what has long been known as the courage of one's convictions, and does what one thinks is right or best or even only expedient, without regard to fear or favor.

The moral courage that dares to contradict the village bully dares no less to tell a king that he is in the wrong; dares to arrest the wretch who, whip in hand, abuses his beast—being more beast than the other; dares, too, to shield the culprit from the strong arm, to interpose one's self between the victim and the oppressor, whether the victim be a child in school or a whole people; dares always to resist tyranny. It has been physical courage of course that has fought the great battles of the world—battles, probably, that the world could as well have done without had arbitration been known—but it is moral courage that has instigated and carried forward every reform, and done away with every oppression that has already vanished.

After all, moral courage does more for its possessor than for any one else. The brutes of the field have physical courage, but the other belongs only among the altitudes—lifts and expands the soul that has it and that uses it, and makes it, one dares to think, only a little lower than the angels. They that have it never know when they are beaten; in fact, they cannot be beaten. They return to the attack with all the pristine vigor of the first onset, with all the force that first impelled them.

Women, with their feeble bodies and insufficient means of protection or of assault, are notoriously deficient in animal courage, that "valiant courage and undaunted spirit more than in woman commonly is seen;" but they are just as notoriously rich in the opposite direction, and possessed of great moral courage—that is, the women of the nobler sort. It is they that uphold the hands of others, they that never falter in their purpose, they that will die for their love or their belief—not they alone, but they in the greater number. And it is they that, by handing this trait down to their sons, will lift the race constantly to greater heights of righteous will and strength.—Harper's Bazar.

Hungarians in This Country.

Professor Mogyorossen Arkad, now in this city, who is prominent in the movement to organize and consolidate the Hungarians, was formerly a teacher of the oriental languages at Alleghany city. He estimates the number of his countrymen in the United States at over 1,000,000. He says the Slavs, who live in the mountain regions of Hungary, are poor, illiterate and uneducated, and it is this class who come to this land that are looked upon as the standard of the true Hungarian, whereas they are the exception. The professor is conducting The Onallis, a periodical in the anthracite coal regions for the enlightenment of his countrymen. The title name is the Hungarian word for "independence."—Philadelphia Press.

A Large Band Saw.

The largest band sawing machine in the world has been completed in England and sent to Tasmania. The machine can saw through a maximum depth of seventy-five inches and the carriage will accommodate logs fifty feet long and weighing about fifty tons. It is asserted that this saw cuts even faster than a circular saw, while wasting 75 per cent. less wood.—New York Times.

"Ah, Blank, is it you? I hear you're running a house of your own now?"

"No," responded Blank sadly, "only married."—Kate Field's Washington.

THE BOY WANTED TO TALK.

But the Father Was Very Sleepy and Lost Part of the Conversation.

"Good night, papa," said the boy, going into his room.

"Good night," said the boy's father as he turned out the gas and got into bed.

"Are you tired, papa?" asked the boy sympathetically.

"Tired enough to go to sleep, anyway," said the father.

"That's good," said the boy. "It's a great thing to be so you can go to sleep as quick as you get to bed, isn't it?"

"Great, indeed," answered the father drowsily.

"What makes us go to sleep?"

"Why, because we are tired, I suppose," a little impatiently. Then, with a thought of the sympathy, "Sleep is necessary after the work of the day."

"Does a cow sleep?"

"Certainly."

"What makes women more afraid of cows than men?"

"Very likely because they are more timid. Women can't protect themselves as well as men."

"Girls are just the same. They run and yell at every little thing. I'm glad I am not a girl, aren't you?"

"Yes; I'm glad you are not a girl."

"No, I mean aren't you glad you are not one."

"Yes."

"If you were a girl, you'd be my mother, wouldn't you?"

"I suppose I would."

"Well, I'm glad you are not, for then you couldn't show me how to make a kite."

"Do you want a kite?"

"Yes, but tomorrow will do just as well. Who made the first kites, papa?"

"The Chinese, I fancy."

"The men in China fly kites, don't they?"

There was no answer.

"Don't they, papa?"

"Don't—er, what was it?"

"Don't the men in China fly kites?"

"Yes."

"Are there any laundries in China, papa?"

"I don't know; I guess not."

"Well, how do the Chinamen learn how to wash?"

"I'm sure I don't know."

"The Chinaman down at the laundry has got a fiddle. He can't play very well. Did you ever try to learn to play on a fiddle?"

"No."

"I don't want to learn. I'd rather learn to play a banjo. Did the negroes play on a banjo first?"

"Yes," desperately.

"Who taught them how to make it?"

"I don't know. I guess it came naturally."

"What makes them black?"

"What, the banjos?"

"No, of course not, the negroes."

"The coloring matter in their skin is different from ours."

"Do they ever tan men's skin?"

"Boys' skin is sometimes tanned," with deep meaning.

"Oh, I don't mean that kind of tanning. That's strap oil, isn't it?"

"I guess so."

"What's hair oil made of?"

"Bear's grease, I've read."

"If I could kill a bear when I go up into the Adirondacks on my vacation I could get a lot of hair oil, couldn't I?"

"I suppose so."

"Will I go on the Friday school closes?"

"I don't know."

"Oh, papa, I want you to help me do an example. This is the way it goes: 'Twenty men dig a ditch 15 2-3 feet wide and 230 yards long in 2 3-4 weeks, working 9 hours a day; 15 men dig a ditch 23 feet wide and 290 rods long in 3 weeks, working how many hours a day?' How do you do that?"

No answer.

"How do you do that, papa?"

"Er—do what?"

"Do that example."

"What example?"

"Why, that one I've just told you. I don't believe you know a word I've been saying."

"Yes, I do; you were telling about that Chinaman playing a fiddle."

"Christopher! That was two or three hours ago. We've talked about a lot of things since."

"Have we? Well, my son," said the boy's father, raising himself on his elbow and looking through the darkness into the other room, "we won't talk any more tonight; we began with sleep and I guess we had better end with that. Good night!"

"Good night!" said the boy, "but I wish you'd tell me where to begin with that example."—New York Times.

When Squirrels Were Numerous.

Accounts by early writers show that squirrels must formerly have been amazingly numerous. Godman says that the gray coat was a fearful scourge to colonial farmers, and that Pennsylvania paid £8,000 in bounties for their scalps in 1749 alone. This meant the destruction of 640,000 within a comparatively small district. In the early days of western settlement regular hunts were organized by the inhabitants, who would range the woods in two companies from morning till night, vying as to which band should bring home the greatest number of trophies; the quantities thus killed are almost incredible now.—Ernest Ingersoll in Harper's.

BIG WINNINGS.

A Broker Who Won Half a Million by an Emancipation Day Parade.

THE ODDEST WAGER ON RECORD.

The Game of "Nigger Up or Nigger Down" as Played by Henry Harley on One Occasion Only.

"The oddest betting I ever heard of," said one oil broker to another in the Hoffman house, "was between Henry Harley, who first conceived the idea of a tidewater pipe line from the oil regions, and the oil operators who used to make their headquarters early in the seventies in Harley's offices. The gambling spirit pervaded the whole business, since the drilling of a single wildcat well cost from $10,000 to $12,000, and I have known men who drilled away $150,000 in the vain effort to strike a new oil field. If in their odd hours the oil operators gambled not only in oil, but in anything or on anything that caught their fancy, it is not to be wondered at.

"The Phillips brothers and Mr. Vandergrift were among the well known oil men at the time when the up town rendezvous of petroleum speculators used to be in Harley's offices, where the Brunswick cafe now is, on the corner of Twenty-seventh street and Fifth avenue."

"What was the bet?"

"Harley had consistently refused to take any part in these 'side speculations' of the oil brokers, as he called them. He was 'all business.' If anybody wanted to bet him on the rise or fall in the price of 100,000 barrels of oil Harley was right there. But he didn't care to wager $50 on the fly that would first reach a lump of sugar on a cafe table, or the sex or color of the first passerby on the avenue. These and other such speculative diversions whiled away the idle hours of the gang, however.

HOW THE GAME WAS PLAYED.

"In 1882-3, at the height of petroleum excitement in New York, a single operator would buy or sell in a morning 1,000,000 barrels of oil. That oil might have a market value as great as $1.25 a barrel—it went that high—or it might range down as low as 60 cents a barrel, as it did after the failure of the Metropolitan bank put a period to the oil craze in this town. When a man bet on the price, however, of only 100,000 barrels of oil a fluctuation of a few cents would cost him, or the man he bet with, anywhere from $5,000 to $20,000 at a crack. Henry Harley and his Brunswick crowd used to get together about 10 in the morning, and Henry often opened the ball by offering to buy or sell 500,000 barrels of oil at a given figure at a certain hour that day. He might gain or lose as much as $100,000 on one of these offers, and that sort of gambling seemed to satisfy him. He fought shy of side issues. But not so the gang.

"'Nigger up or nigger down' the avenue was their favorite gambling game. It was their own invention. Two of them would sit at a side window and the other three at a window fronting on Fifth avenue. The two at the side would bet each other $10, $20, $50 or $100 a clip, as they felt inclined, that the first colored person passing would go up or down the avenue. The three in front would be judges and referee. Day after day and week after week the gang taxed their ingenuity to get Harley into their game. He was a blonde, medium sized and rather athletic young man, and his vivacious spirits found vent in business, and business only. He wouldn't come into the game, and that was the end of it.

"Phillips—not one of the brothers, but an oil man also—had lost $15,000 to Weston one morning in an oil deal before Harley got to the office. Phillips felt a little sharp set, and he bet Weston $500 more that he would get Harley into the 'nigger up or nigger down' game before night. Weston took the wager.

HOW THE BET WAS MADE.

"On his way down town Harley, who was a pretty close observer, had read in his morning paper that the colored people of New York were going to celebrate Emancipation day that day by a grand parade, which would form in Union square and march to Central park. He attached no particular importance at the time to the announcement, but when he got to his office and Phillips began badgering him to bet 'nigger up, nigger down,' at $20 a head his eyes flashed, and to the astonishment of all the oil men within hearing, and the gang in particular, he broke out with:

"'I've stood this thing long enough now, and I'm tired of it. I'll bet you an even hundred each that more negroes go up than down today.'

"So the judges and the referee went to their windows and Harley went about his business as if nothing out of the way had happened or could happen.

"By 11 o'clock 870 colored people—men, women and children—had gone down Fifth avenue in plain sight of the judges, and not a single one had gone up. Phillips naturally felt a little 'sot up' since he was $87,000 to the good, and he ordered in a basket of wine. Harley kept up an imperturbable front. He was secretly astonished, inasmuch as matters had gone just the opposite of what he believed he had a right to expect they would go. But he hadn't said a word about any Emancipation day parade, and didn't propose to. He pretended to be too busy to be chaffed even, and went out to lunch with a customer. It didn't occur to him that the 870 colored people were going down to where the parade was to form.

"At 1 o'clock he returned. He had hardly got his head inside the door when a wild barbaric strain was heard pealing up the avenue, and in a moment a gorgeous sable drum major broke into view at the head of a splendid negro band. Every neck was craned out to see what had broken loose, but Harley, who felt that his time was coming at last, kept his own counsel. Before 5 o'clock that day 6,000 colored people had marched past the office windows in the Brunswick hotel and Harley was $513,000 ahead of the game of 'nigger up or nigger down.' I don't believe it was played much there after that. Harley accepted a dinner to the gang in lieu of his stakes."—New York World.

Bride and Groom Weigh 1,311 Pounds.

A curious sight at Union station was that of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Farlow as they alighted from No. 4. They are the largest couple in the world, and, having been married in Chicago, were en route to New York on a honeymoon trip. As Mrs. Farlow weighs 685¾ pounds and as her husband tips the beam at 625½, it is necessary for them to ride in a fruit car. No passenger cars in use have a door wide enough for either.—Pittsburg Leader.

Why Some Cheap Books Do Not Sell.

"Since I have been in business I have learned a great deal about the public taste in reading matter," said a prominent newsdealer, "and if the publishing houses would follow the hints we could give there would be fewer unsuccessful books put upon the market.

"The paper covered novel has been very successful for some years, and now there isn't a publisher in the country who doesn't issue a 'series.' Inasmuch as several of these books are published every day, of course very few attain a sale of any consequence. In most cases this is the fault of the book, but I could cite instances where the failure was due to cupidity or lack of foresight on the part of the publisher.

"These novels sell for twenty-five or fifty cents, according to the length. There is no intermediate price. Some publishers, taking advantage of this, have padded a twenty five cent novel and charged fifty cents for it. This padding is all done in the printing. Extra heavy paper is used and the type is set in narrow columns. The book seems to contain a good deal, but the purchaser soon sees that he has been humbugged, and afterwards always examines more than the cover of the novel he buys. The wide margin, so dear to the heart of the book lover, is frowned upon by the novel reader. Often when he opens such a book in a hurry the wide margin gives him the impression that it is 'poetry,' and he drops it in a hurry. Nothing could exceed in intensity the novel reader's dislike to 'poetry.'"—New York Evening Sun.

A Human Stone Eater.

At Avignon, France, in 1760, a human stone eater was on exhibition for some time. He was not a "freak" or "fakir," but a real wild masticator of stones, found on an island between Iceland and the Swedish coast. He not only swallowed flints an inch or more in length, but reduced marbles, small pebbles and other rocks to a powder with his powerful teeth. Royal society physicians examined him and found his gullet very large and his saliva strong and corrosive. He would eat raw flesh with the stones, but could not be prevailed upon to swallow bread or other victuals. He would drink water, but much preferred brandy, and while under the influence of the liquor required twice his usual amount of stony food. When not eating or sleeping he smoked continually, sitting with one leg over the other, giving no heed to those passing around him. The flints he swallowed were, when voided, corroded and much diminished in weight, the rest of the excrement resembling pure mortar. He never learned to pronounce but a few words and soon died.—St. Louis Republic.

"For Rent."

Says a La Salle street agent: "I am going to make an innovation which I think renters will appreciate. I am going to have all the houses and flats for which I am agent photographed. These photographs will be in my office. They will give the applicant some sort of an idea of the premises before he goes to make an investigation. Wherever I have a house or flat for rent I will arrange to have the key to the premises convenient and will pay the man who keeps the key a percentage of the first month's rent to answer all questions regarding the premises. A man who rents a house to live in has some rights. The time is about at hand when the unaccommodating landlord who cares for nothing but his rental will have to adopt some other business. The old fashioned house and flat must give way pretty soon. There is too much in the way of modern improvements for the old style houses."—Chicago Tribune.

Greeley as a Farmer.

When Mr. Greeley lived at Chappaqua he wrote his celebrated book on farming, and insisted that his friend Jones should purchase a farm adjacent to his own. When he had ceased picturing the delights and advantages of such a residence, Mr. Jones asked him what he had raised that year.

"Well," said Mr. Greeley, "I had a good crop of hay."

"That is encouraging," said Mr. Jones. "I suppose you realized a profit from it."

"Not a great profit," was the answer. "You see I had the hay cured and got it into the barn all right before the rain came, but that did not save it."

"How was that?"

"There wasn't any roof on the barn!"—Harper's Weekly.

The Use of Arsenic.

A woman of ordinary intelligence ought to know without being told that arsenical toilet preparations are dangerous to the health, and yet not a week passes that I am not in receipt of letters, most of them showing thought and ability, asking me to recommend some cosmetic for the elimination of pimples, and requesting to be told if arsenic is as safe for an internal medicine as it is for a complexion wash. These correspondents know that arsenic is a deadly poison, and yet they talk about its use as if it were the simplest and safest drug in the world. Arsenical doses will put an end to pimples, and, what is more, an end to the life of the person using them.—Eleanor Kirk in Atlanta Constitution.

A Magnificent Water Plant.

The leaves of the Victoria regina attain a diameter of six feet. They are circular, with a raised rim like the rim of a shallow tin pan. The largest flowers are twenty-three inches across. They are white, with a yellow center, and exhale a wonderful perfume. The stems and leaves stretch out twenty feet from the plant. A board has been placed on one of the floating leaves, and a child 6 years of age has been sustained upon the board.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Should Be Well Cared For.

Baboony—Aw, that's awful! The ideaw of a man smoking a pipe with a silk hat on the stweet!

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 14 ..... 1892.

Assembly amendment No 7 provides that no indebtedness for school purposes shall be incurred without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors of the county, town, city or township where such indebtedness is proposed to be incurred. Provision must be made for the collection of an annual tax to pay the interest on said debt, and also to create a sinking fund to pay the principal on or before maturity, which in no case shall exceed forty years.

This appears to be a wise and necessary measure.

Senate Amendment No. 11 provides for a large increase of pay for the Lieutenant Governor. It also proposes to make that officer a rambling inspector of all State institutions, prisons reformatory schools, asylums, or other, supported in whole or in part by the State. Traveling expenses would also be paid, and every tax payer ought to know what is meant by "traveling expenses" in the State service. Another section of the amendment refers to the pay of other State officers.

The whole should be buried too deep to be ever again resurrected. It is a boodle scheme for the benefit of politicians.

Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 5 provides that no bill making an appropriation for money, except the general appropriation bill and the deficiency bill for the appropriation of money exclusively devoted to the support of the General Government and State Institutions shall contain more than one appropriation and that for a single and certain purpose to be therein expressed. The Governor may object to one or more items in the deficiency bill while approving the rest. No officer of the State shall have power to incur any deficiency except in case of actual necessity, and then upon the written authority of the Governor, Secretary of State, and Attorney General.

This is a good measure and will doubtless be supported by a large majority of voters.

Senate Constitutional amendment No. 14 provides for the framing and adoption of charters by cities of more than 3,500 inhabitants.

Every country voter should vote for this amendment. Local self government is one of the best safeguards of freedom. Since the war there has been a constant tendency to centralization of authority, and every measure of an opposite character should be supported by the people. If cities having the right to adopt charters do not secure good government, but let rascally politicians manage their affairs and get rich from public plunder, the fault is their own.

A proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to elect United States Senators by direct vote of the people instead of by the Legislature, as at present, will also be submitted to vote.

Of all the reasons for the corruption of Legislatures none is more potent than election of Senators. Our own State has time and again been put up for sale, and there is a strong probability that this will again be done at the next session of the Legislature. If the railroad candidates shall be be elected it will surely be done. This amendment should be supported by every honest voter. It is not a party question.

Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 10 provides for extending the session of the Legislature from sixty days as at present to one hundred days.

This is a thieves measure, and intended to extend opportunity for thievery. The proposers of this scheme should be treated as known criminals found with burglars' tools in their possession. It is certain to be voted down.

A vote will be taken to ascertain the will of the people upon the subject of requiring an educational qualification for voters. It is proposed before any one shall be allowed to vote he shall be able to write his name and to read any section of the Constitution in the English language. In our own State there are very few voters who do not possess these qualifications; but in the East there are swarms of voters who cannot read the tickets they vote, much less the constitution. Such voters are merely tools for dishonest politicians. Such qualification for a voter is of quite as great importance as any now in force. This is certain to receive a large majority of votes.

As nominations Assemblymen are reported, it is evident that if a majority of Republicans be elected the railroad managers will control the Legislature, and all efforts to obtain relief from the exactions of the monopoly will be defeated. This is a matter, not of politics but of dollars and cents to every tax payer in the county.

One of the main aims of the railroad managers in the present political struggle in this State is to secure the election to the Legislature of men whom they can bribe or bully to vote for their man for the United States Senate. At the next session of Congress an effort will be made to pass a law virtually freeing the railroad magnates from paying the seventy millions of dollars loaned them many years ago. Every dollar of this money belongs to the tax payers and to let the railroad people escape with it would be conniving at robbery. But this is what the railroad managers and their tools are now working for.

The railroad magnates having cozened the public out of seventy millions of dollars in hard coin, can not only refuse to pay it back, but can compel the people of California to pay interest on the stolen money. In addition to this seventy millions got direct by false pretense, five men have squeezed out of the people of California the vast fortunes estimated at forty millions of dollars each or two hundred millions of dollars; and upon all this enormous wealth the farmers of the State are forced to pay interest. It is this skinning alive of every producer in the State that keeps our own and all other counties in the State in a stagnant condition.

Tax payers may know what is in store for them from the following fact: The leader of the whole boodle gang in the last Legislature was Henry C Dibble. He was chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and was put in that position intentionally to have control of all the thieving bills that should be introduced. He was proved to be present in the office of the State Librarian when the package of $7,000 was received there from the office of the Southern Pacific Railroad. Yet this man, covered with infamy as he is, has again been put forward as a Republican candidate for the Assembly. If the same power that controlled the last Legislature shall be dominant in the next, the same infamous practices will be continued.

The "Finger" Prayer Book.

Thirty-five or forty years ago some one issued the famous "Thumb Bible," so called because it was scarcely larger than the first joint of the thumb; now Mr. Frowde, of Oxford, England, is out with a marvelous little book, which has been dubbed the "Finger Prayer Book." This tiny volume has 700 pages and is bound in morocco and velvet with brass clasps. It weighs less than three-quarters of an ounce, is only 1 inch in breadth, 3½ inches in length and ½ of an inch in thickness. It is difficult for one to believe that a book of 700 pages could be made thin enough to conveniently go into a common pocket purse, but this is what Mr. Frowde has achieved in his "Finger Prayer Book." It is a marvel in paper making and one of which the author, the paper maker and the printer are justly proud. A copy of it bound in silver with gold clasps will be exhibited at the World's fair.—Exchange.

Poisoned Snuff.

An old New Yorker, who takes snuff regularly, wrote to Sanitary Superintendent Edson a few days ago to complain that some snuff which he had been using had caused inflammatory symptoms which suggested poison. Dr. Edson examined the sample of snuff which was sent with the complaint and discovered that chromate of lead, known in the trade as chrome yellow, had been mixed with the snuff to brighten it. He next ascertained where the snuff was manufactured in the city, and called on the manufacturer for an explanation.

Subsequently the manufacturer declared that he had used the poisonous color in the snuff by mistake, supposing that he was using a harmless means of improving the appearance of the article. He promised to stop using chrome yellow, and also consented to destroy some of his stock which had been colored with it.—New York Letter.

A Prehistoric Burial Ground.

An interesting archæological find has been reported from the neighborhood of Foster's Ferry, on the Warrior river, about nine miles south of Tuskaloosa, Ala. When the recent high waters receded from the river bottoms it was found that the current had unearthed a prehistoric burial ground. Great quantities of human bones, rough stonework and pottery were left exposed. It is surmised here from the nature of the relics found that it was a Choctaw burial ground, but a thorough examination will be made at once and the results reported.

The Season for Dog Distemper.

This spring season is very trying for house bred doggies, and unless great care is taken of their exercise and diet they are pretty sure to have a touch of distemper. This will promptly announce itself by running at the eyes and nose, and the small quadruped should be at once taken to the doctor. No home treatment is safe, and a good doctor will cure him in two days and prevent a relapse. Keep vermifuge comfits always by you and give him one now and then as a preventive.—New York Press.

Costa Rica is about to have a law making the sale of Indian antiquities to foreigners a crime, punishable with severe penalties.

A Real Romance.

On the platform of a Pullman at the depot in Cheyenne, Wy., one morning an indolent looking chap in English togs and a pretty young woman in red conversed so earnestly that they attracted the attention of everybody within range. Several passengers were anxious to tell what they knew of the story of the interesting pair, and said that the man was a frank, honest fellow, who would talk willingly. Cards were exchanged, and his read, "Edward F. Griffin, Overseer Public Works Department, Hong-Kong."

He yielded his story like a major. Said he: "I am trying to persuade the girl here to stop off in Cheyenne and marry me, but she wants to go to Colorado Springs and see her folks about it first. This is a genuine romance, just like a novel. Eight years ago we were lovers in Vermont and were engaged. My parents were Irish emigrants and poor, and her people were well fixed. It was agreed that I should start out to make my fortune, and that she should wait ten years for me. She has been true, and she has waited like an angel. I worked in the Chicago stock yards, prospected in Colorado and tried a dozen things on the coast.

"Six years ago I landed in Hong-Kong. At first I was clerk in a wholesale house, then secured my present place. My salary is $5,000, and I make something on the side, as you say in America. All the time I have thought of the girl and knew she was single and thinking of me, though I never heard of her. She now lives at Colorado Springs and has been visiting with friends at Helena. We met in the car at Ogden and recognized each other at once. It was a pleasant meeting. Before the train had gone 100 miles we were engaged again and will be married at her home right away."

Griffin's story was corroborated by the girl.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Natives Disappearing.

From the administrative report of the Andaman Islands for the past official year, which has recently been issued in Calcutta, it appears that the aborigines of the archipelago are disappearing so rapidly that Mr. Portman states the present generation may be considered as the last of the great Andaman tribe. All the people of Rutland Island and Port Campbell are now dead and very few remain in the South Andamans. Apart from the mortality from infectious diseases, it is said that the few children who are now born do not survive.

Mr. Portman is endeavoring to keep the tribe alive as long as possible, and he is collecting all the children at his house, where they are well fed and cared for; but this can only postpone for a short time the extinction of the race. For many centuries the people lived completely isolated from the rest of the world, but, like the Pacific Islanders, they seem unable to withstand contact with external civilization.—Galignani's Messenger.

Kept General Grant's Horses.

Sixty long years, with their sunshine and shadow, have passed since Mr. John T. Price, the well known liveryman, first saw the light of day, and all day Monday he was kept busy receiving congratulations on his golden jubilee. Mr. Price was born in Alexandria on April 11, 1842.

Having been in business at his present stand for twenty-seven years he is full of reminiscences of great Americans who patronized his fliers. Among these was General Grant, who came in one day and said: "Price, I want to take a spin over the road today. Let me have one of your fastest trotters." When the general returned he was profuse in his praise of the horse he had driven, and said:

"Price, that fellow was chain lightning itself."

General Grant's Arabian steeds, presented to him by the sultan of Turkey, were placed in Mr. Price's care when they first came here.—Washington Post.

The Dog Knew Where to Jump.

A very knowing dog got into the train which was coming down from up river, at Great Works, recently. The train started up and the dog still staid aboard. The train began to move faster and faster, until it was going at the rate of twenty miles an hour. The dog did not dare to jump. The animal got out on the lowest step. At last the train reached a swamp. He then gave a tremendous leap and landed in safety in the soft mud and water. The dog was uninjured and ran back.—Bangor News.

The Turtle Seed Tree.

Among a collection of curious plants recently received at the Kew Gardens, England, is a specimen of a curious tree from the Solomon islands. It is believed to be a new genus of the order of Sapotaceæ, to which the sapodiller of Florida belongs. The tree is known to the natives of the Solomon islands as the "turtle seed tree," on account of the close resemblance which the seeds bear to a turtle.—London Letter.

An Electric Launch.

A fine electric launch has just been built for the Earl of Dysart, which measures 55 feet in length and 8 feet 6 inches in beam. With her full equipment on board she will draw 2 feet 6 inches of water, and her speed will be 8½ to 9 miles an hour for seven hours. She is built of mahogany and teak, with omnibus seating on the roof of her capacious saloon.—New York Telegram.

A Strange Ordinance.

The city council of Salem, O., has passed an ordinance prohibiting girls from being on the streets after 8 o'clock at night. A number of the young men of the place are already preparing to leave and locate where the rights of the fair sex are not infringed upon by the city authorities.—Exchange.

A Fault in the New Coins.

"There is a very serious defect in the new silver half dollar that few people appear to have discovered," said Milton Everett, of San Antonio, Tex. "The new coin is nearly as brittle as steel. A hard blow from a hammer breaks it completely in two. You can pound all day on the coin which this one is intended to succeed and not crack it, which seems to attest a superiority of coinage in favor of the old half dollar."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

HOW TO VOTE.

THE NEW BALLOT LAW AND HOW TO USE IT.

Text of the Law and Explanatory Cuts and Sample Ticket—The Law Said to Be Safe Against Repeaters and Vote Buyers—Read It Over and File the Paper Away for Reference.

The new Australian ballot law is now in force in this state, and every voter is interested in knowing how to comply with the law in casting his ballot.

A few municipal elections have been conducted under the new plan, and others are yet to be held before the final test of the law is to be made at the fall general election. To assist voters to a proper understanding of the way to do it, we print herewith the full text of the law and illustrations of the voting booths.

Cut No. 1 shows the boxes or compartments in which the voter prepares his ballot.

Cut No. 2 shows the position of the ballot clerks, voters in the stalls, and the officers of election checking the voters as they deposit the ballots in the box near the exit. Enter with the man to the right of the cut, and get a ballot from the gentleman standing at the end of the table, provided the young man at the desk finds your name properly registered in the great register open before him.

Then walk over to one of the open stalls and mark your ballot in accordance with your wishes, and pass in front of the group at the left, and announce your name to the judges of election. When the young man sitting at the desk finds your name properly registered, you are permitted to deposit the ballot in the box and pass out. That is all there is to it. Cut No. 3 shows the ground plan of Cut No. 2, with the positions of each election officer and voter indicated.

It has been claimed by some that the new law can be beaten, and that vote buying cannot be prevented by the experiment. The following editorial from the San Francisco Examiner seems to state the case about as fairly as it can be done:

"A correspondent of the Examiner warned the California electors of the method by which the Australian ballot system was beaten in Montana. It was a variation of the 'Tasmania dodge,' a voter being bribed to bring out a ballot by substituting a piece of blank paper for the official ballot that was given him on entering the booth. In the 'Tasmania dodge' the voter was supposed to vote the blank paper, in the Montana case to tear it up. The official ballot

"But a second check, still more valuable, prevents any illicit use of the ballot even if it is taken outside. When the voter enters the booth the ballot clerks mark the check number of his ballot against his name on the printed register. When he marks the ballot he folds it with the counterfoil or tag that bears the number of the ballot exposed, and delivers the ballot to the inspector. The inspector announces the name and number, the ballot clerks verify it from their record, and the inspector tears off the tag and drops the ballot in the box. If the ballot does not bear the same number as the one he received from the ballot clerks he cannot vote.

"The California ballot system cannot be 'beaten' in this manner except by the collusion of the election officers, challengers and watchers of both parties. It is hardly possible to secure so large a number of corrupt men together, or at all events men corrupted by the same side. Whatever vote buying is done under the system will have to be carried out under the 'assistance to illiterates' provision. This will be a possible but dangerous game to play. It will require the collusion of election officers, and will be readily detected by the watchers. The November election will show whether an amendment on this point will be necessary."

The sample ballot given is intended to show how to mark votes. If a straight ticket is voted, an X in the space at the right of the party for which the voter desires to cast his ballot is sufficient. But a split ticket requires an X opposite each name voted for. Only one office is on this ticket. All are arranged in the same manner.

Lightning Kindled the Fireplace Fire.

Saturday night there was a pretty big thunderstorm. An old negro named Henry Wishum lives at 551 Jefferson street. There was no one in the house while the storm was in progress. The building was struck by lightning and the whole front of the house was torn to pieces. On the opposite side of the room was an open fireplace filled with trash, before which a screen had been placed. The lightning ignited this rubbish as nicely as a match could have done, and without setting fire to anything else in the room. When Wishum's wife returned shortly afterward she found the fire burning cheerfully.—Americus Times-Recorder.

L. C. G. Harris, of Bertha, Lake county, Cal., writes that he has discovered upon some rocks in that section a large number of painted hieroglyphics of the most interesting character. There are many hundreds of characters, and Mr. Harris, who has studied them closely, believes that he has hit upon a clew to their meaning. In the same locality he has dug up a number of arrowheads, one of which is made of abalone shell, and the characters engraved upon it are similar to those painted on the rocks.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Notice of Executor's Sale

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT IN pursuance of a power to sell, contained in the Last Will and Testament of John Allen Hannah, deceased, (which last will and testament was duly admitted to probate,) the undersigned, the Executor of the last will and testament of said deceased, will sell at private sale, to the highest bidder for cash, lawful money of the United States, and subject to confirmation by the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, on and after TUESDAY the 8th day of March, 1893, and within six months thereafter, all the right, title, interest and estate of the said John Allen Hannah, deceased, at the time of his death, and all the right, title and interest that the said estate of John Allen Hannah deceased, has, by operation of law or otherwise, acquired other than or in addition to, that of the said John Allen Hannah at the time of his death in and to those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land situate, lying and being in the County of Inyo, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to wit:

The South half of the South-east quarter and the South half of the south-west quarter of Section No. 10, and the North-east quarter of Section No. 15, all in Township No. 10 South, Range No. 34 East, M. D. M., containing 320 acres.

An undivided one-half interest of in and to that certain lot, piece, or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the said County of Inyo and particularly described as follows, to wit: Commencing at the South-east corner of the south-east quarter of North-east quarter of Section No. 18, in Township No. 13 South, Range No. 35 East, M. D. M., and running thence West eleven chains and 28-100; thence North-east following the meanderings of the bed of the Creek along its North branch to Edwards street, in the town of Independence, thence following said Edwards street along its West line to the place of beginning, six and 80-100 acres; also lot No. 4 in Block No. 9 in the town of Independence, all constituting what is known as the Reddy place.

Lots Nos. 2, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12, in Block No. 29, in the town of Independence, in the said County of Inyo, as the same appears by the official plat of the said town of Independence, now on file in the office of the County Recorder of said Inyo county, having been the residence of said John A. Halhah, deceased, at the time of his death.

Lots Nos. 2 and 4, in Block No. 22, in the town of Independence, County of Inyo, State of California, as the same appears by the official plat of the said town of Independence, now on file in the office of the County Recorder of the said Inyo county.

Two hundred feet undivided, of in and to that certain mining claim, lead, or lode, situate, lying and being in the Cerro Gordo Mining District, County of Inyo, State of California, known and designated as the "La Dispricada Lode."

That certain lot, piece, or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the County of Ventura State of California, commencing at a point twelve and nine-twentieth (12 9-20) rods south of the general corner of the North west quarter and the North-east quarter of Section No. twelve (12), and the South west quarter and the South-east quarter of Section No. one (1), in Township No. three (3) North, of Range No. twenty-one (21) West, San Bernardino Base and Meridian, running thence South sixty-eight and eleven-twentieth (68 11-20) rods; thence West twenty-three (23) rods; thence North-westerly along a small branch or swale to a point twenty four (24) rods North of the general corner of the North East quarter and the South east quarter, and the North-west quarter and the North east quarter of the North-west quarter of Section No. twelve (12), in Township No. three (3) North of Range No. twenty-one (21) West; running thence North forty-four and eleven twentieth (44 11-20) rods thence East eighty (80) rods to the place of beginning, containing thirty acres: Together with ten shares of the Capital stock of the Highland Water Company.

Bids or offers must be in writing, and will be received at the residence of the undersigned at Georges Creek, Cal., and may be left at said place, or at the office of the District Attorney, at Independence, Cal., or delivered to said Executor personally, or may be filed in the office of the Clerk of said Superior Court, at any time after the first publication of this notice, and before the making of sale.

The Executor reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Terms and conditions of sale: Cash, lawful money of the United States, ten per cent. of the purchase money to be paid to the said Executor when the sale shall be made, balance on confirmation of sale by said Superior Court. Deed at the expense of purchaser.

Estate of Joseph Fernbach—Filed affidavit of posting of notice for application for letters.

Estate of Jacob Vagt—Certificate to copy of decree setting apart homestead for use of family.

John Albers vs. Benjamin Williams—Clerk's entry of default.

TUESDAY Oct. 12th, 1892.

Estate of Jacob Vagt—Filed order of sale of personal property.

District attorney Forbes is at Bishop and vicinity.

See the notice of executors sale published this week.

S. G. Sneden Esq. spent the week at Independence.

Johnny Morton came up from Keeler yesterday, returning to-day.

Tom Webb and Harry Cook got in last night from Long Valley.

There are over eight hundred names on the Great Register.

The fall winds blew in quite a crowd of drummers during the week.

D. C. Hawes, the photographer, will go to Lone Pine in a day or two.

Sheriff Gorman went to Darwin early in the week. He is expected back to day.

Remember that if you don't register next week you don't vote. Better get there in time.

H. P. Cartier is in San Francisco attending the session of the Masonic Grand Lodge.

The Independence public school will celebrate Columbus day, October 21st, with appropriate exercises.

Mumps are making several of young men resemble the full moon. There are no serious cases, however.

Nothing but some great and unforseen catastrophe will prevent Cleveland from being the next President.

Several bands of sheep are being pastured at Camp Independence. In all there are upwards of 15,000 head.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Fitzgerald went to Lone Pine yesterday. Mr. Fitzgerald is steadily recovering from his recent illness but is still unable to walk.

P. H. Mack Esq. started for San Francisco via Mojave last Monday. He visited Bakersfield on the way and will return by way of Mono and Alpine counties.

Congressman Caminetti will arrive at Independence soon and while here will deliver an address on the political issues. Mr. Caminetti is an exceedingly able man and the best friend the miners of California ever had in Congress.

In the appointment of an election board for the Independence precinct the Supervisors acted unjustly. There are five Republicans to three Democrats, one of the latter being disqualified besides. It is certainly the intent of the law that both parties be equally represented.

Bob and Grat Dalton were shot and instantly killed while attempting to rob a bank in Kansas last week. Emmett Dalton was fatally wounded at the same time. The Daltons were cousins of the noted James brothers and through them related to the Youngers.

Alfred Tennyson, poet-laureate of England, died last Thursday morning. He was born in 1809. His death followed that of Whittier speedily. Oliver Wendell Holmes is the only one of the old time poets left. He remains after all to be "The last leaf on the tree."

LONE PINE CORRESPONDENCE.

A Lady's Opinion on the Matter of Equality.

Mrs. V. came once more to visit her friends yesterday and said to me: "Although I belong to the weaker half of the human race, I am a citizen and a tax-payer and as such I will expose some of my griefs to you. Men proclaim themselves free and independent and with egotism they deprive women of their political rights and social functions on the ground that woman's intellect is inferior to that of man. This is what they call the Law of Equality. But sir, every man, every woman, is under the general rules apt to make mistakes and the rules of humanity command us to be indulgent and to forgive. But there are also the rules of self-protection commanding us to divulge, denounce and stop every attempt made to create and impose unnecessary expenses on the public by stupid enterprises. Seeing that no male tax-payer of Lone Pine School District undertakes the task of defending our rights as tax-payers, I come to you, sir, in the hope that you will expose to the public the following injustices and illegalities.

On the 8th day of last April our county Fathers ordered that the school district of Lone Pine be empowered to issue building bonds in the sum of $7,000. Said Board entirely denied a petition signed by the citizens and electors of said district asking for the rejection of the application made by the Lone Pine School trustees concerning said bonds. It was a great lack of investigation on the part of our Supervisors and a great neglect of their official duties when they say in their preamble; "'Whereas it appears that the whole amount of bond so voted does not exceed five per cent of the taxable property of the District as shown by the last equalized assessment book of the county.'"

I honestly believe they made a great mistake. They must know that by a decision of the Supreme Court the territory of a lapsed District or the inhabitants thereof cannot be counted nor included as belonging to any other District until annexed to one or more adjoining Districts by order of the Board of Supervisors. And I say too: I have been reading carefully the proceedings of said board since the Darwin School District has lapsed, and no such annexation has been made. Therefore the lapsed Darwin District is not included in Lone Pine District, and it still remains Darwin School District.

On last April 15th two members of the Board of Trustees posted notices calling a meeting of the electors in the matter of purchasing a new school site and selling the old school site, signed only by two trustees, one member being absent. The absent member, Miguel Castro, came back two days previous to said election and went with one of his friends to sign said notice on the upper line left for that purpose in blank above the signature of the two other trustees. This act alone is a violation of their official duties. Hereunder is the opinion of the Attorney General: "'A Trustee cannot vote by proxy nor can a Trustee absent from the meeting of Trustees delegate to another the power to cast his vote and any signing by any member when not in session nullifies the document in toto.'"

At the above stated meeting a member and Clerk of the Board made an agreement to transfer a certain piece of land north of the town of Lone Pine for $400 to be the new school site. Sections 920 and 1876 of the Political Code clearly forbids any Trustee to be interested in any contract made by themselves in connection with the schools, and the same is null and void.

The Board of School Trustees has published two notices for receiving proposals for the building of two school houses. One in the Index of last Sept. 21st not to exceed $5,000. The other on Sept. 28th not to exceed $5,200. I know by good authority that the heaviest tax-payers will refuse to pay taxes for said bonds on the grounds specified in said petition and the aforesaid reasons. Now the question is, "'Who shall pay for the bonds and contractors of said building after the decision of the Supreme Court shall declare null and void the proceedings aforesaid?'"

C. MEYSAN.

Jumped at a Wrong Conclusion.

The Chronicle-Union of last week commenting on the nomination of P. H. Mack for the Assembly says that the Democrats of Mony County should have named the candidate but that Inyo county took it upon itself without regard to the wishes of Mono and that the Democrats of the latter county are displeased thereat. The following telegram will show how little the Chronicle-Union knew what it was commenting so authoritively upon:

TO CHAIRMAN INYO DEMOCRATIC CENTRAL COMMITTEE:

BODIE, Cal. September 29th.—If you have any candidate for Joint Assemblyman will cheerfully endorse him. Answer immediately. JAMES GLENN, Chairman.

Two more inane old sissies than the superannuated editors of the Chronicle Union do not exist outside of an asylum for the feeble minded.

WHERE THE DAY BEGINS

Where does the day begin? where may it be?
Not on the mountain tops, not on the sea!
Somewhere beyond them, somewhere before them,
Shines the sweet light, ere the morning breaks o'er them.
Peak that is highest, island that liest
Farthest away in the purple rimmed sea,
Where does the day begin? where may it be?

Out of the bosom of God comes the day—
Flood of his tenderness, nothing can stay!
Love that outspringing sets the world singing,
Steeples ablaze, and the silver bells ringing!
Infinite motion of infinite ocean—
Light but the symbol that broadens for aye;
Out of the bosom of God comes the day!

—James Buckham in Youth's Companion.

A New Stone Composition.

A new composition is now made from finely crushed granite, and which when formed into shapes by molding and afterward burned and hardened is to all appearances as hard and strong and durable as the solid stone itself, which it closely resembles. It is claimed by those who have brought forward this process that all kinds of ornaments for architectural purposes, such as window caps or sills, cornices, friezes, and all other articles of this nature, can be molded to accurate shapes and forms, and manufactured by this process at one-tenth the cost of cutting the same out of solid rock. They can also be vitrified so as to take on a permanent gloss as fine as polished granite, and at a mere fraction of its cost.

The composition follows closely the color and texture of the stone from which it is made, Roxbury granite making a light colored block, Quincy granite a darker one, and so on. The composition can be produced from waste stone, of course, as well as any, and the process is applicable to other stones as well as granite, the stone, of whatever description, being first crushed in a stone crusher, and afterward more finely powdered by passing between iron rollers.—New Orleans Picayune.

Gypsy Jewelry.

Like their more favored and better civilized sisters, gypsy women are represented by the best authorities to be passionately fond of jewelry, notwithstanding the fact that their extreme poverty renders it impossible for many of them to gratify this taste. Trinkets of greater or less value, according to circumstances, are worn by them, being limited in number only by the means of the wearer. If the gitana is unable to have her ornaments of gold silver jewelry will do, and if silver trinkets are beyond her means brass will suffice.

As brilliancy of color is the first consideration in a gypsy's attire, size is the chief merit of her jewels. Among the wealthier gypsies, if there be such a thing as wealth connected with the race, the Moorish, Egyptian and oriental designs find most favor. The poorer content themselves with strings of coins or cheap medals, without regard to the event or personage they are intended to commemorate, and even with rudely designed ornaments of brass made by the male artisans of their tribes. Large earrings are preferred to any other articles, and the comparatively opulent gitana indulges in bangles, beads and necklaces.—Jewelers' Weekly.

A Joke with Variations.

"You ought to get five cents' worth of chloride of lime."

"What for?"

"For a nickel."

The above was passed around freely among a number of St. Paul's citizens, and was in each case recognized as a practical joke of considerable merit. Acting upon the suggestion, a prominent merchant of this city determined to work it off on his bookkeeper, with an original variation. So he said:

"You ought to get five cents' worth of potash."

Contrary to the merchant's expectations the taciturn bookkeeper meekly bowed his head and went on footing his trial balance, while his employer retired discomfited at the affaire flambee. The next morning he received a note from his bookkeeper to this effect:

"I took the five cents' worth of potash, and I am as sick as a horse."—St. Paul Globe.

Lancing Abscesses Without Pain.

The pain caused by opening small abscesses is almost always intense, for a few moments at least, and many people naturally shrink from the surgeon's knife and prefer to bear with the troublesome visitations until they open themselves. It can not be generally known that by the use of a spray it is possible to so deaden sensibility over limited areas that such operations as lancing boils, enlarged glands, felons and the like can be done almost, if not quite, painlessly. A spray which is most effective is composed of ten parts of chloroform, fifteen parts of sulphuric ether and one part of menthol. This produces local anæsthesia in about one minute, and the same lasts for four or five minutes.—Fall River Herald.

The Animal World Well Inhabited.

In sour paste, the milt of a codfish, or even in water in which vegetables have been infused, the microscope discovers animalculi so small that millions of them would not equal the size of a grain of wheat, and yet nature, with a singular prodigality, has supplied many of these with organs as complete as those of a whale or an elephant. In a single ounce of such matter there are more living creatures than there are human beings on the face of the globe.—St. Louis Republic.

A Non-Slipping Pavement.

Lead is an excellent preventive of slipping on a flat surface, and it has now been applied with success to the tops of cover plates, hydrant boxes, and so forth, in our streets. These covers are apt to become greasy in wet weather, but by inserting plugs of lead at intervals the foot is enabled to "grip" the plate.—New York Journal.

A Costly Fit.

Mellick—Look here! Skipps, the cashier of the Sphinx National bank, has just fled with $80,000 of the deposits. He was an old and trusted employe, and the directors think he must have fled in a fit of mental aberration.

Jellick—Either that or a fit of abstraction.—Munsey's Weekly.

Flag Lore.

To "strike a flag" is to lower the national colors in token of submission.

Flags are used as the symbol of rank and command, the officers using them being called flag officers. Such flags are square to distinguish them from other banners.

A "flag of truce" is a white flag displayed to an enemy to indicate a desire for a parley or consultation.

The white flag is a sign of peace. After a battle parties of both sides often go out to the field to rescue the wounded or bury the dead under the protection of a white flag.

The red flag is a sign of defiance, and is often used by revolutionists. In our service it is a mark of danger, and shows a vessel to be receiving or discharging her powder.

The black flag is a sign of piracy.

The yellow flag shows a vessel to be at quarantine, or is the sign of a contagious disease.

A flag at half mast means mourning. Fishing and other vessels return with a flag at half mast to announce the loss or death of some of the men.

Dipping the flag is lowering it slightly and then hoisting it again to salute a vessel or fort.

If the president of the United States goes afloat the American flag is carried in the bows of his barge or hoisted at the main of the vessel on board of which he is.—Journal of Education.

The Unlettered Make Progress.

Book learning does not make 5 per cent. of that class of common sense that runs the world, transacts its business, secures its progress, trebles its power over nature, works out in the long run a rough average justice, wears away the world's restraints and lifts off its burdens. Two-thirds of the inventions that enable France to double the world's sunshine, and make old and New England the workshops of the world, did not come from colleges or from minds trained in the schools of science, but struggled up from the irrepressible instinct of untrained natural power. Her workshops, not her colleges, made England for a while the mistress of the world, and the hardest job her workmen had was to make Oxford willing he should work his wonders.

Liberty and civilization are only fragments of rights wrung from the strong hands of wealth and book learning; almost all the great truths relating to society were not the result of scholarly meditation, but have been first heard in the solemn protest of martyred patriotism and the loud cries of crushed and starving labor. When common sense and the common people had stereotyped a principle into a statute, then book men came to explain how it was discovered.—Wendell Phillips.

Stuck on the Wrong Place.

An amusing incident occurred in the postoffice recently. Stamp Clerk Lemcke had just sold a natty old gentleman a dollar's worth of "2's." The old gentleman was wondering where to put them when he accidentally put his damp fingers on the sticky side of the stamps and they began to stick together.

"Say, how do you keep these things from sticking together?" he asked.

"Rub them on your head," the clerk replied.

"Ah! that's a new scheme," said the purchaser of the stamps, and he removed his hat and began to rub them over his bald head.

"The longer we live the more we learn," he said, smiling, as he allowed the stamps to remain on his head while he paid for them and put some papers back into his coat pocket. The stamps stuck.

"There, now, that's"—he said as he reached up and tried to remove the stamps. They were sticking closer than a brother to the shiny white scalp. He tore one of them off, and he said it brought the skin. The clerks could not contain themselves, and the bald headed old gentleman slapped his hat over his head and hurried off to get a shampoo.—Savannah News.

Sharp Practice.

In the early days of this town a doctor had occasion to employ a neighbor, a lawyer, to take charge of a case. Somehow the case never got ahead any. At the close of each term of court the doctor would asked the lawyer about it, only to receive the answer, "It is continued; the other side got it continued." As the costs also continued—to increase—the doctor got uneasy, but bided his time. In the course of years the lawyer called in the doctor to cure a sore finger, which failed to heal and remained a source of annoyance. At last the lawyer, while away from home, called in another doctor, who happened to hit the case just right, and when he returned home the finger was well. As soon as he saw his old client, the doctor, he told him what the other doctor had done for him, winding up with the question, "Doctor, why didn't you cure my finger as quick as the other doctor?" The old physician, with a merry twinkle in his eye, stuttered a prompt reply: "Squire, I was j-just c-c-con-continuing it."—Camden Herald.

To Preserve Shoes.

A shoemaker on upper Broadway says that if men would adopt the English fashion of keeping their boots on trees they would get ten times the wear out of them. When the shoes are taken off they should be put on a tree at once. The leather is stretched to its full extent then, and all the wrinkles smoothed away. There is no chance for the leather to crack, as it does if the wrinkles are allowed to remain in one condition long.—New York Sun.

Mrs. Browning.

"Mrs. Browning was far more of a poet than Mr. Browning," writes Henry Labouchere, "and if it had not been that a number of silly persons were desirous to pass for clever people by pretending to understand the un-understandable in the case of the husband, and that the wife was too clear and poetical in her writings to have a gang of these esoteric worshipers around her, this would have been recognized long ago.—E. A. C.

Running In a Goat.

Policeman Cronin found a goat trying to break into a barber shop in Chicago one night. Billy had split one of the panels, and the frightened occupants of the building could be seen peering through the curtains. After a lively struggle Cronin succeeded in dragging the goat to a patrol box and summoned help. The animal was taken to the station in a patrol wagon and lodged in a cell, after being booked for burglary and resisting an officer. An hour later, when the owner of the goat called at the station, he found the animal trying to chew off the bars of a cell.

THE COLONEL'S CARRIAGE.

A Crest That Was Altogether Too Expressive to Suit the Family.

A week ago yesterday Colonel Gilkerson's new carriage came home. It was a stylish affair throughout and looked as comfortable as a government sinecure, but Mrs. Gilkerson wasn't satisfied. She didn't offer any criticisms at first, but threw out gentle hints about some additions that might be made and some points of difference between it and some other swell turnouts she had seen.

The colonel was rather proud of the vehicle, as it had been built for him and was in some minor respects constructed in accordance with ideas of his own. He felt a little nettled at the remarks of his better half, and finally stated without unnecessary circumlocution that he would like to know what in thunder she wanted anyway.

"Angelina and I have been talking it all over," said the good lady insinuatingly, "and have decided that we want a crest on it like Angelina has on her stationery."

"You have, have ye?" snorted the colonel. "Not by a jugful, Maria! I want no such infernal British nonsense on no rig that I'm a-goin to ride in."

Maria used all her persuasive powers and Angelina seconded the motion in an able and eloquent address, but all to no purpose. The female side of the house insisted and tried to press the matter to a vote, but the colonel filibustered and avoided the issue.

"You was a working girl when I married you," said he, "and I was a workingman."

Finally, however, he yielded, and the carriage was sent back. Yesterday it came home again and the colonel told the "women folks" to get ready for a drive. They were waiting when John drove up to the door and the colonel started to help them in. Both looked for the crest and both started back with cries of dismay. Then they looked at the old man. He was gazing at the sky with a peculiar expression about his mouth. Maria and Angelina began to weep and went back into the house.

The colonel pressed his lips together, entered the carriage and paraded up and down Woodward avenue half the afternoon, while passers by smiled at a design representing a shovel, an ax, a broom and a flatiron. When he got home at 4:30 Maria met him in the hallway and said she had concluded that the carriage looked better without a crest, and the colonel, stepping to the door, called to John to "drive 'er back to the shop an tell 'em to take off the frills."—Detroit Tribune.

Took the Goat Back.

The fact that goats and cows have no upper front teeth is generally unknown to city people and is even unfamiliar to a great many people who have lived all their lives in the country. A friend of mine not long since bought a goat, which he took home from this city, and an acquaintance, as a joke, told him that the animal was so old that it had lost all its upper front teeth. He laughed knowingly, but as soon as his friend was gone lost no time in examining the animal's mouth, when to his chagrin he discovered that the statement was true, and at once came back to the city to return the beast to the man from whom he had bought it. Then the fun began, for the seller of the goat took the purchaser into the yard and showed him several goats, all of whom were minus their upper front teeth. He has not yet heard the last of that goat story, and is not likely to forget the lesson he learned in natural history.—Interview in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Fishing for Deep Sea Shells.

Pearl fishing means not only fishing for pearls, but also for the shells in which they are found, the latter being really the "bread and butter" of the diver, and worth from £100 to £150 per ton. In a ton of shells there is always a quantity of seed pearls, probably a hundred or more; but good pearls are not to be reckoned on as certainties, as one man may open ten tons and not find a stone worth ten dollars, while another man make take a small fortune out of a day's gathering. The average weight of a pair of shells is two pounds.—H. P. Whitmarsh in Century.

A Nice Cool Smoke.

In the snowy regions of the Himalayas, it is said, little smoking funnels are made in the frozen snow, at the end of which is placed some tobacco, along with a piece of burning charcoal, while to the other the mountaineers place their mouths, and lying flat on their stomachs inhale the smoke of the glowing weed.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Wholesome Sorrow.

Captain—How many requests for furlough are there?

Sergeant—Twenty-one.

"What! So many? What reasons are usually given?"

"In almost all cases the death of a grandmother."—London Tit-Bits.

A Larger Denomination.

Judge (to prisoner)—Did you ever turn an honest penny?

Prisoner—No; but I turned some five dollar gold pieces once.—Kate Field's Washington.

Pills the Size of Baseballs.

Nine men had to hold a patient with ropes the other day while a dose of medicine was administered. The dose consisted of three pills, each the size of a baseball, and the patient was the hippopotamus Caliph, in Central park, New York, who was suffering from a stomach ache. The medicine comprised 2,940 grains of aloes and 40 drops of croton oil, combined with linseed oil and ginger, and the pills were forced down Caliph's throat with a policeman's club. The patient speedily recovered.—Yankee Blade.

A PROFITABLE TALK.

OUR SPECIAL REPORTER SECURES THE FACTS.

He Determined to Thoroughly Investigate a Subject that is Causing Much Comment, and He Has Succeeded.

(N. Y. Sun)

Two days ago one of the most prominent professional men in New York published a letter so outspoken, so unusual as to cause extensive talk and awaken much comment. Yesterday I interviewed the gentleman as to the contents of the letter, and he fully confirmed it in every respect. He not only did this but he also mentioned a number of unusual cases which had come under his observation in which little less than a miracle had been performed.

So important has the entire subject become, that I determined to investigate it to the bottom, and accordingly called upon Mr. Albert G. Eaves, the prominent costumer at No. 63 East Twelfth street, the gentleman mentioned in my interview with the doctor yesterday. Mr. Eaves has made quite a name. A complete knowledge of history, an appreciation of art and reliability are essential in his profession.

"Mr. Eaves," I said, "I learn that your wife has had a most unusual experience; are you willing to describe it?"

The gentleman thought a moment and an expression of pleasure passed over his face. "When I think," he said, "of what my wife once passed through and the condition she is in to-day, I cannot but feel gratitude. Nearly three years ago she was at the point of death. You can understand how sick she was when I say she was totally blind and lay in a state of unconsciousness. Three doctors attended her and all agreed that her death was only a question of hours, perhaps minutes."

"May I ask what the doctors called her trouble?"

"Uræmia and puerperal convulsions, so you can imagine how badly she must have been. At last one doctor (it was Dr. R. A. Gunn) said that as she was still able to swallow one more attempt might be made and a medicine was accordingly given her. She seemed to improve at once; in a few days her sight was restored. 'I have had a long, long sleep,' she said, upon recovering consciousness, and I am rejoiced to say that she was restored to perfect health wholly through the use of Warner's Safe Cure, which was the remedy we administered when she was past all consciousness."

I looked at Mr. Eaves as he said this. His face was beaming with satisfaction. He continued:

"The physician told us, after my wife's recovery, that she could never endure childbirth, and yet we have a fine boy nearly a year old, and do not know what sickness is. I attribute it all to the wonderful power of Warner's Safe Cure. Why, my sister, who resides in Virginia, was, awhile ago, afflicted precisely as my wife had been. I at once advised her to use this same great remedy; it cured her promptly."

"You find that it is specially adapted for women, do you?" I inquired.

"By no means. I have known it to be wonderful in its power in the case of gentlemen to whom I have recommended it. I speak from my experience entirely, and you should not be surprised that I am so firm a believer in this discovery, which has done so much for me."

I was not surprised. I saw by every word, by every look, that Mr. Eaves meant all he said. I had ample confirmation of Dr. Gunn's letter and interview, and I do not wonder that people who have seen such things, who have watched their dearest friends go down into the dark valley and be brought back into the light, should be both enthusiastic and grateful. I, myself, caught the spirit, and I shall be glad if the investigations I have made prove of profit to those who may read them.

In Oregon last year 1800 bales of hops were produced. The Salem Statesman says that owing to increased acreage the output this year will be much greater, while the crop is much better quality than last season.

THE LOTTERY OBEYS THE LAW.

In view of the contradictory rumors circulated regarding the intentions of the Louisiana State Lottery Company, and in order to accurately answer numerous inquiries, a representative of the Times-Democrat yesterday interviewed Mr. Paul Conrad, the President of the company, with the result expressed below:

Reporter—Mr. Conrad, it was asserted some weeks ago in the Northern newspapers, and the statement has since been revived recently, that the company is about to remove to Nicaragua, and there, under a Government franchise, open up the business on a grander scale?

President Conrad—I have heard something of this, but there is no foundation for it. The company has officially stated that it bows to the decision of the Supreme Court and will respect the laws.

Reporter—Then have you no plans of future action?

President Conrad—I cannot state the case more strongly than was done at the time the company decided not to attempt to obtain a renewal of its charter. I can only repeat that the company will continue in business until the expiration of its present charter and then cease to exist. I cannot understand, after all that has been said, why there should be any confusion in the public mind about the matter.

Reporter—Have you any objection to my stating this as a finality for the satisfaction of the public?

President Conrad—None whatever.

Reporter—Some of the Eastern papers Mr. Conrad, persistently assert that the lottery company continues to use the United States mails in the prosecution of its business; will you kindly tell me if that is true?

President Conrad—It is utterly untrue. We are obeying the law in its letter and spirit, and our agents everywhere are instructed to obey it. We are using the express companies only in our business, and in all our circulars are printed instructions to all persons dealing with us to avoid the mails.—Times-Democrat, New Orleans, (La.)

RIGHT OR WRONG.

Which will ye have? It does seem as if some folks prefer to have the last condition of the liver rather than the first. They perpetually dose themselves with purgatives totally without virtue as alterative of liver trouble. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the successful candidate for the people's choice, and yet, popular and well known as it is, there are unfortunates who keep on trying the drastic remedies of former days. It is to the intelligent portion of the public that the well-known and long tried properties of the Bitters appeal. Reason should be guided by experience in the matter of medication. "The best guide to our feet is the lamp of experience," said a great patriot of the early revolutionary period, and the exclamation is pregnant with truth. For over a third of a century the Bitters daily has met with the endorsement of people suffering from liver complaint, malaria, constipation, rheumatism, debility and troubles accompanied by dyspepsia. Latterly it has declared itself and been thoroughly approved as a remedy for "la grippe."

Rather risky—the offer that's made by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Risky for them. For you, if you have Catarrh, it's a certainty. You're certain to be cured of it, or to be paid $500. That's what they offer, and in good faith—they cure you, or pay you, no matter how bad your case, or of how long standing.

But—is it so much of a risk? They have a medicine that cures Catarrh, not for a time, but for all time. They've watched it for years, curing the most hopeless cases. They know that in your case there's every chance of success, almost no chance of failure.

Wouldn't any one take such a risk with such a medicine?

The only question is—are you willing to make the test, if the makers are willing to take the risk?

If so, the rest is easy. You pay your druggist fifty cents and the trial begins.

THE BRAVE.

But best befriended of the God,
He who in evil times,
Warned by an inward voice,
Heeds not the darkness and the dread,
Biding by his rule and choice,
Feeling only the fiery thread
Leading over the heroic ground,
Walled with mortal terror round,
To the aim which him allures,
And the sweet heaven his deed secures.

LOVE AND STARS.

When I watched the flock upon the Luberon I remained whole weeks without seeing a living soul, alone in the pasturage with my dog Labri and my sheep. From time to time the hermit of Mont de l'Ure passed there to look for medicinal herbs, or I saw the black face of some Piedmont collier; but they were simple souls, silent by dint of solitude, having lost the taste for talking and knowing nothing of what was said down in the villages and towns. Hence every two weeks, when I heard upon the ascending highway the bells of our farm mule, bringing me my provisions for the coming fortnight, and saw gradually appear from below the lively countenance of the little farm boy or the red locks of old Aunt Norade, I was indeed delighted. I made the visitor tell me the news of the country at the foot of the mountain—the baptisms, the marriages, but that which interested me most of all was what had happened to my master's daughter, our Demoiselle Stephanette, the prettiest girl for ten leagues around.

Without appearing to be too much bent upon acquiring this knowledge I gathered information as to whether she went a great deal to fetes and evening assemblies; whether new admirers were still thronging about her, and should you ask me what good those details could do me, a poor shepherd of the mountain, I will reply that I was 20 years old, and that Stephanette was in my eyes the handsomest creature on the face of God's earth.

Now, one Sunday when I was waiting for my provisions, it so chanced that they did not arrive until very late. In the morning I said to myself: "It is the fault of the high mass;" then toward noon a heavy storm came on and I thought that the mule had been unable to set out because of the bad condition of the road. At last, about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the sky having cleared and the mountain being all of a glitter with water and sunlight, I heard, amid the droppings from the leaves and the overflowing of the swollen brooks, the bells of the mule, as gay and brisk as a grand church chime on Easter day.

But it was neither the little farm boy nor old Aunt Norade who was urging the animal along. It was—guess who! our demoiselle, my friends—our demoiselle herself, seated right between the osier baskets, all rosy with the mountain air and the coolness brought on by the storm.

The little farm boy was sick; Aunt Norade was absent on a holiday visit to her children. Pretty Stephanette told me all this as she sprang down from her mule, and also that she was late in arriving because she had lost her way. But to see her so finely dressed, with her flowered ribbons, her brilliant skirt and her lace, she had rather the air of having lingered at some dance than of having sought for her road among the bushes.

Oh, the delicious creature! My eyes could not grow weary of gazing at her. It is true that I had never seen her so near. Sometimes during the winter, when the flock had gone down into the plain and I had returned in the evening to the farmhouse to sup, she passed briskly through the hall, without talking much to the servants, always bedecked and a trifle haughty. Now I had her there before me, for myself alone. Was it not enough to turn my head?

When she had taken the provisions from the basket Stephanette began to look curiously around her. Raising a little her Sunday skirt, that might otherwise have become stained with mud, she entered the fold. She wished to see the corner where I slept, the pile of straw that was my bed, my sheepskin covering, my big cape hung against the wall, my crook in my flintlock gun. All this amused her.

"So it is here you live, is it, my poor shepherd?" said she, with a heavenly smile. "How tired you must get of always being alone. What do you do? What do you think about?"

I had a strong desire to reply, "About you, mistress," and I should have told the truth, but my confusion was so great that I could not find a single word. I think she noticed this, and that the mischievous creature took pleasure in redoubling my embarrassment with her roguery.

"And your sweetheart, shepherd?" continued she. "Does she climb up here to see you sometimes? Surely she must be the Golden Goat or the Fairy Esterelle, who skips only over the summits of the mountains." And she herself, as she spoke thus to me, had the very air of the Fairy Esterelle, with her lovely head thrown back, the pearly laughter rippling from her cherry lips, and her haste to depart that made her visit seem like a dazzling vision.

"Adieu, shepherd!"

"Adieu, mistress!"

And she was gone, bearing away with her the empty baskets.

When the descending road hid her from sight it seemed to me that the stones rolling beneath the shoes of the mule were falling one by one upon my heart. I heard them a long, long time, and until the close of the day I was like one wrapped in a sweet slumber, fearing to stir lest I might drive away my dream.

Toward evening, as the depths of the valley began to grow blue and as the sheep huddled together, bleating to return to the fold, I heard some one call me down the road and saw reappear our demoiselle, no longer smiling as I had seen her a short time before, but trembling with cold, fear and wet. It seems that at the base of the mountain she had found the Sorgue terribly swollen by the recent rain, and that in making a desperate effort to cross it she had nearly been drowned.

The most dreadful thing of all was that at this hour of the night she could not think of attempting to return to the farm, for our demoiselle by herself could never find the way by the short cut and I could not leave the flock. The idea of passing the night upon the mountain tormented her almost to madness, particularly on account of the uneasiness her family would feel. As for me, I reassured her the best I was able.

"In July the nights are short, mistress," said I. "It will hardly seem more than a wretched moment."

And I quickly kindled a roaring fire to dry her feet and her dress all soaked with the water of the Sorgue. Afterward I placed before her milk and sheep's milk cheese, but the poor damsel did not think either of warming herself or of eating, and at the sight of the big tears that gathered in her eyes I felt like weeping myself.

Meanwhile the night had come on apace. There remained upon the crests of the mountains only a sprinkle of sun, a vapory light toward the west. I invited our demoiselle to enter the fold and sleep. Having spread a handsome new sheepskin over the clean straw, I bade her good night, and, going out into the open air, seated myself before the door. God is my witness that, despite the fire of love that was scorching my blood, no evil thought came to me, nothing but an overpowering pride on thinking that in a corner of the fold, close beside the curious flock that stared at her as she lay asleep, my master's daughter—like a sheep more precious and whiter than all the rest—was reposing, intrusted to my care.

Never had the heavens appeared to possess such depths, never had the stars seemed so brilliant. Suddenly the door of the fold opened and pretty Stephanette made her appearance. She could not sleep. The animals rattled the straw as they moved about, or bleated in their dreams. She preferred to come to the fire. Seeing this, I cast my sheepskin over her shoulders. I stirred up the flames and we sat down side by side, remaining thus without uttering a single word.

If you have ever passed a night in the open air you know that at the hour when we sleep a mysterious world awakes amid the solitude and the silence. Then the brooks sing in their clearest tones and the ponds are lighted up with tiny flames. All the spirits of the mountain freely come and go; there is a rustling in the air, there are almost imperceptible sounds, as if we heard the tree branches growing and the grass springing up. Day is the life of creatures, but night is the life of things. When one is not accustomed to this it fills one with fear. Therefore our demoiselle was all of a quiver and clung to me closely at the slightest noise.

At one time, a long melancholy cry arose from the pond that sparkled below us and came rolling upward to our ears. At the same instant a beautiful shooting star glided over our heads in the same direction, as if the lamentation we heard were bearing a flash of light with it.

"What is that?" asked Stephanette, in a whisper.

"A soul entering paradise, mistress!" answered I making the sign of the cross.

She made the same sign and, for a moment, gazed meditatively into the heavens. Then she said to me:

"Is it true, shepherd, that you people are magicians?"

"Not in the least, our demoiselle. But here we live much nearer the stars than the people of the plain, and know better what is taking place among the sparkling lights of heaven!"

She was still gazing upward, resting her head against one of her hands, and wrapped in the sheepskin like a little heavenly shepherd.

"Ah, how beautiful they are!" cried she. "I never saw so many of them before! Do you know their names, shepherd?"

"Yes, indeed, mistress! Listen: Right above us is St. Jacques' highway. It goes from France straight into Spain. It was St. Jacques de Galice who traced it to show his road to the brave Charlemagne when he was making war upon the Saracens. Further away you have the Car of Souls, with its four replendant axletrees. The three stars in front are the three horses, and that tiny one almost against the third is the car driver. Do you see all around that shower of falling stars? They are the souls the good God does not want in heaven.

"A little lower is the Hayrack or the Three Kings. The stars forming it serve as our clock. I have only to glance at them to know that it is now after midnight. A little lower yet, still looking toward the south, shines Jean de Milan, the torch of the stars. Regarding that star this is what the shepherds relate: It appears that one night Jean de Milan, with the Three Kings and the Ponciniere, was invited to the wedding of a star, one of their friends. The Ponciniere, more in a hurry than the rest, started, they say, the first of all and took the high road. Look at her up there away in the midst of the heavens.

"The Three Kings went by a lower road and overtook her, but lazy Jean de Milan, who had slept too late, was left behind, and, in order to stop them, in his fury he threw his stick at them. That is why the Three Kings are also called Jean de Milan's Stick. But the most beautiful of all the stars—mistress—is ours, the Shepherd's Star, that lights us at dawn when we drive forth our flocks, and also in the evening when we bring them back. We have given it another name, Maguelonne, the beautiful Maguelonne, who runs after Pierre de Provence and marries him every seven years."

"What, shepherd! Are there then marriages among the stars?"

"Yes, indeed, mistress!"

And, as I was striving to explain to her what these marriages were, I felt something cool and soft weigh lightly upon my shoulder. It was her head, heavy with sleep, that was leaning against me, with a pretty rustling of ribbons, lace and wavy hair. She remained thus without stirring until the moment when the stars of heaven paled, effaced by the dawning day.

As for me, I beheld her sleeping, somewhat troubled, but fully protected by the bright night that has never given me other than pure thoughts. Around us the stars continued their silent march as docile as a vast flock, and at times I imagined that one of those stars—the prettiest and most brilliant of them all—having lost its way, had come to me and placed its head upon my shoulder that it might slumber in peace.—Alphonse Daudet in Philadelphia News.

A Rising Humorist.

Tom Masson, of the American Press Association, is beginning to attract attention by his humorous paragraphs, peculiar for their clearness and perspicuity. Mr. Masson is also a remarkably apt versifier in a light and playful vein. His efforts in this line have been widely copied. In his short career of 22 years he has visited nearly all the countries in the civilized world, and has thereby gained a wide and valuable experience. In personal appearance Mr. Masson is below the average size, has black hair and an olive complexion. His philosophy is just a trifle pessimistic, still he manages to successfully infuse a good deal of genial humor and optimism into his work.—Current Literature.

A KING'S FRIEND.

A Young Ohio Farmer Whose Misfortunes Led Him Into Clover.

HONORS HEAPED UPON HIS HEAD.

An American, the Confidential Adviser of the King of Wurtemberg.—He is Now Baron Von Jackson.

Probably very few Americans are aware that the kingdom of Wurtemberg, belonging to the great empire of Germany, is ruled, indirectly of course, by an American, or more properly speaking, by an ex-American. This, as all other royal secrets, is very well known to the people, but, not wishing to form a two years' intimate acquaintance with the "Zuchthaus," they wisely keep their mouths closed. But it is nevertheless a fact. Richard W. Jackson, who holds what some may consider a position, was born in Steubenville, O. His father, who is a farmer at that place, was cousin of the famous Stonewall Jackson. Like nearly all farmers' sons, he toiled on the old farm and attended the village schools, and afterward entered one of the Ohio colleges, but being of a decidedly musical taste, and having exceptional talent, he decided to make music his profession, and toward that end he left the college he was attending before graduating, and went to the city of Stuttgart, capital of Wurtemberg, which is celebrated the world over for its conservatory.

Here he devoted himself diligently to his music and to acquiring the German language with great success, when an accident occurred that for a while seemed to blot the entire future of this ambitious American. The muscles of his hand from constant practice became paralyzed, making it utterly impossible for him to continue his musical studies. Friendless, almost penniless, in a strange country, forced to renounce that which he had been striving so hard to gain, his position was anything but a happy one.

While in this embarrassing predicament a good angel, in the person of Mr. P. S. Potter, of Boston, appeared. Mr. Potter was appointed United States consul at Stuttgart by President Grant in July, 1875, and upon reaching his post and taking charge looked around for a competent clerk, and becoming acquainted with Mr. Jackson offered him the position, which was, as can be imagined, gladly accepted. Nor did it prove an unwise selection. Mr. Jackson devoted himself to his new duties as industriously and energetically as he had done to his music. After being in the office for about a year Mr. Potter appointed Jackson United States vice consul, and he was confirmed by the secretary of state.

As vice consul Mr. Jackson did his duties ably and patriotically and out of office hours, music being denied him, used to take long walks in the many beautiful parks of which Stuttgart has a large number. During these walks Mr. Jackson often met the king, sometimes on foot, sometimes riding, and upon these occasions would politely raise his hat to the king and bow, who would as politely return the bow.

TAKEN UP BY THE KING.

The king seemed to be attracted by the American's manner and politeness and made inquiries as to who he was and then requested a personal interview. In answer to this invitation Mr. Jackson visited the king at his palace, and made such an impression upon his majesty that he was asked to resign his commission as vice consul of the United States and become one of the royal court. Jackson, with American shrewdness, wished to make a good bargain secure, and toward that end had sundry important and carefully worded documents drawn up and signed by each. He thereupon resigned his position as vice consul, renounced his American citizenship and swore allegiance to the king of Wurtemberg and the emperor of Germany.

He returned to his modest boarding house to pack his few effects and be called for by the royal coach, with footmen gorgeous in shining livery. Upon his appearance they bowed and kept on bowing until he was comfortably seated, and then the coach whirled away to the Koenigliches Schloss, where a suit of five apartments, luxuriously furnished, awaited him, and a host of footmen stood ready for his call. This sounds more like an "Arabian Nights" tale than the truthful account of an occurrence in a civilized country like Germany.

A large annual stipend was settled upon Mr. Jackson for life, and, as there was no court vacancy, one was created, namely, "Reader to his majesty," to meet the emergency. Only two other crowned heads have court readers, the emperor of Germany and Queen Victoria, and therefore by one being created in Wurtemberg the honor for Mr. Jackson was considered exceptional. It was not long before other honors began to come. The king of Holland presented him with the "Knight's Cross of the Golden Lion of Nassau," the order of the house of Luxembourg. The king of Saxony, then visiting Stuttgart, was so highly pleased with the ex-American that he bestowed on him the "Knight's Cross of the Albert Order."

The Emperor Joseph of Austria invested him with the very ancient "Order of the Iron Crown of Austria," one of the highest gifts that the Austrian monarch can bestow. The king of Wurtemberg, about a month after Mr. Jackson's appearance in court, conferred on him the title of "Geheimer Holrath," and made him his privy counselor, and a few weeks later gave him the "Knight's Cross of the Crown of Wurtemburg," besides making him a baron.

This was in 1881. Since then titles, honors and presents innumerable have been received by Mr. Jackson, or rather Baron von Jackson. In the royal stables are magnificent Arabian steeds at his disposal; everything that heart could wish or mind suggest is his for the asking. It is not strange, then, that the king, with his peculiar infatuation for Mr. Jackson, should be completely swayed by his influence and is in all matters almost completely guided by him. They are constant companions, and although he is bitterly hated by all those noble born aristocrats over whose heads he has jumped, they must hide their chagrin and treat him with the greatest respect and consideration, or else incur the royal displeasure.

The crown prince also hates Jackson, so when the present King Karl dies Mr. Jackson will be forced to leave the royal palace; but that is all, for his titles, income, orders, etc., cannot be taken away. They are as stable and strong as the kingdom itself.

This ex-American is now about 45 years old, 5 feet 8 inches high, heavily set, weighing about 200 pounds, broad shouldered, square faced, with brown mustache and hair. His eyes are blue and have rather a pleasing expression, but altogether he is certainly far from handsome. He is an excellent conversationalist, well educated, and withal a perfect gentleman in deportment.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Aerophor.

In weaving sheds a humid atmosphere is of equal importance, otherwise there is a continual breaking of threads and other prejudicial occurrences. The necessary diffusion of moisture has hitherto been secured at the expense of the comfort, and even the health of the factory hands, by the projection of steam into the atmosphere and by dampening the floors with water. In either case damage is caused to the machinery and buildings, while an unhealthy atmosphere is created in which the operatives are obliged to work. In order to obviate all this the aerophor has been invented by a German engineer, and is largely in use in Germany. The aerophor is an apparatus for distributing moisture in the form of a very fine water cloud, which may be either cold or warm. The apparatus, which is not large, contains no movable parts, and a single pressure pump can work any number of aerophors.

The contrivance, which is fixed just under the ceiling at given points, consists of two separate nozzles, one for propelling the air by creating an induced current, and the other for moistening it. A jet of water under pressure is projected through a horizontal nozzle into a casing in which there is a vertical nozzle. The jet from the horizontal nozzle causes the induced current of air to act upon the water entering the casing at its upper part through the vertical nozzle. The water is passed into the atmosphere in the form of a fine diffusive cloud, the large drops of water being caught and retained by the apparatus. The aerophor will only project into the atmosphere such particles of water as are capable of being absorbed immediately, so that damage to the machinery or fabric is impossible. In the same way, the atmosphere not being super-saturated, there is no injury to health.—London Times.

Educate the Girls.

"Educate the girls," says an exchange, "and the boys will soon be there." They will, indeed, if the girls are tolerably good looking. And they won't wait until the course of instruction is fully completed either. I have known a young man to get more than half through his courting before he thought to ask his girl whether she had any education or not. So it won't do to depend too much on such maxims as the above; they are apt to mislead. Should the father of an attractive daughter defer her education, thinking that the boys would keep away in consequence, he would find that he had made a mistake. They will come just as readily as they would were she a whole female seminary of learning.

Then, on the other hand, if you push the education of a homely, disagreeable girl with the utmost diligence, will the boys "be there?" Not much they won't. They will go around the corner and sit up with the pretty girl who never saw the inside of a school house in her life. This is perhaps wrong, but it is the way the world goes with the young and thoughtless. When Adam was courting the fair Eve, did he inquire what seminary she graduated from? Did he examine her in arithmetic, English grammar, logic, geography and the use of the globes? Of course he didn't. He didn't care a cent whether she knew beans or not. She wasn't educated, and yet Adam was there, Eli. Education is a very good thing for girls to have, but you can't bank on it altogether in winning husbands.—Texas Siftings.

Coughing and Sneezing.

Nurses have to deal with many cases in which the effort and muscular contraction caused by the exertions of sneezing, coughing and hiccoughing are very weakening and trying to be patient. Sneezing is produced by both external and internal causes. Externally, by particles of irritating dust in the air and sometimes by sunlight, or intense color; internally, by disordered nervous conditions, and it is commonly associated with whooping cough, asthma and gout. Pressure upon the fifth nerve will often temporarily prevent sneezing—as pinching the upper lip under the nose. The application of mustard to the back of the neck will often relieve it; and in violent cases an emetic has been used with good results.

Coughing may be relieved in a variety of ways—and, again, every attempt may avail nothing; but the nurse should pay especial attention to the posture of the person, and learn that position which most removes the tendency to frequent coughing. Again, coughing may be induced by a tickling sensation in the throat, which some very simple soothing mixture or drink may relieve, as slippery elm tea, Irish moss, licorice, etc. Then, too, many persons cough from habit. Many times a little exercise of will would postpone the effort.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Tanned Human Skin.

"The outrage at Canyon City reminds me of a man's skin which I once saw tacked to the walls of a log house at Fort Halleck," said Col. Hoyt at the Albany hotel. "The work had been artistically done and reminded me more of a gigantic animal skin stretched out to dry. The man had been caught in a dastardly act at the fort and a bullet from the commandant put a very sudden end to his career. The skin was left for many months on the wall of the hut, but was finally carried off, piece by piece, by relic hunters. The body was chucked into a barrel, which was placed on the prairie about 100 feet from the trail leading to the west. As time passed a deep path was worn by travelers leaving the public road to take a glance at the strange contents of the barrel."—Denver News.

Atmospheric Washings.

In five years of observation at Lincoln, New Zealand, Mr. George Gray has found that the amount of impurity washed down from the air by the rain depends more on the number of showers than on the total rainfall. An acre of land at Lincoln receives annually (in 28.9 inches of rain) about 175 pounds of dissolved matter, including 60.5 pounds of chlorine, 15 pounds of sulphuric anhydride, and a little more than 2 pounds of nitrogen. Nearness to the sea explains the high proportion of chlorine.—Arkansaw Traveler.

HYBRID FLOWERS.

A Small Town on Long Island That Teems With Beautiful Blossoms.

THE LOVELY BLOOMS OF ASTORIA.

A Million Plants Under Glass.—Supplying New York With Flowers.—Forcing and Hybridization.

To one in search of poesy or anything above the dull level of the commonplace, probably the last spot which would suggest itself as likely to yield it would be the typical, prosaic Long Island town. Yet one of these, and one of the most prosaic at that, is—paradoxical as it may appear—a veritable land of flowers. Astoria teems with lovely, though hidden blooms.

If the flowers which the florist's jealous care covers from the inclement weather were left exposed, they would spread over thousands of acres, and make of the little town a garden of loveliness.

For eight months in the year the daily supply of flowers to this city amounts to $15,000 worth, while on special occasions, such as Easter and other holidays, the amount is nearly doubled, and the greater part of this supply comes from Long Island.

The largest of the Astoria nurseries stands just within the limits of the village. The wide expanse of turf around it is dotted with no less than thirty-one greenhouses, whose glistening roofs comprise some 75,000 square feet of glass.

The hybridization of plants to form new specimens is in no small measure dependent on chance. The method employed is in itself simple, and consists of dusting the pollen from the bloom of one plant upon the stigma of the other, the result being a flower partaking of the characters of both. The incidental circumstances, however, are almost impossible to regulate, save by scientific application and the minutest care. The selection of two plants which are liable to join, is, in itself, a test of the floriculturist's skill, and this being achieved, the temperature must be regulated to the convenience of the plants, and the dryness or moisture of the atmosphere carefully watched. Yet, in spite of all precautions, and for no apparent reason, the attempted hybridization is often a failure. Some of the best discoveries ever made in this branch of horticulture have been brought about accidentally, the beautiful chrysanthemum called Mrs. Alpheus Hardy being the result of one of these fortunate blunders.

FORCING BLOSSOMS AND FRUIT.

Another problem which has from time immemorial busied the nurserymen is the question of producing blooms or fruit at stated periods by forcing, in defiance of natural laws, and although this has not yet been reduced to a certain law, important improvements have been made. A skillful gardener can, by the regulation of heat, moisture and fertilizers, considerably advance or retard the production of any plant. In Japan, where floriculture has attained to scientific heights as yet unknown in America, the precise day can be fixed for the blossoming or fruition.

Only a vast experience can foretell the degree of heat necessary to a plant, and in all nurseries the greatest precautions are utilized to insure success. In the nurseries referred to, more than 40,000 feet of pipe are used for heating, while a windmill pumps 20,000 gallons of water daily for use in the hothouses. The regulation of heat varies with the nature of the plant. The difference of temperature between individual hothouses is marked; for, while in one there will be 100 degs. or more of dry, parching heat, the next will be almost cold, and the air of another may be heavy with a moist heat which turns it into a vapor bath.

The amount of forcing also varies with different species of plants, some thriving under it and displaying marvelous beauties which they never attain in their native state, while others, like the slender Dendrobium Thyrsiflorum, refuse to depart from ordinary laws and die when artificial means are applied. The plants are watered every day, and in some cases twice or three times a day. This alone takes up a considerable amount of the workmen's time, but it is not the only attention claimed by them. A daily round must be made in each greenhouse and each one of the growths investigated, certain plants clipped or grafted and weeds and withered leaves removed from all.

To the floriculturist flowers have no romance. Their cultivation to him is a mere matter of commercial value, and the sight of a florist and his apprentices seizing delicate plants by the handful and pulling them hither and thither always fills the layman with alarm.

A MILLION PLANTS UNDER GLASS.

Each of the spacious hothouses is devoted to a single plant and its varieties, and the whole number aggregates nearly 1,000,000 plants. This firm handles more ferns than any house in the country, and it sends out over 100,000 ferns annually. All sorts and conditions of ferns are represented, and from the well known Adiantium, or maidenhair, to the Dixona, or tree fern, which frequently sells for $50.

The other hothouses contain a prismatic gradation of colors, from the pale yellow of jonquils to the burning orange of the large amaryllis, and from the dazzling white azalea to its richest deep red shade. Of course, roses are plentifully represented; the well known La France is here; also the majestic American beauty, and the newer varieties which have superseded these in popular favor, as the Bride, Puritan, William Francis Bennett and Mme. Holstie. The fashion in roses, like every other, is subject to fads, and their prices are greatly affected in consequence. When a rose is "the rage" the smallest plant, as it sprouts in the tiny pots known as "thumb pots," is worth from $1 to $2; while later, when its popularity is on the wane, the same plant fetches barely five or ten cents.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The Story of Two Novels.

Two friends of mine spent each of them the best part of the year 1888 in writing and revising a novel apiece. Both stories were published by leading houses during the early part of 1889. They were well advertised, skillfully handled, and both novels are, according to the popular acceptance of the term, successful—that is, they have been widely written about, paragraphed in the press from one end of the country to another, English editions have been printed of each, and to every literary person the names of both novels and authors are thoroughly familiar. Now, what have the authors received in hard cash for their year's work? I will tell you exactly: Of one, 1,700 copies were sold; no royalty was paid on the first thousand to cover manufacture, etc., and upon the remaining 700 copies the author received the regular 10 per cent. royalty.

The book sold for $1. The net revenue to the author was therefore $70. His type writer's bill was $61.50. Net profit, $8.50, and the book has stopped selling. The other author was a trifle more fortunate in that his novel reached a sale of 2,000, all but five copies. Like the first he received a 10 per cent. royalty only after the first thousand copies. Unfortunately, he bought so many copies of his books for friends that, when his publisher's statement came, it showed a credit in his favor of just $39.50. Had he type written his manuscript, the novel would have thrown him into debt! And these are but two of a score of instances within my knowledge that I could cite.—Edward W. Bok in Ladies' Home Journal.

Relief for Hiccough.

Hiccough is most frequently a symptom of stomach or abdominal disturbance, but it may be purely nerve irritation independently of this. It may be produced by the presence of indigestible or highly spiced food in the stomach or by very warm foods or drinks. It may be slight or persistent. When occurring in typhoid fever, cholera, meningitis or peritonitis, it is a grave symptom. The mild attacks are relieved by holding the breath for as long as is consistent. Very warm applications on the lower portion of the back of the neck or over the diaphragm sometimes afford relief, and pressing hard upon one of the muscles of the neck which reaches from the inner border of the upper portion of the first rib behind the "collar bone" upward and backward to the vertebra of the neck has been known to check this distressing symptom.

Infants vomit with perfect ease; children make it no difficult task; but adults in general find it very hard work. In many conditions it is well to induce vomiting. This may be the case when it is desired to dislodge false membranes in croup or diphtheretic deposits and other substances from the air passages. Again, if a poison has been swallowed, frequently the best thing that you can do is to induce vomiting at once. The quickest way, when it can be done, is by forcing the finger of the patient down his throat, gagging as it is sometimes termed. Tickling the throat with a feather will often produce vomiting.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Esquimaux Superstitions.

Esquimaux are believers in ghosts. They also believe in the transmigration of souls, that spirits return in animals, winds, rocks, ice and water, that they are evil, angry or good, as the elements may be favorable or unfavorable, and that they can be appeased by hoodoo rites, if the performer is sufficiently versed in occult sciences. Childless women, it is claimed, cannot return to the surface of the earth after death. To change the wind, for instance, they chant, drum and howl against it, build fires, shoot against it, and, as a last resource, fire the graves of the dead. Tribes put hoodoos on each other by ceremonial dances and howling. The hoodoo of total destruction upon neighbors is the building of a fire within sight of those coming under their displeasure. Tribal relations are severed by making a fire outside and burning all ornaments or disguises used in ceremonial dances, such as raven skins, eagle tails, deer horns and masks. Tribes that are hoodooed answer by a return hoodoo, but with families and individuals it is different. Outlawed by their tribe or relations, they become discouraged, hopeless and gloomy, and literally "go off and die."—Sitka Letter.

Another Use for the Phonograph.

Mrs. Abram Altman, of Buffalo, owns a most ferocious looking bloodhound made of bronze. The animal was purchased from a Boston woman, who had it made to do service as a burglar alarm. It is large, and in its diaphragm she had a phonograph set. She then borrowed a neighbor's dog to bark into the machine to load it. The bark did not exactly correspond with the appearance of the big bronze dog, but she thought it would frighten burglars, for she said the dog's bark would be worse than his bite anyway. And so she set up her brazen image, with its full set of phonographic howls and patent insides, and had it connected with her room by wires and electric button, so that when the burglars made their appearance she could just touch the button and the dog would do the rest. But the burglars did not come, and when the old lady died the dog burglar alarm, as it was called, was shipped to this city.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

New Castle's Black Ghost.

The east end of New Castle is all torn up over the appearance of a ghost, which has been seen strolling about the school house grounds for several nights recently. The mysterious stranger has not had the boldness to speak to any one as yet, but, on the contrary, seems shy; yet the small boys in that vicinity who have to run errands after dark have begun to consider life a dismal failure, and threaten to run off with the first circus or trained bear that comes along. His, her or its ghostship, as the case may be, is remarkable in being coal black in color, instead of the conventional white. The only other mark of recognition it bears is a huge dagger, sunk to the hilt in its bosom, and a stream of fiery blood issuing from the wound. The town council may draft about one hundred brave men to capture the mystery.—Cor. Indianapolis Journal.

To Utilize "Black Strap."

A lignite sugar refinery has been established in Philadelphia for utilizing "black strap," the refuse of molasses. Hitherto this substance has been used in making rum, but the product has always been in excess of the demand. The inventors claim that the process will revolutionize the sugar industry. It is clarified through pulverized lignite.—Traveler and Hotel Record.

Oh, the Brute!

"My husband only gives me $5 at a time to go shopping with," complained a woman.

"Mine never gives me any money at all," added another.

Chorus of "Oh!" "The brute!"

"No; his credit is so good I can get everything charged."—Epoch.

LIME KILN CLUB.

The Colored Philosophers Addressed by Professor McAfoy Johnson.

A CORN DOCTOR'S GRAND ORATION.

His Brilliant Effusion Received With Tumultous Applause.—Past, Present and Future of the Negro.

When the meeting had been duly opened Brother Gardner announced that Professor McAfoy Johnson, of Florida, was in the ante-room and waiting to deliver his celebrated address on "Whar Was We? Whar Is We? and Whar Shall We Be? or, What'll de Use of All Dis Fussin'?"

"De professor arrove heah two days ago," explained the president, "an' ate mo' purvishuns at one meal dan me an' de old woman could eat in a week. I has had to lend him a white shirt, a pair of socks, two paper collahs an' fo'ty cents in money, an' I won't conceal de fack from you dat I hope he will leave town right away arter dis lecktur. In case he shows a disposition to linger I trust that Giveadam Jones will take it upon hisself to see dat he moves along. While I doan' wish to discourage talent an' ambishun among our race, I can't afford to foot all de expenses out of my own pocket. As fur de essay, I doan know what it is. We will give him a fair show, an' when he retires Brudder Jones will retire with him an' drop a broad hint dat it is only half a mile across de water to Canada."

THE PROFESSOR.

The professor was then escorted in. He was a tall, cadaverous man, with a hollow voice and sunken eyes, and the first impression made was that he could eat meat and potatoes all day long without filling up. He was received with much applause, which compliment he acknowledged by bowing to the right and left, and with every bow his pants pulled up on his boot legs a full six inches.

HE LEADS OFF.

Having arrived at the platform, the professor put down two goblets of water, slipped a troche into his mouth, and, after removing his necktie and collar, he led off with:

"My confidin' friends, whar' was we? Jump backwards wid me to de Garden of Eden, an' you find a man wanderin' up an' down among de pansies an' de hollyhocks. It was de beautifulest place you eber saw. Outside of de flowers an' shrubs, dar was watermelyons an' peaches an' grapes an' persimmons till you couldn't rest. All Adam had to do was to eat wid one hand an' go fishin' wid de odder. He could sleep all night an' half of de next day. He didn't hev nuffin to buy, no taxes to pay, an' chickens roosted so low down dat he didn't hev to use no ladder. You hev probably bin told dat Adam was a white man, but doan' let anybody fool you. I hev looked into de subjick as close as a pusson kin, an' all de facks go to show dat he was of our color. [Great applause.]

"I hev bin told dat he probably resembled de pusson who now stands befo' you. [Faint applause.] As to dat, it makes no difference, an' I am not de man to try an' build myself up at any one else's expense. Dat's whar' we was, my confidin' friends—right in de Garden of Eden, gittin' fat ebery day an' hevin' de tallest kind of a time. We reckoned we have struck a job dat would last forever, an' we was puffed up accordin'. We felt dat we owned de airth, an' nobody could tech us wid a ten foot pole. [Applause.]

"My next subject," said the speaker, after swallowing a large quantity of water, "is, 'Whar' Is We?' While we was walkin' on our high heels about dat garden, feelin' ourselves de aristocracy of de airth, 'long cum de bounce an' we was lifted out widout a cent in our pockets or a shirt to our backs. We has clumb to de top limb of de persimmon tree to fall kerchunk. [Agitation.] From enjoyin' free board an' lodgin's wid nuffin to do but hunt rabbits an' go fishin', we was bounced out to live on grass an' made our beds in de bull rushes. [More agitation.]

"We got it bad, an' we has bin down on our luck ever since. Dat's why we doan' push ahead faster. Dat's why we am at de bottom an' de white man at de top. He didn't git no sich soft snap to begin wid, an' so he didn't hev nuffin' to lose nor feel bad about. Whar is we? We am de under dog. We am down. We has got to take de peelin's an' let de white man hev de 'taters. [Groans and sighs.]

"My next subject disqualifies de imputashun of 'Whar' Shall We Be?' While I realized the percolashun dat we has gained upon it, de fucher has an imputashus disinclinashun. I sometimes feel like givin' up de struggle fur impenetrability an' subsistin' my endevors to prolong de asservashun. [Yells.] Five centuries hence de susceptibility may professionally espouse de avariciousness, but whar will we be den? In consonance wid previous expostulashuns, I feel dat we orter relinquish de assiduity of de hemisphere an' seek to evaporate de hallucination which combats our solarity.

"Gem'len, wid dese few remarks, an' thankin' you from de bottom of my heart for de indifference wid which you hev eliminated de frigidity of my salutashun, I hev de honor to bid you good night, an' to add dat fur de nex' fo' weeks I shall make my headquarters at de cabin of Brudder Gardner, whar' I shall be prepared to remove corns and bunions at de rate of twenty-five cents a remove."

A great storm of applause greeted the speaker as he retired.—Detroit Free Press.

He Did Not Deserve Her.

Queer Earthquake Effects.

An old sheep herder who dwells in a secluded spot in the Sutter county buttes made his annual visit to this city Wednesday, and from him we learn of some phenomenal and interesting circumstances as a result of the earthquake of Tuesday morning.

The lonely camp of the old shepherd is far up in the buttes, and is surrounded with cliffs densely covered with massive rocks and bowlders, which have withstood the storms of ages and furnished mills for the aborigines to grind their acorns and manzanita berries into flour from the remotest antiquity.

The old herder had just emerged from his cabin on this memorable morn, and was gathering kindling with which to prepare his morning meal before turning his flock onto the range for their day's forage, and the wonderful sight he witnessed will never be forgotten. When the trembling began numerous sparks of a bright blue color began issuing from the rocks, caused by the friction as they were tossed to and fro by the surging earth. As the tremors increased the number of sparks did likewise, until at one time the hillsides appeared as one sheet of fire with millions of sparks darting here and there as if dancing for joy. As the trembling subsided the sparks gradually disappeared, and in a moment all was total darkness.

Shortly after the sun had started on its journey in the eastern horizon the attention of the old shepherd was attracted by the great branches of trees which had fallen to the ground, and those which remained intact seemed to horrify the wild birds, as they would attempt to alight, and then, with a frightened scream, would pass rapidly on, only to repeat the caper at the next tree. An investigation proved that millions of lizards and snakes had taken refuge in the trees during their fright and had become so numerous on the projecting branches that they were forced to succumb to the immense weight and fell to the ground. This is the only instance of damage reported in Yuba or Sutter county.—Marysville (Cal.) Democrat.

A Useful Collector of Coals.

Perhaps the following anecdote may be useful to readers whose houses and gardens abut on railways. An eminent "menagerist" lives in a suburb where forty trains pass his garden every hour. The weather was cold, coals were expensive, for the recent strike was just then at its height. The "menagerist," however, was a man of resource; he conceived a plan for utilizing the forty trains an hour.

From his menagerie in town he brought a large Barbary ape, which unfortunate animal was chained to the top of a pole at the end of the garden. The result was as pleasant as owning a colliery, without any wages to pay or fear of floods and explosions. Every stoker—and occasionally a driver—on every train that passed had a shot with a lump of coal at the Barbary ape. The B. A. was never hit, but the garden was littered with coal, which the "menagerist" triumphantly conveyed to his cellars.—London Tit-Bits.

A Well Traveled Letter.

An old member of a well known Breslau institution sent on the 13th of May, 1891, a post card from Cassel, addressed to "Dr. Emin Pacha, in German East Africa." The card contained a poetical allusion to the great traveler, and was signed by a number of other members of the institute. It arrived at Zanzibar on the 14th of June, 1891, and at Bagamoyo on the 16th of that month. The post card was then sent back to Dar-es-Salaam, where it arrived on the 12th of March of this year, and received the following official comment: "Aus dem Innern zurück. Emin nicht erreichbar." (Returned from the interior. Emin not attainable.) On the 5th of May this same post card found its way back to Cassel and is now in the hands of the sender.—London News.

More Than a Hundred Fold.

Four years ago Miss Lena Woodard, living on Thorn creek, Washington, sowed the seed from one head of barley. She harvested the crop with a pair of shears and sowed the amount received the next year, again harvesting it with her shears. The third crop her father cut with a grass scythe, getting enough barley from this crop to sow forty acres last spring, which averaged forty bushels to the acre when thrashed, making a total yield of 1,600 bushels from one head of barley in four years.—Exchange.

A Boy's Explosive Pocket.

Elias Mellinger, fifteen years old, was in his father's quarry in Lancaster, and put some powder in his pocket, in which there were matches. The powder was ignited by one of the matches taking fire, and in a moment his clothing was in a blaze. It was 1,000 feet distant to his father's home, and the boy ran to it. By the time he reached there his clothing was entirely burned from his body, and he was badly burned from his head to his feet.—Cor. Philadelphia Telegraph.

Shipping Live Lobsters to London.

Recently the steamer Inchulva sailed for London with 3,000 live lobsters. They are carried in four plate iron tanks on the main deck, the tanks being fitted with shelves, and each capable of holding 1,000 lobsters.

By means of a steam pump connected with the sea valve in the engine room a large reservoir is kept filled with sea water, which in turn is supplied to the lobster tanks at will.—Halifax Cor. Boston Herald.

Hunter Bridges' Bear Average.

Nathaniel S. Bridges, who died recently in Charlotte, was one of the oldest men in town, having nearly reached the age of eighty-nine years. Mr. Bridges was well known in eastern Washington county as a lumberman and framer of farm buildings. He was a hunter and trapper of note, having killed the same number of bears as marked the years of his life.—Bangor News.

Decoration.

I stood beside each mounded grave
Where slept the bravest of the brave,
And sought a spot where I could place
My flowers above a hero's face.

Within a calm, secluded spot,
Where passing steps disturbed her not,
I placed the simple buds I had
O'er her who bore a soldier lad.
—Clifford Trembly in Ladies' Home Journal.

A Brahman Purification.

A curious story of a cow is reported by a correspondent at Fayzabad, in Oude. It appears that a man of the Ahir, or cowherd caste, was carrying a cow calf on his shoulders, when the animal accidentally fell, breaking its neck. Thereupon the Brahmans held a solemn conclave, at which the cowherd was sentenced to the severest form of Hindoo excommunication for six months. During this term it was ordered that he was to lead a life of mendicancy, and with a rope around his neck and with a portion of the calf's tail on his shoulders was to perform pilgrimages to different Hindoo shrines. The members of his family were forbidden to supply him with either shelter or food under a penalty of undergoing similar excommunication.

The Ahir is reported to have now returned to his village, but until the purification ceremonies are over he must live in a temporary grass thatched house erected for his residence. It now remains for a man of the lowest and most degraded caste to purify him. A barber, after shaving the delinquent and paring the nails of his hands and toes, will make over the hair and nails to the Badmanus, who will burn them and also set fire to the hut. After this the Ahir will plunge into the river Sarju and come out purified, but his troubles are yet by no means at an end. Not till after he has feasted fifty Brahmans and 100 of his brethren will he be readmitted to caste fellowship.—London News.

A Public Benefactor Dead.

William Toomey, familiarly known as old Bill Toomey, died at 10:30 o'clock Friday night. This is a case where death had all the alleviating circumstances possible. For forty years old Bill Toomey laid out the dead of this town, man, woman and child, without exception. He never would accept any remuneration for these kindly services, always rejecting money and saying, "It's a real pleasure to me and no trouble at all."

His wife's millinery shop supported him and her comfortably, and it soon became known that old Bill Toomey was ready and anxious to come at all hours of the day and night, rain or shine, winter and summer. To make sure that no one would be laid out without him he fell into the habit of keeping careful account of all the sick, and made his rounds of inquiry each evening. Several times, when sick persons were not expected to live through the night, Mr. Toomey spent the night watching the house of sickness, without regard to his health or the weather.—Aristotle (Ind.) Cor. New York Sun.

Taking It Literally.

A man in Leeds, England, looked a gift horse in the mouth the other day with profitable results. The keeper of a skating rink had advertised "A great fancy costume carnival," and by way of stimulating the invention of his patrons he promised that the wearer of the most original costume should be rewarded with a watch of the value of ninety dollars. The man who won the watch took it to a jeweler, who said the timepiece was worth only twenty.

The winner, therefore, applied to the courts for redress. The skating rink proprietor defended himself with the plea that the giving of the prize was a purely voluntary act, and the recipient should not take the giver's estimate too literally. The judge, however, took a different view and gave judgment for the plaintiff for ninety dollars.—London Letter.

Waited Twelve Years.

Vaclav Koran and Elizabeth Frederick were made husband and wife by Justice Daniel L. Wheeler of Chicago, Friday afternoon on the authority of a marriage certificate issued Sept. 27, 1881, eleven years ago. The license bore the signature of County Clerk E. F. C. Klokke. Koran is now forty-three years old, and she is two years older. The obstacle which had kept apart their yearning hearts so many years was the veto of an angry father. A year ago the father died, and after waiting twelve months for propriety's sake the constant lovers were married.—Exchange.

Value of a Cherry Tree.

A question as to the value of a cherry tree has just been decided at Niederlahnstein, in Germany. The ground whereon this cherry tree stands is required for the widening of a railway station at that place. The owner of the tree put in a claim for £180, which he said was the amount he obtained yearly for the fruit the tree yielded. After some spirited contention on both sides the owner somewhat reluctantly consented to accept £120.—Kolnische Zeitung.

Spring Is Here.

The approach of spring in Maine is thus heralded by a Kennebec newspaper: "Caterpillars were discovered last week by Brother-in-Law McFadden; robins, in flocks, by Jack Fardy, and singly by Charles Fogg; crows by Brother Carpenter; spirits frumenti by James Patrick; 7-inch trout by the editor; pussy willows by the schoolgirls, and new spruce gum by the schoolmarms."

A manufacturer in New York city has recently made brass andirons on the pattern of Washington's andirons now at Mount Vernon. They approach what is called the colonial style, being tall and slender, with claw and ball feet and small balls at the top.

The historic battlefield of Gettysburg is to be made accessible by an electric road. The line takes in all the important points in the second and third day's fights and when completed will be about eight miles long.

The Preacher's Industrious Hen.

The Congregational minister in Newington thinks he has the champion hen of the place. She began laying in February, immediately after he first owned her. She kept this up until she went to sitting and hatched out a brood the first part of April. About a week ago she was allowed to run at large with her brood, but returned to the coop during the day and laid an egg, brooding her chickens at night. This she continues to do, laying her egg daily and still caring for her chicks.—Hartford (Conn.) Times.

HOW TO VOTE.

THE NEW BALLOT LAW AND HOW TO USE IT.

Text of the Law and Explanatory Cuts and Sample Ticket—The Law Said to Be Safe Against Repeaters and Vote Buyers—Read It Over and File the Paper Away for Reference.

The new Australian ballot law is now in force in this state, and every voter is interested in knowing how to comply with the law in casting his ballot.

A few municipal elections have been conducted under the new plan, and others are yet to be held before the final test of the law is to be made at the fall general election. To assist voters to a proper understanding of the way to do it, we print herewith the full text of the law and illustrations of the voting booths.

Cut No. 1 shows the boxes or compartments in which the voter prepares his ballot.

Cut No. 2 shows the position of the ballot clerks, voters in the stalls, and the officers of election checking the voters as they deposit the ballots in the box near the exit. Enter with the man to the right of the cut, and get a ballot from the gentleman standing at the end of the table, provided the young man at the desk finds your name properly registered in the great register open before him.

Then walk over to one of the open stalls and mark your ballot in accordance with your wishes, and pass in front of the group at the left, and announce your name to the judges of election. When the young man sitting at the desk finds your name properly registered, you are permitted to deposit the ballot in the box and pass out. That is all there is to it. Cut No. 3 shows the ground plan of Cut No. 2, with the positions of each election officer and voter indicated.

It has been claimed by some that the new law can be beaten, and that vote buying cannot be prevented by the experiment. The following editorial from the San Francisco Examiner seems to state the case about as fairly as it can be done:

"A correspondent of the Examiner warned the California electors of the method by which the Australian ballot system was beaten in Montana. It was a variation of the 'Tasmania dodge,' a voter being bribed to bring out a ballot by substituting a piece of blank paper for the official ballot that was given him on entering the booth. In the 'Tasmania dodge' the voter was supposed to vote the blank paper, in the Montana case to tear it up. The official ballot

"But a second check, still more valuable, prevents any illicit use of the ballot even if it is taken outside. When the voter enters the booth the ballot clerks mark the check number of his ballot against his name on the printed register. When he marks the ballot he folds it with the counterfoil or tag that bears the number of the ballot exposed, and delivers the ballot to the inspector. The inspector announces the name and number, the ballot clerks verify it from their record, and the inspector tears off the tag and drops the ballot in the box. If the ballot does not bear the same number as the one he received from the ballot clerks he cannot vote.

"The California ballot system cannot be 'beaten' in this manner except by the collusion of the election officers, challengers and watchers of both parties. It is hardly possible to secure so large a number of corrupt men together, or at all events men corrupted by the same side. Whatever vote buying is done under the system will have to be carried out under the 'assistance to illiterates' provision. This will be a possible but dangerous game to play. It will require the collusion of election officers, and will be readily detected by the watchers. The November election will show whether an amendment on this point will be necessary."

The sample ballot given is intended to show how to mark votes. If a straight ticket is voted, an X in the space at the right of the party for which the voter desires to cast his ballot is sufficient. But a split ticket requires an X opposite each name voted for. Only one office is on this ticket. All are arranged in the same manner.

Two Narrow Escapes.

Twice in his experience has John B. Obermeyer, of Chicago, owed his life to the practice of carrying papers in his inside pocket. The first time was on a battlefield in the war of the rebellion. Then the muster roll of his company of the Eleventh Pennsylvania volunteers stopped a musket ball fired at random from the enemy's lines. The second time was on Monday, when a bullet from a 38-caliber revolver, fired only six feet distant, and aimed deliberately at his breast, failed to penetrate an envelope filled with bank bills and a passbook in his inside vest pocket.

After this second event Mr. Obermeyer, it is said, looked coolly at the would be assassin, and called him a coward, and invited him to shoot a second time, but the latter stood for a moment irresolute, then, with his hand trembling, laid his revolver on the desk and surrendered to the police.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Soda Water Not So Much in Demand.

An up town dry goods store last summer tried the experiment of giving soda water to its patrons free. An enormous fountain, well equipped for service, was placed in the back part of the store and on each hot day half a dozen attendants were kept busy serving a clamorous, thirsty and never diminishing crowd. One day upward of 7,000 glasses of soda water were drawn from that free fountain. This year the firm charges three cents a glass for its soda water, and as a result the patronage has fallen off to a remarkable extent. On two very hot days a fortnight ago, although the large store was well filled with customers, the soda fountain was at no time overworked.—New York Times.

COURT NOTES.

Geo. M. Gill, Superior Judge.

MONDAY, Oct. 17, 1892.

Estate and guardianship of Oren C. Albert II, and Mary S. Johnson—Filed annual settlement of account.

TUESDAY Oct. 18 h, 1892.

Estate of Joseph Fernbach—Filed proof of posting of notice of application for letters.

Louise Woodin vs. Irving J. Woodin—Entered judgment.

John Albers vs. Benjamin Williams—Entered decree of foreclosure and order of sale.

To-day is a legal holiday.

Registration closes on Monday.

By a late decision of the Supreme Court voters must designate every candidate they wish to vote for. No straight tickets go.

O. I. Mairs visited Bishop during the week.

H. P. Cartier arrived home from San Francisco on Wednesday.

A vote for Caminetti for Congress means a vote for free coinage of silver.

George Meads arrived at Independence with his big team on his way to Mojave yesterday.

D. J. Hessian came down from Big Pine yesterday and will remain in this vicinity for a few days.

Mrs. H. Levy started for San Francisco last Saturday. She expects to remain there for the winter.

A social dance will be given at Mairs' Hall to-night. Every body invited and a good time assured.

In his speech at Independence last Monday evening Hon. A. Caminetti pledged himself unconditionally to use every effort toward securing free coinage of silver.

At a meeting of the Masonic Grand Lodge at San Francisco last week funds were provided to push the erection of a Home for widows and orphans of Masons with as little delay as possible. The Home is to be located near San Francisco.

The Independence public school celebrated Columbus day to-day with appropriate exercises. A large flag staff has been erected on the school building and "Old Glory" was thrown to the breeze. The Independence brass band attended and played appropriate airs. Frank Sherrer delivered the oration in a masterly manner. Several songs prepared expressly for the occasion were well rendered. The pupils of the school have worked diligently to render the occasion a memorable one, and their efforts are crowned with success.

Important Decision

The Supreme Court ruling that party headings on ballots are unconstitutional will make much simpler the duty of voters. To comply with the law as laid down by the Court, a voter must fix the necessary x mark after the name of each candidate he intends to vote for. There is but one exception to this, and that is in the case of Presidential Electors. The prescribed mark being placed opposite the group of names of Electors nominated by any party the vote is counted for all of that group. There cannot now be any straight tickets voted by one mark only.

Caminetti and Free Coinage.

Hon. A. Caminetti delivered a speech in Reno last evening in the interest of free coinage, filling an engagement for Hon. W. M. Stewart. Mr. Stewart has been a Republican leader for many years, but he thinks that free coinage is of far more importance to the people of this coast than high tariff. Consequently he is working with the Democratic party and opposing Harrison. Mr. Caminetti has pledged himself to work unceasingly for the passage of a free coinage bill, and it is of the greatest importance to Inyo county that he should be returned to Congress.

A PLAIN, COMMOM-SENSE TALK.

Hon. A. Caminetti's Address At Independence Last Monday Evening.

Hon. A. Caminetti, Democratic candidate for Congress, addressed the people at the Court House at Independence on Monday evening. Beautiful decorations in flowers were arranged upon the wall, among the rest being the initials of the speaker, "A. C.", in pansies. The court-room was filled to its full capacity, many ladies being present. The corridor was filled with men who could not find place inside. Mr. Caminetti was introduced to the audience by Mr. A. Davidson. Throughout his discourse, lasting nearly two hours, the speaker confined himself closely to matters of especial interest to every citizen of the district. No words were wasted nor time consumed in talking general politics. The speaker said he thought it the first duty of every Congressman to do all in his power to benefit the people of his own district. He is not elected and sent to Washington to talk politics, but to do all that may lawfully be done to secure such legislation and get such help from the general government as will best promote the developement of the resources of his own district and the prosperity of all the people thereof. Acting on this principle he had secured an appropriation of $18,200 for a re-survey of the State line between California and Nevada. The result of this survey will be to give to Alpine county a strip of territory formerly claimed by Nevada that contains assessable property equal in value to all the former assessed valuation of the county. It has not yet been determined what changes the survey will make in the boundaries of Mono and Inyo counties, but every acre of territory that belongs to either will be accurately fixed. An appropriation of $20,000 had been secured for experiment stations to ascertain what parts of the district are best suited to the production of sugar. This cannot fail to be of great benefit to the whole State. An appropriation had been asked to build a good wagon road from near Mono Lake to the Yosemite. A like demand had been made for money to build a road from the neighborhood of Lone Pine to Mount Whitney. Before these could be acted upon a resolution had been adopted by the Committee on appropriations that no new work would be undertaken at that session of Congress; but Mr. Holman, Chairman of that Committee, assured Mr. Caminetti that at the next session the Committee would do all it could to help get what was asked for. No question that has ever arisen in the State caused such heated discussion or occupied so much time in and out of the Legislature as hydraulic mining. Thousands of workingmen and millions of capital are to-day affected by that question. Tens of thousands of acres of the finest land in the State were threatened with destruction by the debris. On the other hand, mines that yielded millions of dollars in gold, nearly all of which went into circulation in the State and gave employment to an army of miners were compelled to be stopped, and all that gold supply shut off and all those miners thrown idle. A bill that will protect the farmers and their land will preserve the rivers from injury, and at the same time will secure to every mine owner the right to work his mine, was prepared by Mr. Caminetti and after one of the most persistent struggles during the last session of Congress, was passed and is now pending in the Senate, where it is almost certain to pass when that body assembles. No measure ever passed by Congress will confer greater benefit upon California than this. It has been proposed to ask Congress to give to the various States of the west all of the government desert land within their limits. It is by no means certain that this would be a good measure. Experience with the swamp act prompts caution in dealing with all measures that might allow land sharks to get control of vast tracts of land. Mr. Caminetti requests the people of his district to carefully consider the matter and inform him of their wishes. It is proposed to establish a great public park in the Sierra Nevada mountains, extending from Yosemite southward to and beyond Mount Whitney. The proposed reservation comes within half a mile of the town of Independence. Mr. Caminetti favors this and all other public parks, but thinks that much care should be taken in fixing their boundaries. This proposed park includes farms on the west side of the mountains where settlers have been located many years and where they have expended much labor and capital in making homes. Many mines are also included in the reservatten. It would be grossly unjust to take all this property from the owners without compensation. Neither is it right for the government to reserve great tracts and do nothing to improve them. If the general government holds the land, roads, bridges, trails and other improvements should be made for the use and benefit of the public in whose interest the land is professed to be held. All this was urged in Congress. A committee of one was appointed in the House of Representatives to act with a committee of three appointed by the Senate to investigate and report at the next session of Congress with a view to making suitable appropriations and taking such other action as may be necessary. To look out for the interests of Inyo county in this matter and to report on what may be done, including building a road to Mount Whitney, Mr. Caminetti appointed the following committee: W. L. Hunter, C. Mulholland and W. Crapo. Free coinage of silver is an article of faith with Mr. Caminetti. On every accasion he spoke and voted for it in Congress. He is strongly of the opinion that when Congress meets next January free coinage will become law. A strong party in the House have united and determined to filibuster against all other legislation till this shall be granted. He is one of that party. He deems it useless to waste much time discussing the tariff, for the reason that so long as there is a Republican majority in the Senate no Congressman can either hinder or help tariff reform. The Senate will continue Republican during the next two years in any event, and until there is a change one way or the other talk is useless. He states, however, that he has never met a farmer, miner or workingman of any kind who has been benefitted one cent by high tariff. The audience gave the closest attention through every word of the discourse. Republicans, many of whom were present, were as warm in commendation of the speaker as Democrats. It seemed to meet the hearty approval of all when Mr. Caminetti said that his duty as a Congressman was to try to promote the individual welfare of every man, woman and child in his district in preference to talking politics. This very brief synopsis falls far short of doing justice to an excellent, plain common sense talk without a single trace of stump cant or partisan misrepresentation. No man without the years of experience Mr. Caminetti has had can be elected to supercede him without injury to the district.

LONE PINE CORRESPONDENCE.

A Lady's Opinion on the Matter of Equality.

Mrs. V. has informed me that her neighbor after reading the last issue of the INDEPENDENT said to her in regard to the Lone Pine school bonds that she had been to soft in her expressions and that she ought to have added the following:

"The Board of School Trustees have acted in their proceedings in violation of the requirements of the law from the first to the last step:

First, the law requires three notices to be posted in the district calling election to vote for or against the issuing of bonds. There was only one notice in the district and two out of the district posted by said trustees.

Second, two judges appointed by the trustees to conduct the election were not residents of the district.

Third, Only the residents of the district are entitled to vote, and several votes cast were not by residents of the district. The certificate of the trustees on the above matter to the Board of Supervisors incriminate them for the same.

The Supervisors exceeded their power in ordering the issuance of said bonds which is in excess of 5 per cent of the assessable property of the district. The law forbids them to authorize the trustees to use the building fund as they have done in their preamble when they say, "and for liquidating any indebtedness already incurred."

Fifth, according to the minutes written in the records of Lone Pine school district at a meeting held on April 15th 1892, Miguel Castro a member of the board of trustees appears to be present at the meeting, his name being on the records when he was at the time out of the county.

Sixth, the board of school trustees is the only authority to sell school bonds to the highest bidder, and the members of said board violated in delegating an outsider to sell said school bonds and allow, as they have, a bill of $111.35 royalty to sell the same etc. The bonds were sold secretly, and that is what they call to the highest bidder.

Seventh, the supervisors, school trustees, buyers of said bonds and contractors for the building of the future Lone Pine school house will please take notice that by what has been previously published in the INDEPENDENT up to and including the present date concerning the Lone Pine school bonds, you shall be barred from pleading ignorance of the facts when the case shall be submitted to a court having jurisdiction in the matter.

Eighth, have the trustees complied with the law in regard to submitting to the county school superintendent plans of school houses to be by him either approved or rejected, previous to acting upon any proposals for the building of the same? I guess not.

C. MEYSAN.

Do You Wish the Finest Bread and Cake?

It is conceded that the Royal Baking Powder is the purest and strongest of all the baking powders.

The purest baking powder makes the finest, sweetest, most delicious food.

The strongest baking powder makes the lightest food.

That baking powder which is both purest and strongest makes the most digestible and wholesome food.

Why should not every housekeeper avail herself of the baking powder which will give her the best food with the least trouble?

The San Francisco Board of Health says: "It is impossible to make a purer or a stronger baking powder than the Royal.'

PUSSY WANTS A CORNER.

This life is like a monstrous plank
Out in midocean sailing,
All crowded full of living men,
And ne'er a foot of railing.

There all are struggling for the best,
And each one to his notion;
In this great struggle often some
Are pushed off in the ocean.

And some will find the lucky plum,
Like little Jackey Horner;
Some always struggle for a place,
"For pussy wants a corner!"

Some have the claws to hold on tight,
However rough the sailing,
And hold the plank through all the fight,
With ne'er a foot of railing.

Some things are very light to bear,
As light as ocean bubbles;
To bear with greatest fortitude,
'Tis other people's troubles.

Some get a very liberal streak,
Though you may deem it funny;
'Tis very easy to be free
With other people's money.

We often get the lucky plum
Through some poor brother's sorrow;
The failure he endures today
Brings you success tomorrow.

'Tis such a complicated world,
Where you and I are staying,
We feel inclined to think a bit;
Now, brethren, let's be praying.

Oh, you, who've found the lucky plum,
Like little Jackey Horner,
Make room for some poor starving one—
"Poor pussy wants a corner!"

—M. A. Suffin in New York Sun.

A Story of General Grant.

I once heard, with reverence and with misty eyes, the story of General Grant's return from the last brief journey he ever took from the cottage on Mount Macgregor. The general had a favorite walking stick, without which he never went abroad, even on his drives, and his walking stick had its own place in the corner of his room; no hand but his own ever put it there or took it thence. Day after day the journey from his chair to that corner before he set forth, from the corner to his chair after his return and the replacement of the stick in its place grew more difficult to the general's nerveless and weary feet.

And there came that day at last when on coming in, he glanced toward the corner, stood for a moment silently waveringly, a little quiver on the brave and steadfast lips; and then, with a gesture which was a wordless renunciation of life and all its dear associations, he opened his tremulous hand and let the old stick drop from it to the floor at his feet. It was but a few days later that he entered with a soldier's courage the shadowy valley of the journey through which David said, "Thy rod, thy staff they comfort me."—Dorothy Lundt in Boston Commonwealth.

Must Have Their Sea Legs On.

"I tell you it requires a good deal of practice to be able to stand in the cab of a rapid running passenger train and fire the coal into the firebox," said a West Penn employee, in speaking of the risks run by trainmen. "The engine rocks, sways and fairly jumps at times under his feet, and if the fireman doesn't mind his p's and q's he is liable to lose his balance and be flung from the rapid gaited train. This is more especially the case in rounding a curve, where, if the balance is lost, the fireman may be hurled from the train. I remember a case in point which happened a comparatively short time ago on the Fort Wayne. A fireman was flung from his engine one dark night as the train was rushing along. Of course he was soon missed and a search made. He was found and, wonderful to say, was not seriously injured."—Pittsburg Post.

Home Influence Felt in School.

If the home do its work well, the task of the teacher and the school is comparatively easy; but there are too many American families, as every teacher knows, where this work has not been done, and where, consequently, much effort has to be spent in supplementing the lack of skill or the foolish indulgence of the mother. When a little six-year-old girl on her first day at school tries to strike her teacher over the head with her heavy slate because she is told to do some little thing, we may not unreasonably assume that that home has failed of its purpose, if indeed it ever had any.—Anna C. Brackett in Harper's.

Stations That Have No Income.

"It doesn't seem probable that there should be a station on the elevated road the receipts of which don't average a cent a day," remarked an observant citizen to a reporter the other day. The reporter expressed his doubts, and the citizen continued: "Well, it's a fact, nevertheless; and there are two such stations to my knowledge. One is the uptown station of the Second avenue road at One Hundred and Twenty-seventh street, and the other the Third avenue uptown station at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street. There is a ticket seller and chopper at each of the stations, but they do practically nothing all day. The reason for this is that the terminus of the road is so near. Both end at One Hundred and Twenty-ninth street, and a person can walk the distance while he would be climbing the stairs. The stations have to be there, though, for the number of people who leave the cars is as great as the exodus at other stations."—New York Sun.

THE BERKSHIRE HILLS.

Dawn sheds its first rosy splendor
On their round crests;
Last, on their bosoms, the tender
Glow of eve rests;
Moon and stars keep loving watches
Where their pines wail,
On them the bow leans, that stretches
O'er the wet vale.

Under their snows, Spring's soft fingers
Opes dainty flowers.
By their mad brooks, aster lingers,
When winter lowers;
Then ferns uncurl, gay vines clamber
O'er rocks and trees;
White lilies in their lakes slumber
Fanned by the breeze.

Source of the stream, that through meadows
Winds, calm and bright,
Glassing the slopes, where cloud shadows
Sport with gold light!
Leafy halls, where of love's sadness
Birds all day trill,
Where through the night of love's sadness
Sings whip-poor-will.

O, that our every endeavor,
Godward would rise,
Like their blue summits, forever
Touching the skies!
While, like their clear streams, that water
Orchards and meads,
Over life's vale we would scatter
Pure thoughts and deeds.

—Good Housekeeping.

One Useful Cigar.

It is told of a sea captain who died not long ago that he was formerly in command of a ship in which passengers were carried from New York to some of the islands. On one occasion the ship caught fire, and the passengers and crew were compelled to take hurriedly to the boats.

The captain remained perfectly cool throughout all the confusion and fright of the embarkation, and at last every one except himself was got safely into the boats.

By the time he was ready to follow the passengers were almost wild with fear and excitement. Instead of hurrying down the ladder the captain called out to the sailors to hold on a minute, and taking a cigar from his pocket coolly lighted it with a bit of burning shroud which had fallen from the rigging at his feet. Then he descended with deliberation, and gave the order to push off.

"How could you stop to light a cigar at such a moment?" he was asked afterward, when some of the passengers were talking over their escape.

"Because," he answered, "I saw that if I did not do something to divert the minds of those in the boat there was likely to be a panic, and, overcrowded as it was, there was danger of its being upset. The act took but a moment, but it attracted the attention of everybody. You all forgot yourselves because you were thinking about my curious behavior, and we got off safely."—Youth's Companion.

Fallen on Evil Days.

I hear sad news about Isabelle, the flower girl of the Paris Jockey club in the palmy days of the Third empire. Mr. Whitehurst, then the Paris correspondent of The Daily Telegraph, introduced her to the notice of the English public, and both in Paris and London she became quite a personage. She was not a pretty girl—rather the reverse—but she was what the French in untranslatable phrase call chic. She wore a fancy costume, stood at the door of the Jockey club when no races were on, and was always to be found at the foot of their grand stand at Longchamps when the grand prize was being run.

It was there the Empress Eugenie saw her first, bought her flowers, and took a fancy to her. In those now far off days Isabelle on state occasions wore in her hat a gold buckle, with her initials in brilliant, a present from the empress. When the empire fell and the Germans entered Paris Isabelle's joyous reign was over. She was still the flower girl of the jockey club even under the republic, but it proved a different state of things. Her fortunes gradually fell away, till now I hear from one who knew her in her palmy days and has helped her in her distress that she has been sold up and turned out of her little shop, where to the last she sold flowers.—Paris Cor. Liverpool Post.

Americans in Paris.

Americans? Yes, they are here. The ones seeking social recognition, others seeking whom they can marry. It is not a particularly creditable state of affairs, but the American met everywhere is really in search of one of these two things. In London she is trying to buy her way with money. In Paris she is trying to buy influence with money. This is a distinction with a difference. She feels that in London she can offer her dollars in the crudest way, stating what she wishes and how much she will give for it. Here more care must be taken, and to get the influence of a lady from Faubourg St. Germaine she must be approached most delicately and the question of money glossed over until it seems of the slightest moment.—Paris Letter.

Rats Cause a Watchman's Discharge.

A mysterious affair at the store of Forbes & Wallace puzzled everybody in the employ of the firm for quite awhile. Several mornings the cords of the cash system were found cut, and had to be repaired before the little cash carriers could be used. Who did the cutting was a mystery, and several employes were suspected. Finally the watchman was discharged and a new one engaged, but the next morning the cords were again cut. Then a closer watch was set and it was discovered that rats were the guilty ones. The cords blocked up a hole through which the animals wished to pass, and they gnawed them off. The old watchman was reinstated and all other suspects exonerated.—Springfield (Mass.) Homestead.

Superstition and the Moonstone.

The flaw in the moonstone is called the "magic mirror," since fortune tellers say that through these the mysteries of the future are revealed. Of course this is all arrant nonsense, but it certainly makes a good market for imperfect stones, and they are thus made to cost more than the flawless gem. Apart from its soft, silvery beauty the moonstone has taken hold of the superstitions of a superior class of people, and whether they tell the true reason or not, they all like to own one as an amulet to protect from harm and danger, and for the good luck it is fancied attaches to the possessor.—Exchange.

A Pneumatic Sole.

A pneumatic inner sole for boots and shoes has recently appeared in London. It is inflated with air or gas under pressure, the external protective covering being canvas linen or some other suitable material that can withstand the pressure.—New York Times.

Silver in Soot.

In an Irish lead mine, whenever the periodical cleaning of the tall chimney and the underground tunnel communicating with it takes place, hundreds of pounds' worth of silver particles are discovered in the soot.—London Tit-Bits.

A New Way to Cut Beefsteaks.

A young married couple have just gone to housekeeping on Duffield street. The other morning the neighbors were treated to this bit of colloquial entertainment as the two parted at the gate:

He—What shall I order for supper, precious?

She—A piece of beefsteak, and oh, darling, do tell the man to cut it the right way of the goods, so it will be tender.—Detroit Free Press.

"Blacked Out."

Speaking of the Russian censorship, Mr. George Kennan, in an article in The Century, says: "What does the Russian government hope or expect to accomplish by 'blacking out' articles that aim simply to tell the truth with regard to Russian affairs, and by throwing into prison every man in whose possession such articles may be found?

"The Russian author Prugavin, in a book that was inadvertently sanctioned by the press censor, but that was afterward seized and burned, asks this same question, and says: 'Can an idea be choked to death? Can thought be killed, buried, or annihilated? Are not truth, and love, and justice, and freedom immortal? It is the most terrible of mistakes to suppose that ideas can ever be crushed. People have perished—men have died in chains and casemates, their bodies have decayed, their graves have been lost, and their very names have been forgotten; but their ideas and aspirations live on. Washed in the blood of suffering, such ideas and aspirations have become the dream of every man in whose brain a thought stirs and in whose breast a heart beats.'

"The press censor, when he burden Prugavin's book, thought that he had destroyed forever its 'pernicious' influence, but the 'ideas and aspirations' of the gifted author 'live on;' and his words, although burned by order of government in Russia, will appeal to hundreds of thousands of sympathetic hearts in England and the United States.

"Some time in the far distant future the free Russian patriot, no longer blinded by the censorship of the press, will look over the pages of his national history that record these attempts to gag public opinion and strangle human thought, and will wish from the bottom of his heart that so humiliating and shameful a record might be 'blacked out.'"

Philanthropic Beggars.

"Say, mister, give me some money to buy some supper with. I haven't had a bite to eat today. Can't you help me along?"

It was a street beggar accosting a sorrowful looking young man on one of the principal thoroughfares of the city. The young man stopped. "There's a nickel," said he. "It's the last I have, but take it. I shall soon be where they don't need money. I am tired of this life, so take it and good luck to you."

"Are you so much in need as that, partner?" asked the beggar.

"Yes, I have been looking for work for two weeks, but it's no use, and my money's all gone."

For a while the beggar hesitated, then he pulled out a dollar. "Here," said he, "take this. You're worse off than I am."

"No," answered the young man firmly. "It won't do me any good—good-by," and he walked rapidly down the street.

A policeman overheard the remark and he followed and overtook the stranger.

"Look here," said he, "are you the fellow that's about to commit suicide?"

A hearty laugh interrupted further questions.

"That's all right, officer," said the would-be suicide. "I am just trying a little game on these street beggars, and that's the third one tonight who has offered me money.—Kansas City Globe.

Health of Miners.

It is the impression among some who have never investigated the subject that the occupation of coal mining is unhealthy, and it will surprise the majority to learn that now the ventilation of the collieries has been so much improved that the coal miner ranks among the healthiest of workingmen. As a rule miners are undersized. This is due to their occupation, as are also their well developed trunks and arms. The most frequent functional derangements among them are dyspepsia and headache. The "miner's back" is a well known complaint in districts where small seams are worked, and it is a very troublesome one to colliery doctors.

A few years ago the mining classes used to suffer largely, far in excess of the rest of the population, from lung diseases. There was a form of miners' phthisis, known as anthrocosis, where, on post mortem examination, the lung was found to be perfectly black. If the lung was squeezed there exuded a dirty black, ink like fluid, caused by the presence of large quantities of unburnt carbon. But all this is, to a very great extent, a thing of the past. A case of well marked anthrocosis is now a very rare thing, owing to the improved ventilation of the mines.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Highest of American Peaks.

"The highest mountain in America" must now be changed from Mount St. Elias to Mount Wrangel, a little to the north of the former peak. Several of these mountains have been newly measured. Mount Hood, once "roughly" estimated at 15,000 feet, then "closely" at 16,000, was brought down by triangulation to 13,000. An aneroid barometer made it 12,000 and a mercurial barometer made it 11,225. Mount St. Elias, estimated by D'Egelot at 12,672 feet, was triangulated by Mr. Baker at 13,500. It now appears that Mount Wrangel rises 18,400 feet above Copper river, which is in turn 2,000 feet above the sea level at that point. If this holds good, Mount Wrangel is a good 2,000 feet higher than any other peak in North America, and has the distinction of being within the United States besides.—St. Louis Republic.

The Cylindrograph.

The cylindrograph is an instrument of French invention for taking panoramic photographs in connection with military surveying and the like. It is very simple in construction. A semi-circular cylinder having a small lens in the center moves on an axis, and it is provided with a dark slide of some material which will bend without breaking. When a view is to be taken the lens is moved from one side of the landscape to the other. Rapidity of execution rather than artistic effect is the object aimed at.—Christian at Work.

Funnyman's Misadventure.

Funnyman (finishing his story)—Ha, ha, ha! Amusing, isn't it? Well, good by, they say it's wise to leave at once after you've said a good thing, you know.

Amiable Hostess—Oh, you are not going yet, are you, Mr. Funnyman?—Kate Field's Washington.

A Regular Walk Over.

Silby—Well, Squiggs, what success did you have at Willowville?

Squiggs—A regular walk over. Missed my train and had to foot it the whole way.

BOLD ASSERTIONS.

THE MANLY ACTION OF GERMANY'S GREATEST SCIENTIST.

It is Warmly Indorsed by a Ringing Editorial in a Leading American Journal.

(Medical Tribune.)

Professor Rudolph Virchow was seriously ill several months ago. An admirer of his, the owner of a certain proprietary medicine, took occasion to present him with some bottles of his discovery. Virchow recovered, and was certain that he had received much benefit from the remedy. He accordingly addressed a letter to his benefactor, acknowledging the matter and expressing his gratitude. The letter, coming as it did from the most distinguished teacher of pathologic science in Europe, was published and widely read. The North German Medical Association, like similar bodies in America, has its cranks on ethics. They endeavored to call the professor to account for disregarding the code. Virchow regarded the instincts of a gentleman, and the honor that leads a man to render justice, as paramount to the peck-measure ethics of a conceited gang of half fledged medical men. He answered them with hearty contempt, and withdrew from the association. He chose to stand on manliness, and could afford to do so. It was an issue between ethics and a man, and manhood was asserted.

At about the same time the editor of this journal wrote a letter to a gentleman in Western New York regarding the merits of a remedy known as Warner's Safe Cure. The circumstances in the case were as follows: We had frequently been asked by patients if we knew anything about this remedy, and were obliged to answer in the negative. We then began to make inquiries about the remedy, and were surprised at the reports we heard regarding it. We then recommended it in several cases that had resisted all other treatment, and the results were surprising. The albumen rapidly disappeared from the urine and the patients felt greatly improved in health. Feeling satisfied that the compound was a valuable one, and that it could do no possible harm to any one we continued to recommend it, and were surprised at the good results obtained.

After several months' fair trial we did not hesitate to indorse the remedy, believing as we did that it would prove a boon to suffering humanity. We have no reason to regret our action in this particular. We recommend a remedy that has benefited thousands of persons; we have seen its good effects on our own patients after all other medicines have failed, and we are not afraid to say to the public and the profession just what we know of it.

Medical journals of all schools of medicine are filled with advertisements and editorial puffs of proprietary medicines, many of which are worthless. The editors know nothing of their composition or preparation, but have an eye to the money they get for their advertisements. There has been no protest against these things. How, therefore, a certificate based on experiences such as ours, and without compensation, should have greater turpitude, is a problem beyond our capacity. Why one should be fish and another flesh we are not sagacious enough to determine. We leave it for those who care more for the rotten corpse of the old code than for common fairness and common sense.

Those who are eager to find fault will do so. They are heartily welcome to their task. To be sure blows can be given as well as taken, except that some escape because of their contemptible insignificance. We have no ammunition to waste on such. This, however, we will say: No man of common human sensibility, who has the red blood of a mammal, and not the pale, snaky fluid of the lower races, will have the heart to judge our actions severely or to say that we have done aught but what we have always claimed to be our right—to use any remedy that will benefit our patients, without reference to the source from which it comes.

The above able article from the pen of Dr. R. A. Gunn, editor of the Medical Tribune, strongly corroborates the statements already made by the doctor in the public prints regarding the unusual merits of the greatest modern medicine. This preparation, after twelve years of unqualified success, has finally received the commendation and indorsement of the leading members of the medical profession, both in this country and in Europe. Dr. Gunn in his recently published interview, gave his unanswerable reasons for indorsing this great remedy, and it goes without saying that the most distinguished teacher of pathology in the world to-day would be the last to recommend a proprietary article without having the utmost faith in its curative power.

THE LOTTERY TO END.

It would appear by the following item from a recent issue of the New Orleans Times-Democrat that the suggestion in several newspapers of late, that the Louisiana State Lottery Company intends setting up business elsewhere, is erroneous, and that it will close up shop on the expiration of its present charter.

In view of the contradictory rumors circulated regarding the intentions of the Louisiana State Lottery Company, and in order to accurately answer numerous inquiries, a representative of the Times-Democrat yesterday interviewed Mr. Paul Conrad, the President of the company, with the result expressed below:

Reporter—Mr. Conrad, it was asserted some weeks ago in the Northern newspapers, and the statement has since been revived recently, that the company is about to remove to Nicaragua, and there, under a Government franchise, open up the business on a grander scale than ever?

President Conrad—I have heard something of this, but there is no foundation for it. The company has officially stated that it bows to the decision of the Supreme Court and will respect the laws.

Reporter—Then have you no plans of future action?

President Conrad—I cannot state the case more strongly than was done at the time the company decided not to attempt to obtain a renewal of its charter. I can only repeat that the company will continue its business until the expiration of its present charter and then cease to exist. I cannot understand, after all that has been said, why there should be any confusion in the public mind about the matter.

Reporter—Have you any objection to my stating this as a finality for the satisfaction of the public?

President Conrad—None whatever.

Reporter—Some of the Eastern papers, Mr. Conrad, persistently assert that the lottery company continues to use the United States mails in the prosecution of its business; will you kindly tell me if that is true?

President Conrad—It is utterly untrue. We are obeying the law in its letter and spirit, and our agents everywhere are instructed to obey it. We are using the express companies only in our business, and in all our circulars are printed instructions to all persons dealing with us to avoid the mails.

Naval Tactics.

Admiral Sir Edmund Fremantle relates a story of a Yankee who was giving his experience of what had happened in the American civil war. He had been in command of a turret ship. A lady said to him, "Oh, no doubt, you always were inside the turret." "No, ma'am," he replied, "I was not inside the turret." "Oh, really," she said, "then where did you get to?" "Well," was the reply, "we were generally attacking forts, and I got on the lee side of the turret so as to have two thicknesses of armor to protect me instead of one."

A Good Reason.

Little Boy—Can your sister play?

Little Girl—No; she makes awful noises when she tries.

Little Boy—Then wot did your papa get her a piano for?

Little Girl—I dunno. I guess it was 'cause he wanted zee box for a coal bin.—Good News.

RIGHT OR WRONG.

Which will ye have? It does seem as if some folks prefer to have the last condition of the liver rather than the first. They perpetually dose themselves with purgatives totally without virtue as alterative of liver trouble. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the successful candidate for the people's choice, and yet, popular and well known as it is, there are unfortunates who keep on trying the drastic remedies of former days. It is to the intelligent portion of the public that the well-known and long tried properties of the Bitters appeal. Reason should be guided by experience in the matter of medication. "The best guide to our feet is the lamp of experience," said a great patriot of the early revolutionary period, and the exclamation is pregnant with truth. For over a third of a century the Bitters daily has met with the endorsement of people suffering from liver complaint, malaria, constipation, rheumatism, debility and troubles accompanied by dyspepsia. Latterly it has declared itself and been thoroughly approved as a remedy for "la grippe."

Now is the time to treat Catarrh of long standing. Ely's Cream Balm reaches old and obstinate cases, where all other remedies fail. Do not neglect procuring a bottle as in it lies the relief you seek.

Rev. H. H. Fairall, D. D., editor of the Iowa Methodist, says editorially, "We have tested the merits of Ely's Cream Balm, and believe that, by a thorough course of treatment, it will cure almost every case of catarrh. Ministers as a class are afflicted with head and throat troubles, and catarrh seems more prevalent than ever. We cannot recommend Ely's Cream Balm too highly."

Apply Balm into each nostril. It is Quickly Absorbed. Gives Relief at once. Price 50 cents at Druggists or by mail.

EVE'S DAUGHTERS.

Marion Harland, on pages 103 and 445 of her popular work, "Eve's Daughters; or, Common Sense for Maid, Wife and Mother," says:

"For the aching back—should it be slow in recovering its normal strength—an Allcock's Porous Plaster is an excellent comforter, combining the sensation of the sustained pressure of a strong warm hand with certain tonic qualities developed in the wearing. It should be kept over the seat of uneasiness for several days—in obstinate cases, for perhaps a fortnight.

"For pain in the back wear an Allcock's Porous Plaster constantly, renewing as it wears off. This is an invaluable support when the weight on the small of the back becomes heavy and the aching incessant.'

AT PARTING.

Dear friends, when one sure day shall come,
And time is o'er for me,
I pray you speed my spirit home,
Upon the ebbing sea.

Let not thy grief with broken sound
And longing echoes fill,
The heart which tuned to peace profound
Submissive should grow still.

These close knit strands of throbbing life
May hold with wondrous power
The soul which far from fear or strife
Should wait the coming hour.

And deep within that soul enwove
An answering chord may be,
Struck by the pain of those we love,
Through all eternity.

For love is deathless which God made,
Its promise he will keep,
And at this hour let it be laid
Upon his breast to sleep.

Beloved ones, your true love may hold
My summoned spirit fast.
I pray then loose its clinging fold,
Until that soul has passed.

THE COINERS.

During the year 1848 the west was flooded with counterfeit coin. It was so well manufactured that it passed readily. The evil at last became so great that the United States authorities requested a skillful detective might be sent to ferret out the nest of coiners. I was fixed upon to perform that duty.

I had nothing to guide me. The fact, however, that Chicago was the city where the counterfeit coin was the most abundant led me to suspect that the manufactory might be somewhere within its limits. It was therefore to the capital of the west that I first proceeded. I spent five weeks in that beautiful city, but without gaining the slightest clew of the counterfeiters.

I began to grow discouraged, and really thought I should be obliged to return home without having achieved any result. One day I received a letter from my wife requesting that I would send her home some money, as she was out of funds. I went into a bank and asked for a draft, at the same time handing a sum of money to pay for it, in which there were several half dollars. The clerk pushed three of the half dollars back to me.

"Counterfeit," said he.

"What," said I, "do you mean to tell me those half dollars are counterfeit?"

"I do."

"Are you certain?"

"Perfectly certain. They are remarkably well executed, but they are deficient in weight. See for yourself."

And he placed one of them in the scales against a genuine half dollar on the other side. The latter weighed down the former.

"That is the best executed counterfeit coin I ever saw in my life," I exclaimed, examining them very closely. "Is all the counterfeit money in circulation here of the same character as this?"

"Oh, dear, no," replied the clerk, "it is not nearly so well done. These are the work of Ned Willett, the famous New York counterfeiter. I know them well, for I have handled a great deal of it in my time. Here is some of the money that is in circulation here," he added, taking several half dollars from a drawer. "You see the milling is not nearly as perfect as Ned Willett's, although it is pretty well done, too."

I compared the two together and found that he was right. I supplied the place of the three counterfeit half dollars with good coin and returned the former to my pocket again.

A few days after this I received information which caused me to take a journey to a village situated about thirty miles from Chicago. I arrived there at night and took up my quarters at the only tavern in the place. It was a wretched dwelling and kept by an old man and woman, the surliest couple I think it has ever been my lot to meet. In answer to my inquiry as to whether I could have lodging there for the night I noticed that the host gave a peculiar look at his wife, and after some whispering I was informed in the most ungracious manner possible that I could have a bed.

I have frequently in the course of my life been obliged to put up with wretched accommodation, so I did not allow my equanimity of temper to be destroyed by the miserable fare set before me, and the still more miserable sleeping apartment into which I was ushered after I had concluded my repast.

The chamber was small in size, and was certainly well ventilated, for I could see the stars peeping through the roof. The bed was simply a bag of straw thrown into one corner of the room, without sheets or covering of any kind. This last fact, however, was not of much consequence, as it was summer time and oppressively hot.

I stood for more than an hour gazing out of the opening which served for a window. Before me was spread an immense prairie, the limits of which I could not see. The tavern in which I had taken up my abode appeared to be isolated from all other dwellings, and save the croak of the tree frog and the hum of the locust not a sound reached my ears. It was a beautiful moonlight night, and so bright that I could see to read the smallest print.

At last I began to grow weary, and throwing myself on my pallet I was soon plunged into a deep slumber. How long I slept I know not, but I was awakened by a dull sound, which resembled some one hammering in the distance. I suppose it was the peculiarity of the sound which woke me, for it was by no means loud, but conveyed to me the idea of some one striking iron with a muffled hammer. I rose up from my bed and went to the window. The moon was low in the western horizon, by which fact I knew that it must be near morning. The sound I have referred to reached me more distinctly than when in the back part of the chamber. It appeared to come from some outhouses which were situated about a hundred yards from the house.

Now I am naturally of an inquiring mind, and this sound, occuring as it did in the middle of the night, in such a remote, out of the way place, piqued my curiosity and I felt an irresistible desire to go out and discover the cause of it. This desire, as the sound continued, grew upon me with such intensity that I resolved to gratify it at any price.

I put on my boots, the only articles of attire I had discarded, and cautiously opening the door of my chamber noiselessly descended the rickety staircase. A few steps brought me into the lower apartment, which I found entirely deserted. I crept quietly to the door, and unfastening it without making the slightest noise was soon in the moonlight.

Not a soul was visible, but the sound still continued and grew more distinct as I approached the place from whence it proceeded. At last I found myself before a long low building, through the crevices of which I could perceive a lurid glare issuing. I stooped down and peered through the keyhole, and to my extreme surprise I saw half a dozen strong looking men, with their coats off and sleeves turned up, performing a variety of strange occupations. Some were working at a forge, others were superintending the casting of molds, and some were engaged in the process of milling coin. In a moment the whole truth burst upon me. Here was the gang of counterfeiters I was in search of, and the landlord and his wife evidently belonged to the same band, for in one corner I perceived them employed, the man polishing off some some half dollar pieces just turned from the molds, while the woman was packing the finished coins into rolls.

I had seen enough, and was about to return to my apartment again when suddenly I felt a heavy hand placed on my shoulder, and turning my head round, to my horror found myself in the grasp of as ill looking a scoundrel as ever escaped the gallows.

"What are you doing here, my good fellow?" he exclaimed in a gruff voice, giving me a shake.

"Taking a stroll by moonlight," I replied, endeavoring to maintain my presence of mind.

"Well, perhaps you'll just take a stroll in here, will you?" returned the ruffian, pushing open the door and dragging me in after him.

All the inmates of the barn immediately stopped work, and rushed toward us when they saw me.

"Why, what's this?" they all exclaimed.

"A loafer I found peeping outside," said the man who had captured me.

"He's a traveler that came to the tavern to-night and asked for lodgings; the last time I saw him he was safe in bed," said the landlord.

The men withdrew to a corner of the apartment, leaving one to keep guard over me. I soon saw they were in earnest consultation, and they were evidently debating some important question. The man keeping guard over me said nothing, but scowled fiercely. I had not uttered a single word during all the time I had been in the barn. I was aware that whatever I might say would in all probability only do more harm than good, and it has always been a maxim of mine to hold my tongue when in doubt. At last the discussion seemed to be settled, for the blackest and dirtiest of the whole came forward, and without any introduction exclaimed:

"I say, stranger, look here—you must die!"

I did not move a muscle, nor utter a word.

"You have found out our secret, and dead men tell no tales."

I was still silent.

"We give you ten minutes to say your prayers, and also allow you the privilege of saying whether you will be hanged or shot."

Suddenly an idea struck me. I remembered something that might save my life. I burst into a violent fit of laughter, in fact it was hysterical, but they did not know that. They looked from one to the other in the greatest amazement.

"Well, he takes it mighty cool, anyhow," said one.

"I suppose he don't think we are in earnest," said another.

"Come, stranger, you had better say your prayers," said the man who had first spoken; "time flies."

My only reply was a fit of laughter more violent than the first.

"The man's mad!" they exclaimed.

"Or drunk," said some.

"Well, boys," I cried, speaking for the first time, "this is the best joke I ever seed. What, hang a pal?"

"A pal—you a pal!"

"I ain't nothing else," was my elegant rejoinder.

"What's you name?"

"Did you ever hear of Ned Willett?" I asked.

"You may be certain of that. Ain't he at the head of our profession?"

"Well, then, I'm Ned Willett."

"You Ned Willett?" they all exclaimed.

"You may bet your life on that," I returned, swaggering up to the corner where I had seen the old woman counting and packing the counterfeit half dollars.

Fortune favored me. None of the men present had ever seen Ned Willett, although his reputation was well known to them, and my swaggering, insolent manner had somewhat thrown them off their guard, yet I could plainly see that all their doubts were not removed.

"And you call these things well done, do you?" I asked, taking up a roll of the money. "Well, all I can say is that if you can't do better than this you had better shut up shop, that's all."

"Can you show us anything better?" asked one of the men.

"I rather think I can. If I couldn't I'd go and hang myself."

"Let's see it," they all cried.

This was my last coup, and one on which I knew my life depended.

"Lookee here, gentlemen," I exclaimed, taking one of the counterfeit half dollars from my pocket which had been rejected at the bank, "here is my last job; what do you think of it?"

It was passed from hand to hand, some saying it was no counterfeit at all, others saying that it was.

"How will you prove it is a counterfeit?" asken one of the men.

"By weighing it with a genuine one," I replied.

This plan was immediately adopted and its character proved.

"Perhaps he got this by accident," I heard one of the men whisper to another.

"Try these," said I, taking the other two from my pocket.

All their doubts now vanished.

"Beautiful!" exclaimed some. "Splendid!" said others.

When they had examined it to their satisfaction they all of them cordially shook me by the hand, every particle of doubt having vanished from their minds. I carried out my part well. Some questions were occasionally asked me involving some of the technicalities of the business; these, however, I avoided by stating that I was on a journey of pleasure and would much rather drink a glass of whisky than answer questions. The whisky was produced and we made a night of it, and it was not until morning had dawned that we separated.

The next day I returned to Chicago, and brought down the necessary assistance, and captured the whole gang of counterfeiters in the very act. The den was broken up forever, and most of them were condemned to serve a term of years in the state prison.

I have those counterfeit half dollars still in my possession, and intend never to part with them, for they were certainly the means of saving my life.—A New York Detective in Yankee Blade.

A HAPPY PEOPLE.

Pen Picture of Life on the Sugar Cane Island of Barbadoes.

A HEALTHY FINANCIAL CONDITION.

The Great Hospitality and General Good Nature of the People.—Density of the Population.

The Barbadian, from a variety of causes, political principally, has developed a commercial activity greater than has so far appeared possible in the other of these islands. His island has become the distributing point of the region, and has, in consequence, attracted and held together a population larger, proportionately, than any of the other islands. The streets of the capital are alive with bustling trades, her buildings bear evidence that land is valuable, her roadstead is alive with foreign shipping, and the annual addition to her population appears to go hand in hand with the increase of her material prosperity, while other islands, notably St. Lucia, have been sacked and pillaged for 150 years prior to the opening of this century, conquered first by one power and then by the other. Barbadoes has, since 1625, developed as peacefully and normally as New England, and is today, in spite of the low price of cane sugar, one of the happiest little countries in the world.

Barbadoes has only 106,000 acres on which to support a population of nearly 172,000, giving only one square mile of elbow room to each 1,000 inhabitants—a state of density that should reassure the most pessimistic Chinaman of Malthusian disposition. She raises nearly $1,000,000 a year in revenue, has a public debt of only $150,000, has about $100,000 in her savings banks, has a good water supply and complete constitutional liberty. Could any man want more? And yet her chief port is a mere open roadstead; nor does she differ materially from the other Caribbean islands in climate or soil.

It is the one island of the West Indies that has the appearance of belonging to England; not only by the presence of British men-of-war in the roadstead and British soldiers about the streets of Bridgetown, but from the fact that the English people here control local affairs, take a pride in identifying themselves with the colony, and by their geographical situation are the center of the best English social life in this quarter of the globe. The Royal Mail steamer from Jamaica to Southampton, bearing the families of planters, army and navy officers, civil officials and tourists, stop at Barbadoes long enough to refresh body and mind in the society of fellow countrymen. From Barbadoes ply the smaller connecting steamers that distribute passengers to the neighboring islands as far north as St. Thomas and south to Demerara. The governor of the island unites in his drawing room—or, to speak more accurately, on his lawn tennis courts—Englishmen from every corner of the queen's dominions whose ways cross at this little point. If the Barbadian does not keep up with the last fad from Piccadilly it is merely because he cannot or will not appear at Government house.

ENGLISHMEN FEEL AT HOME.

In other islands of the Caribbee group the exiled Briton broods in misery surrounded by a mob of hopelessly unintelligent blacks. Here, on the other hand, his beloved ensign greets him at every turn, assuring him that he is on soil that is English more than merely in name. The governor's residence, known as government house, is in a handsome park approached by an avenue of grand trees, guarded by a sentry at the lodge gate and by very majestic household functionaries at the hall door. Visitors inscribe their names in a book kept for that purpose, and nothing is omitted to impress them with the fact that they are here dealing with the representative of royalty. But government house in the British West Indies is more than a formal official residence. The governor is expected, if not to govern, at least to be an important factor in the political and social life of the island; he is to be a man above party, able to unite under his roof the leading people of the place; to mediate between the crown and the people. His wife, on the other hand, is expected to be the pattern of good breeding, the arbiter on all social points, assisting her husband in making Government house a colonial court.

To do all this the government allows $3,000 a year for entertainment alone, $15,000 a year as salary besides his residence, handsomely furnished, representing for this little island about double what is furnished to the United States minister to England. When my rickety conveyance drew up before the great entrance of the Barbadian palace I handed to one of the resplendent servants a letter of introduction and then proceeded to write my name in the visitors' book. Before I had completed this important task the illustrious footman returned, and, with some appearance of having made more haste than usual, showed me into a large, shady, cool morning room, where the "first lady of Barbadoes" and Sir Charles Lees, the governor, bade me welcome.

AT THE GOVERNMENT HOUSE.

The lawn of Government house stretches away from the open doors and windows to the shade of graceful trees. When I arrived tennis was well under way. Ruddy, well built men and graceful women, all in comfortable flannels, were struggling for success with a vigor not readily associated with the tropics. Officers from the squadron as well as from the local garrison vied with one another in entertaining all such as wore petticoats, while groups of very important looking men chatted together here and there—made up, it was plain to see, of local officials. The governor and Lady Lees lost no opportunity of adding to the pleasure of their guests either by saying a few words of welcome to a new arrival or introducing those who appeared tortured by the know nobody feeling. The black chief justice of the island was away on official duties, much to my regret. Officially he holds a most exalted post and receives the highest honors; socially he cannot enter the dining room of the meanest white trader. Consequently we have the comical picture of a negro ostracized by the poorest white clerk, yet a frequent guest of the first lady of the island—not merely on her lawn, but at her table. The attorney general, by the way, told me many things about the negro that confirmed my suspicion that in spite of centuries of Christian rule devil worship was a fact in most of the islands, and even here under the eyes of an American bishop.—Barbadoes Letter in New York Times.

A Man with a Lariat.

A man was found nearly buried in the sand near San Francisco. Two deputy coroners could not pull him out. A horseman was sighted. This is what happened: He rode up to them, and when the situation was explained, calmly alighted, untied a long lariat which was coiled at the back of his saddle, and without a word began to make one end of it fast about the upper portion of the dead man's body. The rope was passed under the arms and tied in a knot at the shoulders. Having accomplished this the stranger paused, and looked up at the astonished morgue officials as much as to say:

"What's the matter with that?"

"What are you going to do next?" asked the deputy coroner.

"Do? Why, I'm going to pull him out."

"Well, you might as well give up that idea," returned the deputy. "It would take half a dozen men like us to move that man."

"Maybe it would," replied the stranger, with a chuckle that was certainly a little out of place, considering the occasion; "maybe it would take a dozen men such as we are, but it will only take one horse such as this is."

As he said this he pointed to his steed, which had hitherto stood motionless, watching the movements of his master with evident interest. Without more ado the stranger mounted his horse, and taking a turn around the horn of his saddle with the free end of the lasso, moved slowly ahead until the line was drawn taut. Then, in response to a gentle cluck from his rider, the animal settled his feet down into the sand and steadily bent his strength against the rope. There was no jerking. It was an even, steady pull. The line vibrated rapidly under the heavy strain as the intelligent equine hauled away upon it. In a moment the loop tightened about the corpse, and the body was drawn, slowly at first, then with a swish, from its bed in the sand.

Having accomplished this the mysterious horseman removed the loop from the body, recoiled his lariat, mounted his horse, and, after saluting the wondering officials in a highly dignified manner, rode silently away, no one knew whither. —San Francisco Chronicle.

A Funeral from the Tenements.

A funeral in a crowded east side street! From every window in the giant tenements human heads are thrust, in every doorway is a group of women, and clustered on every hand are little knots of children, on whose peaked faces is stamped the desire to lose no portion of what is going on. Stretched along the curb is a long string of coaches, headed by a hearse decked out in all the trappings of woe. The drivers, a brawny set of men, used to such scenes, stand together idly talking. In the mouth of one of the tenements stand a dozen women.

"She must be heart broken," said one.

"Indeed she must," said another, "or she'd never have spent so much money."

"It'll cost a heap to pay for such a beautiful funeral."

"And she hasn't a cent, poor thing. She'll have to work her fingers to the bone to pay for it."

"And the poor children; what'll they do?'

There is a clatter of heavy footsteps on the stairs, and a rosewood casket comes bumping down on the shoulders of six struggling men. It is rolled into the hearse, which moves slowly away, and the first coach takes its place. A wild shrill cry, half a moan and half a shriek of pain, is heard, and out comes the widow, a gaunt faced woman of middle age. She sways her body to and fro, and rubs her eyes viciously with her handkerchief. A crowd gathers around her, and she is bustled out of sight into the coach with three other women in rusty black clothes. A little boy in well worn knickerbockers climbs up in the driver's seat and there graciously recognizes a crowd of little chaps on the sidewalk, who gaze at him with envious eyes.

"Are ye goin' to ride up there, Dinny?" asked one.

"Of course," was the reply; "ain't it me fodder's funeral?" And the somber procession moved slowly away.—New York Sun.

Safety Pilot for Railway Trains.

An apparatus which promises to materially lessen the danger to human life in case of collision on railways has just appeared. It consists of a collapsible buffer, which, attached to and propelled in front of a train, will receive the force of the shock and permit the train to be brought to a standstill without being injured or derailed. The apparatus is provided with a series of air chambers connected to telescope together and permit the air to be gradually driven out, and mounted on a rolling support, which may be held near to, or removed some distance in advance of the train by the folding or unfolding of the telescoping sections. Either compressed air or steam may be admitted as desired to both series of air chambers.—New York Telegram.

FOOD AND HEALTH

Ignorance of the Laws of Eating Claims Many Victims.

A LECTURE ON A PRACTICAL TOPIC.

Evils of Overeating and Insufficient Nutrition—Subjects of Scientific Investigation.

The lecture was by Professor W. O. Atwater, on "Food and Health." It was under the auspices of the scientific societies of Washington and the Smithsonian institution. The principal point of the lecture was the adaptation of food to the demands of the body, and of the evils of overeating and insufficient nutrition.

The eating of bread and meat is a simple matter, but the way in which the different constituents of the food perform their offices in the maintenance of life are problems as profound as any with which physical science has to deal. The works of nature culminate in man. In his organism her operations are most complex and recondite. The laws which regulate out physical being are discovered but slowly, and by the most ingenious and profound research. Those which govern the nutrition of our bodies have been shrouded in mystery, which only the investigation of later time has begun to unveil. But the crude theories of the past are being gradually replaced by the more certain knowledge of the present.

But this evil of overeating, be it great or small, is, of course, confined to the classes to whom generous fortune, unchecked by reasonable restraint, allows it. There are countless sufferers from dietary habits into which self indulgence has not tempted, but relentless fate have forced them. The overfed only pay for pleasure the penalty of pain. The greater misery of the underfed, their hunger, with its inseparable attendants, ignorance, selfishness, crime and degradation, are things of terrible moment.

"The body receives food, drink and oxygen, which constitute its income. Part of this material is transformed into flesh, fat, bone and other tissues of the body. The remainder, together with the tissues worn out by use, is transformed into urea, carbonic acid, water, etc. These products are given off from the body and constitute its expenditure."

Illustrated maps were used to show the dietaries of different people engaged in different occupations, and he proved that although people in this country work harder and need to have more and better food than those of corresponding classes in Europe, yet that many persons of sedentary habits, who really need but little, consume as much as would be required if they were engaged in severe muscular labor.

A certain amount of food is necessary to keep the machinery moving. A large number of well to do people of this country eat much more than is necessary. The excess consists of meats and sweetmeats. We ransack the four quarters of the earth for materials to excite the appetite, and thus increase the amount of food consumed. Most people of this country are engaged in occupations which require comparatively little muscular exercise, and the result is we impose upon our bodies the task of getting rid of a large amount of material in excess of its needs at fearful cost to health and happiness.

The cheapest food is that which supplies the most nutriment for the least money. The most economical food is that which is cheapest and best adapted to the wants of the user. But the maxim that "the best is the cheapest" does not apply to food. The best food, in the sense of that which has the finest appearance and flavor and is sold at the highest price, is not generally the cheapest nor the most economical, nor is it always the most healthful. It is important that people be taught about their food, but the first requisite is the information to give them. The subject is, however, new. In its investigation we stand upon the borders of a continent of which but a small part has yet been explored. In the great European universities investigation is active. In our own country extremly little has been done, and that little is dependent almost entirely upon private munificence for its support.

"What," said the speaker, "is to be done about it? In the first place we ought to find what flaws there are, if any, in the conclusions to which the best research of the time seems to force us. Then we must see how these conclusions are to be supplemented. This will require abstruse and costly experimenting. But at the same time the public needs to be educated. People need to understand the fundamental principles. The laws of a large number of states and territories require that physiology be taught in the public schools, but unfortunately the teachers themselves are deficient in training, and many of the text books are sadly defective."

In referring to the importance of painstaking research, the speaker cited the experience with the respiration apparatus. This in its best form has been used in a few European universities and experiment station laboratories, but not in this country. The greatest difficulties attend its management. Professor Henneberg, of the University of Goettingen, began work of this kind over twenty years ago and has only lately, and after the expenditure of many thousands of dollars, succeeded in getting his respiration apparatus into condition for experiments of the desired accuracy. But the great problem now before the student of animal nutrition is that of the income and expenditure of energy in the animal body. It will require the keenest, most elaborate and most painstaking efforts of the chemist, the physicist, and the biologist, but the effort toward its solution must be made.

In speaking of researches in this line in the United States it was that we are very far behind European investigators, that, indeed, we have hardly made a beginning. What we most need is trained men with high, scholarly ideas, enthusiastic devotion, and abundant means at their command. That we shall some time have these there is good ground to hope.—Washington Post.

The Sea Serpent at Last.

The earliest sea serpent tale comes by way of Stonington from Capt. David Tufts, of the British schooner Annie Harper. The captain is from St. Johns, N. B., with lumber, and put into port Saturday night.

He reports that Saturday morning, about 10 o'clock, when between Block Island and Watch Hill, his attention was attracted by a great commotion in the water about 150 yards from his vessel, and while his attention was drawn in that direction he saw what he is fully satisfied was a veritable sea serpent. At least he saw some huge monster that answered the description often given in other summers of such an animal by those who claim to have seen the mysterious monster. Whatever the animal may have been, the captain says that it appeared to be about 100 feet long. At one time it raised a tail thirty feet in the air, waved it for a few seconds and then lashed the water into a foam.

While this portion of the body was exposed Capt. Tufts had a good view of the same, and describes it as being about the size of the main boom to his vessel, tapering to a fine point. In color it was a dark brown, with spots almost black. The animal was going in an easterly direction, apparently at a speed of about ten miles an hour, and after his body disappeared from view the wake made by the monster was discernible for a long distance. As the weather was clear and nothing obscured the vision of the captain, his observation as above has transformed him from being skeptical as to the existence of sea serpents into a full believer in there being such a member of the family of marine monsters. Capt. Tufts has made several voyages to this port, and is ordinarily a thoroughly reliable man. Some Stonington people are inclined to believe in the serpent also.—Providence Journal.

A Creature from Arizona.

The following remarkable story comes from Arizona, via a Cincinnati paper: A winged monster with an extremely elongated tail and an immense pair of wings was found on the alkali desert recently by two ranchers. The creature was evidently greatly exhausted by a long flight and when discovered was able to fly but a short distance without resting. After the first shock of amazement had passed the two men, who were on horseback and armed with Winchester rifles, regained sufficient courage to pursue the monster and after an exciting chase succeeded in getting near enough to open fire with their rifles. The creature then turned on the men, but owing to its exhausted condition they were able to keep out of its way and after a few well directed shots the monster rolled over dead.

The men then proceeded to make an examination, and found that their victim measured about 92 feet in length and the greatest diameter was 50 inches. The monster had only two feet, which were situated a short distance in front of where the wings were joined to the body. The head, as near as they could judge, was about 8 feet long, the jaws being thickly set with strong, sharp teeth. Its eyes were as large as a dinner plate and protruded about half way from the head. They had some difficulty in measuring the wings, as they were partly folded under the body, but they finally got one straightened out sufficiently to get a measurement of 78 feet, making the total measurement from tip to tip about 160 feet. The men intend to skin the creature and send the hide east for examination by eminent scientists.

A Nickel in the Slot Telephone.

A novel telephone has been placed in the New Haven house. It cannot be used unless a fee is paid. There are only two instruments of the kind in existence, the other being in Hartford. There are five slots in the machine for the reception of a nickel, ten cent piece, quarter, half dollar and dollar respectively. These amounts cover the rates charged for telephoning to various places in and out of the state. To use the telephone it is first necessary to call up the central, as on an ordinary telephone. The objective point is then asked for, and when this is reached the party who rings up is told to put the necessary fee in the slot. If a dime is dropped a bell of high tone rings. For twenty-five cents the tone becomes lower, and for half a dollar the sound is like that of the average door bell. The dollar sound is similar to that of a fire alarm gong. The sound of the bell is the signal to go ahead and talk. The contrivance is the invention of William Gray, of Hartford. A company has been formed for the manufacture of the instruments. —Cor. New York Sun.

Ten Years Old and Almost Six Feet.

Pine Grove, a hamlet near Douglasville, Tex., boasts of a girl not quite 10 years old who is 5 feet 10 inches tall. She is the daughter of an engineer, who is himself a giant in size, while his wife is 6½ feet in height. The girl, her parents say, was an unusually small and sickly baby, and didn't show any remarkable growth until she was about 6 years old. She is stout and has the strength of a man, but her mind is feeble, or else has been so outstripped by her body as to give it no chance to develop. The young giantess presents a most remarkable spectacle with her childish face and dress, seated playing in the sand or amusing herself with a doll.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Besides the rabbit pest New South Wales is troubled by another called the "flying fox pest." This creature is a species of bat, the largest of the bat tribe, sometimes measuring nearly five feet in expanse of wings, and is popularly termed the flying fox on account of the red, foxlike color of the fur and "the very vulpine aspect of the head." The attacks of these destructive animals are mainly aimed against fruits and other vegetable substances.

A giant named Catoni, who was more than seven feet high and proportionately stout, has just died in Italy after having collected $2,000 from a museum in Rome for the right to his skeleton.

WON BY YOUTH.

A Desperate Encounter Between Two Giraffes in the Wilds of Africa.

FEMALE HERD FOLLOWS THE VICTOR

The Old Veteran, the Hero of Many a Fierce Struggle, was no Match for his Agile Younger Opponent.

To the south and eastward of Lobengula's capital is situated Macalaca land. It was conquered by that doughty monarch's father, Mosilikatze, and still remains subservient to the Matabeles. The approximate position of my camp at the time I witnessed the scene I will endeavor to describe as latitude 21 degs. south, longitude 32 degs east. The country surrounding me was marvelously attractive, although only sand, very sparsely covered with bush, therefore totally useless for agricultural or pastoral purposes, but through the flat veldt's surface, at irregular intervals, rose copjes of immense blocks of stone, piled one upon the other, that resembled the debris that might have been left after Titans had built a gigantic city or mammoth fortification. These eruptions from beneath the earth's surface were covered with parasitic plants, decorated with most attractive fruit or gorgeous blossoms. A species of aloe, too, was numerous, the upright stem which bears its flower having a very striking resemblance to civilization's unsightly telegraph poles.

This country is not destitute of water, as is attested by the numbers of baboons, monkeys and leopards that frequent the copjes, and the antelopes, zebras and guinea fowl that wander over the flats. Possibly the indigenous bushmen know where to find this necessity of life, but these astute savages concealed their secret from me and my people. I was riding slowly along, admiring the beautiful colors of that distant landscape. In close attendance was my Massara guide. My reverie was broken by an unknown sound, which echoed and reached from the surrounding crags. It was not the honest bark of the baboon, or the reverberating voice of the lion, or the hyena's discordant laugh, but a combination of all of them, uttered in quick, successive gasps.

On inquiry from my follower he informed me that kameels (giraffes) were the originators of the unknown sound. The Massara begged me to follow him. This I did, and so became witness of one of the most extraordinary sights in wild life that I had ever seen. Those who have dwelt in the distant east have doubtlessly seen male camels fight and noted with what obstinacy, power and viciousness they try to maim or disable one another; how they shriek with rage over each advantage that they obtain, and yell with pain when they are severely hurt.

A giraffe duel much resembles a camel's. The rivals were not well matched—the taller was out of condition and very old; the other was in splendid form and in the prime of life. I concluded that a fight was imminent, and had no difficulty in deciding which would be the victor. They roared in unison, as if each were trying to drown the other's voice; sometimes this would cease for a few moments and then begin again with renewed strength. Presently the belligerents came within a few yards of each other.

Although the giraffe possessed a certain beauty when at rest it loses its grace when in motion, and the greater its speed the more ungainly does it appear. But when two mature bulls begin to waltz and dance violently around each other, each endeavoring to outdo the other in agility, at the same time mumbling their jaws and emitting fearfully discordant roars, it is certainly one of the most absurd sights human eye ever looked upon. I have often seen a crane dance—a function common enough north of the Vaal river; it is more than funny—it is ridiculous—but cannot for an instant be compared to the antics of these two mammoth brutes. Their great height added to the grotesqueness of their behavior; but even if the beasts had been no bigger than goats or sheep, the absurd manner in which they swung about their feet, contorted their bodies and swayed their heads must have moved the most phlegmatic.

We lay hidden and quiet while the rivals were getting closer and closer to each other; at length, when they were nearly within striking distance, simultaneously each dropped upon his knees and commenced to twist and twine his long neck about that of the other, with the evident purpose of seizing his adversary's throat. This lasted several minutes, but both were "skilled of fence," and ultimately relinquished this style of fighting and adopted other tactics. They began rearing as if to bear each other down, their mouths all the time open to grip if opportunity occurred. At length the violent exercise began to tell upon the elder beast; he made some mistake in a parry, and the younger seized with his teeth the foot of the veteran, who in return laid hold of his opponent's ear.

For some moments there was a pause. It was very brief, and then the struggle was renewed. With a gigantic effort the younger giraffe threw the old hero upon his haunches. He looked very much as if he had played his last card, but there was pluck in his aged heart yet, though the battle was not for him; years told against him, and victory lay with the youngster, who celebrated it by trying to drag the vanquished after him. This operation must have been painful, for the shrieks that the defeated warrior uttered were heartrending.

After a final worry, the hero of the hour walked off, mobbed the two herds of females together, and willingly followed by all took the lead. Not one of the zenana of the fallen chief turned a head for an instant to see what had become of him.

The veteran finally tried to pull himself together, but he was dreadfully knocked about as well as very lame. With anxious eyes he gazed in the direction the herd had taken, possibly wishing to follow, or with a hope that one of his wives at least would return to him. Not so; the poor old fellow was doomed to disappointment, and appeared to realize that he was deserted. The life before him, I knew, would be one of misery, therefore, what better could I do but raise my rifle, glance along my sight and send a bullet through his heart. It was a sad alternative, but after all I think it was humane.—Cor. London Graphic.

A MEXICAN LEGEND.

A Mythical Story of an Illusive Valley of Gold in Eastern Arizona.

The story of the famous treasure of the "Madre d'Oro" is an old one. It comes from the Aztecs of Mexico. Somewhere in southeastern Arizona there is a small valley, about five miles long and two miles wide, walled in by towering mountains. The sides are so precipitous that it is impossible to climb down them, and there is only one entrance, through a cave, which is carefully hidden by Indians, who guard the treasure for the second coming of Montezuma. It is said that even among them the entrance is only known to the three most aged men, and is never communicated except when, on the death of one, it is necessary to give the knowledge into the keeping of another.

The valley itself, though surrounded by inhospitable rocks, is a paradise. Watered by the stream which flows through it, its soil is covered with flowers and beautiful trees, through the branches of which flit bright hued birds. The only reptiles seen are the gold snakes, with their glittering greenish yellow scales.

Stretching across the valley from one side to the other is a ledge of pure gold, its masses of virgin metal gleaming and glistening in the sunlight. It is said to be five feet, ten feet, fifty feet, 100 feet wide. The gold lies in it in great veins and nuggets, imbedded in clear quartz, the sharp angles of which glitter in the sunlight like gigantic diamonds. Across the ledge the stream flows, forming a little waterfall, below which the nuggets of gold can be seen in the water and out. Gold in the ledge, gold in the scales of snakes, gold in the stream, gold in the birds—gold, gold, gold, gold—is the refrain of the golden story.

The fearful precipices which surround the place, the strange ceremonies and horrid banquets which have served to keep the secret safe, the tribe of Aztecs, living only to preserve for their mysterious ruler this treasure house of nature, have all aided in giving to the story its strange interest. Small wonder is it that the pulse should quicken and the eye grow bright as you hear the tale from the lips of men who more than half believe it. The lonely desert surrounding you, with the tall cacti looking like ghosts in the half moonlight; the long drawn melancholy of the coyote's howl, the prospector's fire of grease wood, the men with their rough clothing and quaint language, all vanish as you listen, and in imagination you are transported to the wonderful valley in which is the "Madre d'Oro," the "Mother of Gold."

Nor are they content to tell the story as an Indian legend. They cite instances of white men who have seen the place, who have descended into the valley in some way and returned with all the gold they could carry. The location of the spot is always in a dangerous Indian country. I have been told twice that it was in the Chircahua mountains. It is always said to have been found merely by accident by men who were either hunting or prospecting for ledges, about the only two occupations which will make unscientific men climb the mountains. It can only be seen from the upper end after the morning mists in the valley have cleared away. Then, as one stands on the rugged peaks and looks down, he sees the great ledge spanning the valley below him, the virgin metal glittering in the sunlight, and he knows that he has before him the place of which he has heard so much and dreamed so often.—Interview in Washington Star.

American Perfumes.

"It does not follow nowadays," said the druggist, "that because a toilet perfume is made in France it is superior in quality to one of American preparation. Such was formerly the case, but the art of making fine perfumes has been carried to such perfection of late years in our own country that not more than one-eighth as much of the French preparations is sold in the United States today as was sold a few years ago. Nearly $3,000,000 worth of home distilled perfumes are made in New York alone every year. Chicago manufacturers put one-half as much on the market, and there are extensive perfumery manufactories in Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, St. Louis and other large places.—New York Evening Sun.

Modern Witchcraft.

In divers villages in Pennsylvania, some of them in the Dunkard settlements, are women who are supposed to be witches. Some are shrewd enough not to apply their arts for strangers, but to those whom they know, as stated in a newspaper article some years ago, they will sell charms to ward off lightning from buildings, dry up the wells of the enemies of applicants, force cows to give bloody milk, cause sickness in the family, destroy beauty, separate man and wife and reunite estranged lovers.—Dr. Buckley in Century.

A Remarkable Growth.

Wonderful things happen in Ireland as well as elsewhere, if the following can be vouched for, which is not likely. It is related that a gentleman in Ireland, on cutting open a potato at dinner, found in the center a half sovereign, around which the vegetable had grown. Though discolored, it was in a good state of preservation, and is now a pretty ornament to a watch chain.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Who Did What?

In the days when our grandmothers were girls there came occasionally into the family of a good deacon with nine children a village dressmaker. She had an absorbing interest in other people's affairs, and always looked forward with particular pleasure to the week during which she cut and fitted for the deacon's girls, knowing that his house was in some sort a social center, where she was likely to hear plenty of fresh news and entertaining anecdotes.

One day she arrived late for her work, and as she entered the house caught a glimpse of the six daughters already assembled in the family sitting room with their gowns and patterns, their workboxes and their new roll of "Injy muslin."

But none of them were at work, for one was telling the other a story of such absorbing interest that they sat breathless and spellbound, with hands fallen in their laps or needles suspended in the air.

The sight was too much for the newcomer. With one mitt on and one off, her unfastened pelisse dragging from her shoulders, her bonnet askew and its loosened strings streaming, she appeared suddenly among the astonished girls, crying as she came:

"What? What? What is it? Who did what?"

She was answered, although giving a full answer involved the retelling of the whole story, but her comprehensive inquiry became thereafter a family byword.

Among the deacon's descendants to this day if one shows signs of too great inquisitiveness, it is sufficient for any other member of the family to ask, with a lift of the eyebrow:

"Who did what?"—Youth's Companion.

Taking Thackeray Seriously.

The obscurity in which Thackeray has left the beginning of Newcome, Bart., is an instance of his forgetfulness about his people which, glaring as it is, has hitherto escaped comment. Thomas Newcome, the elder, is said to have been "the founder" of the Newcome family. We are given to understand that he was a foundling. Up to the time of his demise there was no Newcome, Bart. Mr. Newcome "might have been made" one, but "he eschewed blood red hands." As he said, "It wouldn't do; the Quaker connection wouldn't like it."

But his twin sons by his second wife, Sophia Alethea Hobson, are stated to have been called Hobson and Brian, respectively, "after their uncle and late grandfather, whose name and rank they were destined to perpetuate." The "rank" is clearly the Newcome baronetcy, but equally clearly the uncle and grandfather must have been Hobsons, the founder of the Newcome family being "himself alone." The twins at first take order as above. Then Brian is declared to be the elder "by a quarter of an hour." He is referred to as "Mr. Brian." All at once he becomes "Sir Brian," and "perpetuates" a "rank" to which, for all that appears, he had no right whatever.—Notes and Queries

A Hawk Killed by a Railway Engine.

To railway officials it is a well known fact that the engines of high speed expresses kill small and large heavy flying birds, such as partridges and grouse, in great quantities, sometimes carrying their bodies long distances. A few months ago the writer was shown by a locomotive superintendent of one of the principal northern lines a dead bird which, strange to say, though a very rapid flier, had met its doom through the agency of the iron horse. This bird was a sparrow hawk, and it is now stuffed and may be seen in the Carlton road board school museum, Kentish Town.

The driver of the train relates that he was traveling between sixty and seventy miles an hour near Melton, when just on the point of entering a long tunnel he observed fluttering in front of the engine some object which he at first mistook for a rag, but when on leaving the tunnel he went forward he discovered to his astonishment, that it was a sparrow hawk which had become entangled between the handrail and smoke box of the engine, and was held there firmly by the pressure of the wind. It was not quite dead when taken out of this curious deathtrap, though one eye had been destroyed. There is no doubt that it met its death accidentally, as a hawk can fly quicker than the fastest trains travel—so the drivers say, who often observe them flying low down in the hedgerow and keeping up with the train till some unwary small bird, frightened by the noise, flies out of the fence, when the hawk pounces on it and devours it.—Strand Magazine.

Why Birds Migrate.

Why some birds which could pick up food among us all the year around should leave when food is plentiful while others with similar ways of life remain, is still a mystery. It is easy to understand that a species which preys on fresh water fish and on frogs should seek other quarters when the ponds are frozen and the frogs buried in the clay. But it is not quite so clear why the swallow and the flycatcher leave a region where there is perpetual summer and winged food in abundance, to risk a long journey over sea and land, only to find a great scarcity of the same kind of food. And it is equally puzzling that the seed and fruit eaters who since October have been fattening among the gardens of Algeria and Egypt, should suddenly, in March or April, be seized with such an inordinate craving for a change of diet as to fly 3,000 miles on the chance of picking up the short commons of an English spring.

Perhaps it will be found that immigration is natural to all birds, and is greater or less as circumstances may determine. Every animal shifts its quarters according to the plentifulness or scarcity of food. Even our residents move up and down the country at different periods of the year, living in the lowlands in the winter and in the uplands in the summer, and it is well known that all winter there is a continual drifting of the birds from the Continent to our islands, according to the weather.—London Standard.

A Curious Horse.

Mr. Yelkins had a fine bay horse that had a mania for catching chickens, and one day last week, when he went out to the stable, he found the horse lying dead. He cut the body open and found that the horse had actually eaten a whole chicken, and the bones had cut through the stomach, causing death.—Santa Maria (Cal.) Times.

HOW TO VOTE.

THE NEW BALLOT LAW AND HOW TO USE IT.

Text of the Law and Explanatory Cuts and Sample Ticket—The Law Said to Be Safe Against Repeaters and Vote Buyers—Read It Over and File the Paper Away for Reference.

The new Australian ballot law is now in force in this state, and every voter is interested in knowing how to comply with the law in casting his ballot.

A few municipal elections have been conducted under the new plan, and others are yet to be held before the final test of the law is to be made at the fall general election. To assist voters to a proper understanding of the way to do it, we print herewith the full text of the law and illustrations of the voting booths.

Cut No. 1 shows the boxes or compartments in which the voter prepares his ballot.

Cut No. 2 shows the position of the ballot clerks, voters in the stalls, and the officers of election checking the voters as they deposit the ballots in the box near the exit. Enter with the man to the right of the cut, and get a ballot from the gentleman standing at the end of the table, provided the young man at the desk finds your name properly registered in the great register open before him.

Then walk over to one of the open stalls and mark your ballot in accordance with your wishes, and pass in front of the group at the left, and announce your name to the judges of election. When the young man sitting at the desk finds your name properly registered, you are permitted to deposit the ballot in the box and pass out. That is all there is to it. Cut No. 3 shows the ground plan of Cut No. 2, with the positions of each election officer and voter indicated.

It has been claimed by some that the new law can be beaten, and that vote buying cannot be prevented by the experiment. The following editorial from the San Francisco Examiner seems to state the case about as fairly as it can be done:

"A correspondent of the Examiner warned the California electors of the method by which the Australian ballot system was beaten in Montana. It was a variation of the 'Tasmania dodge,' a voter being bribed to bring out a ballot by substituting a piece of blank paper for the official ballot that was given him on entering the booth. In the 'Tasmania dodge' the voter was supposed to vote the blank paper, in the Montana case to tear it up. The official ballot

"But a second check, still more valuable, prevents any illicit use of the ballot even if it is taken outside. When the voter enters the booth the ballot clerks mark the check number of his ballot against his name on the printed register. When he marks the ballot he folds it with the counterfoil or tag that bears the number of the ballot exposed, and delivers the ballot to the inspector. The inspector announces the name and number, the ballot clerks verify it from their record, and the inspector tears off the tag and drops the ballot in the box. If the ballot does not bear the same number as the one he received from the ballot clerks he cannot vote.

"The California ballot system cannot be 'beaten' in this manner except by the collusion of the election officers, challengers and watchers of both parties. It is hardly possible to secure so large a number of corrupt men together, or at all events men corrupted by the same side. Whatever vote buying is done under the system will have to be carried out under the 'assistance to illiterates' provision. This will be a possible but dangerous game to play. It will require the collusion of election officers, and will be readily detected by the watchers. The November election will show whether an amendment on this point will be necessary."

The sample ballot given is intended to show how to mark votes. If a straight ticket is voted, an X in the space at the right of the party for which the voter desires to cast his ballot is sufficient. But a split ticket requires an X opposite each name voted for. Only one office is on this ticket. All are arranged in the same manner.

COURT NOTES.

Geo. M. Gill, Superior Judge.

WEDNESDAY, Oct. 26, 1892.

A. Cohn vs. Pablo Yparraguirre.—Filed complaint and issued summons.

Estate of Joseph Fernbach deceased—Filed inventory and appraitement. Filed petition for order of sale of personal property.

P. Labarge of Lone Pine was in town to-day.

H. W. Barton of Big Pine was in town a few days during the week.

Charley Levy came down from Bishop on Tuesday and stayed in town a few days.

Sheriff Gorman is circulating among the voters in the nothern end of the county.

Miss Annie Bell returned last week from a six month visit to relatives in Stockton.

The full ticket to be voted for at the coming election will be found in this issue.

W. F Bunney and D. J. Hession are canvassing in the southern end of the county.

A telegram from P. H. Mack Esq. states that he is in Mono county interviewing the voters of that section.

Mrs. J. Brown went to Bishop on Wednesday's train and is visiting her sister, Mrs. Darrah.

Henry Levy says he will attend the Chicago fair to secure a strict observance of the Sabbath.

Jake Miller spent the week at Big Pine. He says that burgh is quite lively now owing to a number of sheepmen being in town.

A donation party will be given at the church next Thursday evening for the benefit of Rev. H. Winsor and family. Bring your donations.

Everybody is invited to the social party given by the Fort Sunday School this evening. Be on hand at 7 o'clock at the Gorman ranch.

In addition to being the nominee of the Republicans for Superior Judge of Kern County, A. R. Conklin is also the nominee for the Prohibitionists.

The first rain of the season set in Wednesday evening. Through the night and during the following day the rain kept falling gently. The weather continued warm.

A sheepman at Big Pine had a hard streak of luck this week. While driving his band through a canyon about 140 fell off the grade and were killed. When he got out with the remainder the sheriff met him with an attachment amounting to $700.

Last Tuesday Mr. A. W. Eibeshutz shipped to San Francisco 45 cases of honey. This is the first product from new producers aside from those who had before been in the business. By the same train Mr. Eibeshutz also shipped a lot of apples to the same destination. The apples sent were not a commercial venture. The exhorbitant cost for freight prohibits that, and none but those who can afford luxuries could pay the price Owens Valley apples would bring in San Francisco.

The death of Mrs. Harrison excites the sympathy of all Americans for the President and his family. The prolonged illness of the deceased, and the warnings of physicians that death would be the result had prepared the family for what must be the end. But when that end came their grief was not the less heartfelt. Mrs. Harrison was a woman whose character commanded that respect which all her predecessors in the White House were so well entitled to.

The Californian Illustrated Magazine for November is one of the most interesting numbers of that excellent periodical yet issued. The subjects of the longer articles are of especial interest at this time. "Our Commercial Growth and The Tariff", are discussed from a Republican standpoint by R H McDonald, and from a Democratic standpoint by Hon. Stephen M. White. "Millionaires", "Pre-Columbians of the South-West", "Pagan Temples of San Francisco", and in fact all the contents are good. The price is 25 cents, Address Californian Publishing Co.

Heed The Warning.

A few days ago Alexander Clark was riding home, and when a short distance south of the cemetery some one who was in a field near by fired a gun. The report caused the horse to shy badly, and he fell, carrying his rider down with him. Mr. Clark managed to keep from under the horse but one foot was caught in the stirrup. The animal sprang up but fortunately did not run, and Mr. Clark got clear without serious hurt. At the same time two women were driving in a cart near the same place, and their horse shied so badly as to nearly upset the cart. Hunters should take care when shooting near the highways, as human lives may be sacrificed through want of thought on their part.

The Reduction Works.

For years past there has been talk of building a reduction works at Los Angeles. At last, however, work has been begun to clear the ground for a plant, and all the necessary machinery is reported to be contracted for. The works are to have capacity for working 200 tons of ore per day. Thousands of tons of ore are in Inyo county within two hundred miles of the new works but cannot be sent there until the gap of a little over one hundred miles of railroad shall be closed between the mines and Mojave. In the mean time all the ore of Inyo county is hauled over two ranges of mountains and six hundred miles to San Francisco.

The Great Register

The total number of voters registered in the county is 884. The last name was sent to this office yesterday morning, and the greater part of the whole is now in print. The whole number of names on the Great Register for 1890 was 1087. This shows a decrease of 203 votes in two years; but the loss is more apparent than real. On the register two years ago were many names of men who had left the county and several who were dead. The present list is very carefully prepared, and with the exception of one or two voters who have died since being registered, every name is that of an actual voter.

A Royal Visitor.

On Wednesday afternoon a large grey eagle alighted upon the ball at the top of the flag-staff on the Court House. He moved his head about in the haughty style of his kind and appeared to be critically examining the town. M. Laprairie ran out with a rifle and took aim at the bird, but just as the trigger was touched the eagle spread his wings and flew off. He soared around and then sailed away toward the Sierra mountains, no one regretting that he was not shot, not even the man who had shot at him.

Fruit Growers.

The annual State Convention of Fruit Growers will meet at San Jose on Tuesday, November 15. The interests of fruit growers in all parts of the State will be considered, and the latest and best methods of culture, propagation, packing and marketing of fruits of all kinds will be described. It is requested that samples of fruits, either fresh or dried, be sent for exhibit. All such packages to be addressed to the Chairman of the Exhibit Committee, San Jose.

Ex remes Meeting.

The higher summits of the Sierra Nevada Mountains are already covered with the snowy robe of winter, and at the same time along their base yet linger traces of early summer. Mr. J. Brown on Wednesday brought to this office a sample of strawberries gathered on his place four miles south of town. The vines are still bearing, and the berries are large and fine flavored.

The Fort Sunday School will give a social at the residence of J. G. Smith this evening beginning at 7 p. m. Refreshments will be served at 25 cents per plate.

The sale of personal property of the Vogt estate is postponed till Saturday November 12 next. See the advertisement.

To Make Him Brave.

"I don't know what to do with that boy of mine," said a fond father to a friend; "he has no spunk in him; lets all the other boys crow over him—in short, is a perfect coward."

"What good will that do?"

"It will put some grit into him."—Philadelphia Press.

Took Good Care of His Throat.

Some amusing stories relative to the effect of the recent court martials and investigations are going about in army circles, and one of them comes from Jefferson Barracks, Mo. When a member of the military band at the barracks came to the post surgeon with a long face and a plaintive story about a sore throat he was treated with a consideration which was as marked as it was gratifying.

"Sore throat, eh?" said the surgeon, pleasantly. "Let me see. Oh, that's not so bad. A slight irritation, nothing more. You'll be all right in a day or two. I guess you would better take no chances of renewing the trouble by using your throat, though, so I will recommend that you be excused from active duty for two weeks."

Armed with the surgeon's certificate the bandsman obtained his two weeks' relief from active duty. The two weeks had just come to an end when he met the post surgeon on the parade ground. The bandsman saluted. The surgeon recognized the face and stopped.

"How's the throat?" he said pleasantly.

"It's quite well, sir," was the reply.

"That's good," said the surgeon. "You can get back to your duty now without fear. By the way, what instrument do you handle in the band?"

"The small drum, sir," said the musician.—New York Tribune.

One on Senator Quay.

At Cleveland they put two cars filled with Polish immigrants on the rear of our train, as they had through some accident been belated, and we sped away for Toledo. At about 9 o'clock at night a man came into our car, in which Senator Quay had a berth, and said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, a child has been born in one of the immigrant cars. It's a boy. Although we are in Ohio, I'm a Pennsylvanian myself, and as Senator Quay is also on the train it is proposed to name that boy Quay Langkowski. It has been proposed that we all chip in and raise a purse for the boy."

We chipped. Quay saw our whole pile and raised it by $5, saying that he should be proud of the honor, and the man passed into the next car. An hour later we learned that no child had been born, and that the fellow had raised $75 and dropped off at some station.—New York Sun.

Explained.

Judge (to witness)—You say that the defendant was born deaf and dumb, and at the age of 12 he lost the power of speech. Will you explain to the court how it was possible for him to lose the power of speech when he was already dumb?

Witness—When he was 12 years old he was playing in a sawmill one day and the buzz saw took off eight of his fingers.—Life.

From the German.

Sergeant—You are the most stupid soldier in the whole regiment. Have you any brothers?

Recruit—Yes, I have a brother.

"Is he as stupid as you?"

"Yes, and a great deal more."

"That's hardly possible. What does the donkey do for a living?"

"He is a sergeant."—Texas Siftings.

On the Cable Car.

Passenger—I say, conductor, you pulled up one fare too many.

Conductor—How do you know?

Passenger (who forgets to count himself)—Why, there's only six in the car and you've got seven on the register.

Conductor—Well, you see we register for fools just the same as other people—Racket.

The Intercepted Superlative.

He—Do you like ice cream, Miss Sweetlips?

She—No, I——

He—Thank heavens! I wish I had known you——

She—Beg pardon, Mr. Poseyboy. You interrupted me. I was about to add that I love it.—Burlington Free Press.

A Wonderful Similarity.

"Darling," he said, as he kissed the tips of her pretty little pink fingers, "why are you like the art practiced by all the prestidigitators?"

"I don't know," she replied, shuddering slightly; "why am I?"

"Because, precious, you are slight of hand."—Chatter.

A Deaf and Dumb Instrument.

"I want to have a private talk with Smith which I don't want any one to hear, but I don't know how to manage it. His office is always crowded."

"If you don't want any one to hear you, talk to him over the telephone."

"Well—er—I want Smith to hear me."—Chatter.

Too True.

"The seasons are changing," said one tramp to another.

"Yes," was the sad reply; "we get winter now when we were expecting spring."

"Yes; but, after all, that's what we need."

"What! winter in spring?"

"No. Change."

"Yes, indeed (slapping his pocket); what we do need is change."—New York Herald.

Plants may take their carbonic acid from the air and use the carbon, but man cannot use the simple compounds. He has his food given him in complex composition.

INCONGRUITIES.

locked within the colorless face, last night,
Of one for whom life promised, when he went,
The alluring fruit of rich accomplishment—
One dowered to find rare favor in the sight
Of all who set their spirits toward the light:
One molded to be nobly eminent.
Yet, ah! that in this great sweet heart should glide
The subtle and fatal curse, too late espied!
He pressed the pistol to his brow and died!

meet amid my walk, from day to day,
A little faded man, low bowed with years.
From him time's tyrannies, that disdain men's tears,
Health, kindred, wealth and friends have stolen away.
And yet to its hopeless, aching, crumbling clay
His tired out soul with stubborn clutch adheres.
O human life! thou sphinx, whose haughty will Forever through the ages gives us still
These baffling riddles that we solve so ill!

There were two men, each greatly loathing each,
Because of battling interests and the greed
For goals of rule that either strained to reach,
And rivalry of differing aim and deed.
And both won much, though either failed to fall,
And still each loathed his fellow till the last:
Nor did their great hates pass away at all
Till either's power to loathe or love was past.

And after? Why, their tombs' old sculptured pride
Rise in the regal abbey, side by side,
Where friends devoutly laid them when they died.

There was a man that loved a woman well,
Even loved with so all dominant a fire
That only thus could he make language tell
The depth and breadth and height of his desire:
"When we are dead, pray heaven that either lies
In graves whose mantling grasses intertwine!
For were we laid apart, my dust would rise
And die again that it might rest by thine!"

And after? Why, the woman sleeps today,
Dreamless and easeful, under graveyard clay.
Where sleeps her love? The immense sea does not say!

—Edgar Fawcett.

Helping Old Trees.

Old trees that begin to show the ravages of time may be helped in various ways. A lady who loves her trees as if they were human beings says that when she sees one of her favorites less flourishing than usual she always administers a tonic of some kind. To very old trees she gives doses of sulphur by means of holes bored in the trunk which are filled with the powder and then cemented. With younger ones she tries various kinds of fertilizers; and in the case of one gigantic old oak that was hollow with age she filled the decayed places with cement just like a tooth, scraping out the accumulated rubbish and filling the cavity to the surface. This she said was a great success and evidently prolonged the life of the old monarch for many years.—New York Tribune.

Atmosphere in Colorado.

As the railroads on the plain begin to near the Rocky mountains the light atmosphere extends the vision and you can see farther than in the murky, moist weather of the east. An engineer from an eastern road is at first greatly deceived as to distances. At one section of the Burlington, in eastern Colorado, a head light can be seen forty miles. A tenderfoot would think it was not more than two or three miles away. "In this clear atmosphere," said an engineer, "when it seems that I am close to a headlight, I look to see if the reflection of the opposite light is on the rails."—Denver News.

To Prevent Smoke in Steam Generators.

The principle followed by Mr. Thwaite in his appliance for the prevention of smoke in steam generators consists in the admission of a secondary air supply through a wire gauge of a specific mesh, adapted to offer the requisite fractional resistance to the passage of such air, so as to accord accurately with the "pull" on the grate, which remains unaffected.—New York Times.

Wood Pavements as Germ Destroyers.

One of the objections against wood pavements is that they form a nidus for thousands of germs, but a foreign scientist states that from the semi absorbent and retentive nature of the wood it can be made to hold the disinfectant which will poison these microbes.—New York Journal.

The Retort Courteous.

To the editor of The New York Times:

I read in some of the morning's papers the disparaging remarks attributed to Mayor Grant in reference to my opinion as to the insulation of electric wires with some surprise, because I should have expected that professional courtesy among experts would have led his honor to treat my opinion as to the insulation of wires with as much respect as I should have given to his opinion concerning the pulling of the same. HENRY MORTON.

Stevens Institute of Technology, Hoboken.

Oh!

Doctor—Come here, my little man, and shake hands with me. You know who I am, don't you?

Reginald—Oh, yes, you are the doctor ma says gives bad medicines and charges a good price.—Once a Week.

Didn't Pay.

A lecturer that had for several minutes harangued his audience on the beauties of politeness, was interrupted by a man who arose and said:

"That's all very well, cap—mighty fine talkin', an' all that, but in this town politeness don't pay."

"You are mistaken sir," the lecturer answered, "politeness pays in any and all towns."

"No, you are wrong," the interrupter persisted, "it don't pay here. I'll tell you why. For some time I have been eating at a lunch counter 'round yonder, and I noticed that every man sat up to the counter with his hat on, and as I wasn't brought up that way, I concluded to take my hat off, and I did so."

"Well, but did any one object?" the lecturer asked.

"Oh, no, there was no objection, but, you see, some fellow stole my hat."—Arkansaw Traveler.

Sank Out of Sight.

A special from Springfield, O., says: A few evenings ago the family of Christopher Menzel, a German truck gardener near here, were awakened by the sound of a heavy fall and a subsequent violent trembling of the earth. Rushing out of the house they found that a large outbuilding had disappeared, and in the spot where it had stood was a cavity fully fifty feet in length and nearly that in breadth. A sound of water tumbling and rushing over rocks and down a precipice was distinctly to be heard, and in approaching the brink of the hole ice cold spray was to be felt. The outbuilding, which had evidently been submerged, had contained besides a large quantity of garden seed twenty or thirty sacks of oats and millet, five grown pigs and fourteen young ones, a buggy and a truck cart, all of which had disappeared before Mr. Menzel reached the spot. When morning dawned one of the pigs could be seen standing on a rock, the flat top of which rose above the dark, rushing current, and after some difficulty it was rescued. The stream, as nearly as can be measured, is at least 100 feet wide, although only about twenty feet of its width is visible and only thirty of its length.

Reporting by Phonograph.

Chauncey M. Depew's speech at Chicago marked a new era in the use of the phonograph. For the first time on an occasion of this kind in this country a speech has been taken down without the aid of stenographers. By the use of the phonograph the entire speech was given to the press two hours after it was delivered. It was a feat unparalleled in the history of newspapers.

The method used was that of placing an operator with the instrument in the flies. The operator repeated into the instrument the utterances of the speaker. These were recorded by the instrument upon a cylinder, which, when filled, was withdrawn and replaced by a fresh one. The withdrawn cylinder was then carried from the stage and placed in another instrument.

The second instrument ground it out through rubber tubes placed in the ears of swift operators on typewriters. Thus it was that the opening sentences of Mr. Depew's speech were in the hands of the various newspapers, and in some instances actually in type, before the closing sentences were uttered by the speaker.—New York Journal.

A Goliath in Stone.

Vinalhaven, Me., claims to have produced the largest stone ever brought to light. The Bodwell Granite company recently quarried a shaft of granite which is the largest piece of stone ever quarried anywhere, and if erected will be the highest, largest and heaviest single piece of solid stone standing, or that ever stood, so far as any record can be found. In height it considerably exceeds any of the Egyptian obelisks. The tallest of these, which was brought from Heliopolis to Alexandria by Emperor Constantine, and afterward taken to Rome, where it is still standing, is 105 feet 7 inches high, while the Vinalhaven shaft is 115 feet long, 10 feet square at the base and weighs 850 tons. It is understood that the company quarried this immense monolith of their own account, not having an order for anything of the kind.—New York Ledger.

The Wordsworth Cottage.

It may be hoped that the nonsensical scheme to spend £1,500 in purchasing Wordsworth's cottage at Grasmere will fail. Is there any use in setting up another of these melancholy show houses? A fee of sixpence is to be charged to every visitor, but I should think that rational admirers of Wordsworth would prefer to visit his grave in Grasmere churchyard, which can be viewed without any payment; and, after all, Rydal Mount is the place which is principally associated with the memory of Wordsworth, who would have preferred that his admirers should expend their spare money in helping to support the local association which is endeavoring to preserve public rights of way in the Lake country.—London Truth.

Saved by a Little Dog.

Henry Clay Turner, city solicitor of Wilmington, Del., owes his life to a dog, and a very small dog at that. Turner is troubled with defective vision and insomnia, and frequently walks the streets late at night. At 4 o'clock in the morning he fell off the wharf into the Christiana river, and only for the incessant barking of a little dog on the deck of a schooner he certainly would have drowned. The barking of the dog aroused the captain, and his peering and whining over the edge of the boat enabled the captain and a sailor to locate the man in the water, and in this way Turner was rescued just in time to save his life.—Exchange.

The total number of Congregationalists in Connecticut is 58,305. The number of churches is 298, and the expenses for the year were $618,838.95. The charities for 1889 amounted to $346,583.68, or $5.95 per member. The values of the churches and the land upon which they rest range from $800 to $175,000, the total being $5,011,151, and the average being $17,231. The aggregate of salaries paid by 300 churches is $395,646.

A sensation has been created in England by the discovery that an active slave trade is now being carried on in Madras, India, under the eyes of the government. It appears that in that British province a traffic in girls has been carried on as outrageous as in Constantinople and with just about the same amount of secrecy. It is said that high English officials are implicated in the nefarious trade.

A venerable trout was recently found dead of old age at its home in a well at Cairnmount, near Kelso, Scotland. The fish was taken from the Tweed thirty-two years ago and placed in the well, where the remainder of its life was passed. It was eleven inches long and had become very emaciated, weighing only six ounces at the time of its death.

PUBLIC MEN SPEAK.

OPINIONS OF IMPORTANCE FREELY EXPRESSED.

Most Interesting and Valuable Facts Brought Out in an Interview by Our Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 9.—The interviews with various prominent men which I recently sent you as to the apparently mysterious cause of the untimely and sudden deaths among them, has aroused a great deal of excitement.

Senators, representatives and heads of departments all declare that unless some steps can be taken to avoid the killing strains of public life, few prominent men would care to run for office. Traced to its source, it has become fully apparent that there is one great cause for it all, and that cause is the wearing strains upon certain organs of the body which cause their tissues to give way, and hence bring about sickness or sudden death. I continued the investigation, which was reported yesterday, by calling upon a number of leading public men.

Hon. Daniel Lockwood, genial and whole-souled, has an extensive knowledge of the public men of the country. He was well aware of the strains to which they are subjected, and the sudden deaths which have been so prevalent. "It would seem," he said, "as though there should be some way of preventing these things. Our grandfathers had family remedies that seemed to preserve health and prolong life, and it would appear as though some modern discovery should be found which would answer the same purpose for the added strains of modern life. I think if anyone has such a discovery it is certainly my friend Warner with his famous Safe Cure. I know of a great many people who use it constantly; and I have in mind one gentleman connected with the Government Printing Office here who, together with his wife, has occasion to be exceedingly grateful for the restored health and strength which Warner's Safe Cure has imparted."

Hon. H. S. Greenleaf was found in the House of Representatives. He said: "The exhaustions of public life are certainly very great, but so also are the strains of business life, of professional life, of social life. I have personal acquaintance with Mr. Warner, the discoverer of the celebrated Safe Cure, and I consider it far superior to any or all other preparations. Certainly any article as popular as that and selling as extensively as it does, must have unusual merit."

Probably the most remarkable case of a government official brought to death's door and then rescued is that of Mr. J. Henderson Wilkinson, a prominent attorney of this city. In conversation with me, he said: "Ten years ago I was seized with an attack of Bright's disease. I was then at work in the Treasury, here. I know it was Bright's disease for several reasons. In early life I studied medicine some little time. I knew from my symptoms what my trouble was, but I was also in the hands of my physicians. How badly I became, you can understand when I say that my hands became bloated and actually cracked open. My limbs and body would alternately swell and collapse. I could only creep across the floor. Finally my physician said to me: 'You are at death's door with Bright's disease. You may live a few weeks, but there is absolutely no hope of your recovery.' Although I was so very sick my friends did not desert me. Numbers of them called to express their sympathy. Col. Daniel A. Grosvenor, Judge Tarbel, Rev. Dr. Rankin, Col. Robert M. Douglas—more than a hundred prominent men—extended to me their sympathy. None supposed for a moment I could ever recover. Upon the advice of the Rev. Dr. Rankin, now President of the Howard University, I began the use of a preparation of which I had but little knowledge. I began to improve at once. I continued its use, nothing else, and I state to you to-day that I owe my life solely to Warner's Safe Cure, which rescued me from the grave after the doctors had abandoned all hope. I am certain that if men and women generally fully realized the wonderful power of this great discovery, and used it faithfully, there would be less sickness, fewer deaths, longer life and more happiness than at present."

I was greatly impressed with Mr. Wilkinson's earnestness of manner. Certain it is, that his statement is true, and that he is to-day in perfect health.

Senator Blackburn not only knows what wearing strains of political life are, but also of the power which the great discovery above mentioned has shown both in Washington and throughout the land. Indeed, he is a living example of its efficiency.

I saw Senator W. C. Squire, Mr. H. C. Clark of the First Auditor's Office, Captain J. G. Ball, and many others, and their statements amply confirmed all I had previously learned.

Mr. Abraham I. Hahn, well known in newspaper and army circles, said: "Personally, I have used Warner's Safe Cure, and consider it the best medicine in the world for the diseases it is recommended to cure. A member of my family has also been cured after several physicians had failed to do any good."

Mr. H. McNeil, a highly educated man, a graduate of a medical college, said: "I have frequently heard Mrs. Hahn mention Warner's Safe Cure, and its highly beneficial effect."

Wherever I went I found the testimony the same. It was generally admitted that the strains of public life in Washington were wearing and shortening to the life, but it was universally conceded that for overcoming these tendencies, for strengthening the vitality, toning the health and prolonging the life nothing had ever been known equal to the great remedy I have above described.

SKIN DISEASE.

What spectacle is more disgusting than that of a man or woman with a skin disease which shows itself in pimples or blotches on hands, arms, face and neck? It is simply impure blood. See what BRANDRETH'S PILLS did for a chronic case:

George Chapman, Pincening, Mich., says: "For four years I was in the Mounted Infantry in the U. S. Army, residing during that time principally in Texas. Almost all of that time I had a chronic skin disease, characterized by an eruption over the entire surface of my legs and thighs, arms and chest. The doctors termed it eczema. I had given up all hopes of ever being cured, when BRANDRETH'S PILLS were recommended to me. I concluded to try them, and I have thanked God daily since then that I did so. I used them for about three months, and by that time, was completely cured and have never had any trouble since."

WILL NOT LEAVE LOUISIANA.

What President Conrad has to Say About the Big Lottery.

NEW ORLEANS, August 26.—President Paul Conrad of the Louisiana Lottery Company was interviewed to-day about the dispatch regarding the company's attempt to purchase a location in the Sandwich Islands. He said: "It is a 'fake' sensation pure and simple, or a malicious concoction, designed, perhaps, to prejudice the company in the minds of the people of the United States by creating the impression that our business is to be removed from the legal restrictions and accountability it is now under by virtue of the laws of Louisiana. Were the Louisiana State Lottery Company to become a Hawaiian instead of a Louisiana concern, of course it would be practically an impossibility to enforce claims against it; whereas, being a duly chartered corporation of this State, it is amenable to the laws. Obligations can be enforced through the courts against it the same as against any lawful and responsible company."

"But what are the company's plans for the future? Might not their negotiations be carried on without your knowledge?"

"Scarcely, such vast sums as are talked of are not carried in one's vest pocket nor expended by one member of a concern without consulting his associates. The owners of the Louisiana Lottery are now scattered over the globe seeking peace or pleasure, according to their condition or taste. Mr. Morris, with friends, have been for weeks cruising about on his yacht, and I doubt if any one has communicated with him on business of any description. Certainly he is not giving himself any concern about lottery business, and I repeat there is simply nothing in this alleged San Francisco story except idle gossip so far as I know, and I think I know all the facts. The Louisiana Lottery Company will live out its allotted time as fixed by its vested rights, say a couple of years longer, doing its business here as it always has and abiding by the popular decision in the recent contest."—New York Times, August 27th, 1892.

RIGHT OR WRONG.

Which will ye have? It does seem as if some folks prefer to have the last condition of the liver rather than the first. They perpetually dose themselves with purgatives totally without virtue as alterative of liver trouble. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the successful candidate for the people's choice, and yet, popular and well known as it is, there are unfortunates who keep on trying the drastic remedies of former days. It is to the intelligent portion of the public that the well-known and long tried properties of the Bitters appeal. Reason should be guided by experience in the matter of medication. "The best guide to our feet is the lamp of experience," said a great patriot of the early revolutionary period, and the exclamation is pregnant with truth. For over a third of a century the Bitters daily has met with the endorsement of people suffering from liver complaint, malaria, constipation, rheumatism, debility and troubles accompanied by dyspepsia. Latterly it has declared itself and been thoroughly approved as a remedy for "la grippe."

Doesn't "look" as she ought—the weak, nervous and ailing woman. As long as she suffers from the aches, pains, and derangements peculiar to her sex, she can't expect to.

But there's only herself to blame. With Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, she's a different woman. And it's a change that can be seen as well as felt. The system is invigorated, the blood enriched, digestion improved, melancholy and nervousness dispelled.

With the "Favorite Prescription," all the proper functions are restored to healthy action. Periodical pains, weak back, bearing-down sensations, nervous prostration, all "female complaints" are cured by it. It's the only medicine for woman's weaknesses and ailments that's guaranteed to do what is claimed for it. If it doesn't give satisfaction, in every case for which it's recommended, the money is returned.

A PATCHWORK QUILT.

Have you anywhere about your house, amidst your counterpanes and comfortables, which you looked at five minutes before buying, perhaps, one of those old fashioned patchwork quilts made of the tiniest pieces arranged in the most intricate patterns, over which at least one pair of eyes were strained for days and weeks before quilting time came, and all those puffy little diamonds were marked out, amidst chat and laughter, by half a dozen ladies? Did you ever in childhood sit upon the bed and hear the history of the various pieces of chintz?

"That's a piece of your first colored dress; that I had when I was a girl; that was your grandmother's morning gown; that is a piece Miss S—— gave me." I have heard such a history many a time, and little pictures used to pass before my eyes with the words. I could see just how grandma looked in the morning gown. I could see myself a baby, taking toddling steps in the blue frock. It seemed so funny to have been a baby—when I was an important person of 5 years. It doesn't seem half so funny now, for I have begun to doubt whether I shall ever be anything else, and to know just how many big babies there are in this world.

Dear old patchwork quilts! We've lost something in losing them, I think, and probably Mrs. Mumford thought so, too, for whenever any of her children were found sitting with those idle hands, for which Dr. Watts declares that Satan always finds some mischief, she invariably remarked: "You'd better get your patchwork."

They always obeyed, those three little girls, Lucy, Ruth and Olive, and there were piles of quilts in the upstairs room where spare bedding was stored—quilts of many colors, quilts of only two, quilts with large, square blocks, and quilts with intricate patterns, like a Chinese puzzle; quilts that had been made by people in their nineties, and quilts that had been made by people who could not yet say: "I am 9 years old." Piecing a quilt was the first work and the last of the members of the Mumford family. I think an ancestor made some patches on board of the Mayflower. At least it was said so.

When a young person married a dowry of quilts had always been provided—always would be while Mrs. Mumford lived. When Olive was 15 she had been told that the white and Turkey red quilt which her great-grandmother had made was to be among her share, as the eldest daughter of the house. She laughed then and said:

"I shall always stay at home with you, mamma. I shall be the old maid daughter."

A year afterward she did not think this, whatever she might have said, for the year had made her feel that she was no longer a child, and she had met Harry Martin, who had put an engagement ring on Olive's finger, and if all went well her seventeenth birthday would find her a matron.

"Nothing like seeing your children settled before you are broken down yourself," said the mother, and thereupon began to teach Olive the higher mysteries of pastry. Plain cooking every girl of that family quite understood.

A lover always takes great interest in his lady's handiwork. Harry regarded all the little pieces of sewing which passed through Olive's hands with immense admiration, and the homely patchwork was just as fine in his eyes as anything else; and there was often much talk about the pieces, and once or twice he had cut them out after the cardboard patterns, loving to meddle with anything that she was busy with, in old true lover's fashion.

One evening, when he went in, he found the girl looking, as an artist might look at a rare old master, at a long breadth of old fashioned, flowered chintz.

"Mother has just given me this, Harry," she said. "It is like a gown of old Aunt Hepsiba's. It shimmers like silk, and see how fine it is. But fancy wearing such large patterns. Look! a butterfly on a bough, and a rose, and a butterfly on a bough again, and then another rose, like wall paper. The difficulty will be," said Olive, pausing to consider, "how to get the pattern into a patch without spoiling it."

"I'll help you," said Harry; and to work he went, and for a pleasant hour or two he kept cutting patches. A bud and a butterfly on one, a rose on the other, bud and butterfly and rose again.

"And he has not spoiled one, mamma," said Olive, in a tone of pride. "I'm sure I should have cut a dozen butterflies' heads off if I had tried."

So the young things laughed over their exploits, and then slipped merrily away to have their lovers' chat where nobody could listen.

It was the last. The next day Harry Martin was missing, and with him a large sum of money from his employer's safe. The news spread through the country town like wild fire. Harry was an orphan and the son of an old friend of the head of the firm. It was understood that they would be merciful, but his character was blighted forever.

No one doubted his guilt but Olive. She steadfastly declared him innocent.

Weeks passed on and there was no news of him—at least none that reached the Mumfords' ears; but one night when Mrs. Mumford went out to the cow house to see that Crummie was safe for the night some one came out of the darkness and called to her.

"Who is that?" cried the lady, her heart giving one great throb.

"It's I—Harry," said a well known voice. "Oh! Mrs. Mumford, let me see Olive."

"Harry Martin!" said Mrs. Mumford. "Oh! Harry Martin, you've made a sad home of mine!" And she broke into tears.

"And you all believed it at once?" said Harry, sadly. "I didn't think you would."

"Oh, Harry," said Mrs. Mumford, "Satan tempts us all. I'm sorry for you, but you can't see Olive. It's better for her you shouldn't. She was very fond of you, Harry."

"And she has turned against me, too, then?" said the young man.

"You sha'n't blame her, poor lamb," said Mrs. Mumford. "A girl like that can't have anything to do with one who has disgraced himself."

"Love is more steadfast," said Harry. "Evil reports could not have won me from Olive."

Then, without another word, he went away—and such a hold have homely things upon our memory sometimes that, as he went, he saw the pretty household picture he had last seen beneath the roof that now refused to welcome him, as plainly as we see things in dreams; his love, with her dark curls about her face, and the needle in her hands and the skein of thread about her neck; a bright lamp burning upon the table and on the other side himself cutting pieces for patchwork from a pasteboard pattern, and laying in a little brilliant pile squares and triangles on which were a rose and a butterfly upon a flowering branch, a butterfly on a flowering branch and a full blown rose, alternately.

* * * * * *

A western editor speaks of a wind that "just sat upon its hind legs and howled." Such a wind it must have been that was howling through the bleak Maine country twenty years from the night on which Harry Martin turned from the Mumfords' door and went his way alone.

The inn or tavern or hotel, whichever it was, which bore the name "T. Jolliver" upon its signboard, was not expecting any guests that night, but nevertheless one came to its doors—came late, too, as the clocks were striking 10 and people generally thinking of bed.

The guest was a man of 40, with a sad sort of face—a face with a story in it. But he was well dressed and evidently no poor traveler. He had supper in the best parlor, and meanwhile a fire was made in the best bedroom, in which, when he made his way thither, he found a buxom, youngish woman spreading an extra counterpane upon the bed.

"Good evening, sir," she said, turning toward him with a manner that bespoke the landlady. "I thought I'd see that you were comfortable myself. I never leave everything to chambermaids. When I married a hotel keeper I made up my mind to help him, and there's no such way of making guests feel discouraged as turning them over to help. And I've given you my prettiest quilt, too," said she, with a little laugh. "There's an honor."

The gentleman looked toward the bed. The quilt was a patchwork. It had a wide striped border, but in the center the blocks were all the same—bright chintz alternated with white—a butterfly on a branch, a rose, a butterfly on a branch, and a rose again.

The man took a fold of it up in his hand and looked at it as men do not often look at patchwork quilts. The woman bubbled on.

"We're great for patchwork in our family. Such a pile as we had of these quilts at home. Sister Ruth had twenty when she was married, but I had fifty. My other sister gave me her share, seeing that I married a hotel keeper, and she thinks she'll never marry. Oh, dear! There's a story in a good many quilts, if you did but know it; and there is a story in this. It's the last one Olive ever made. But I'm boring you, sir."

"No, go on," said the gentleman. "Go on, please."

"She was engaged," said the landlady, "and she was but 16. One afternoon she and her sweetheart cut out these blocks, the next they were parted. He was suspected of a crime—of robbery, sir, if I must say it—and she never saw him again. She knew that he was innocent. She said that all the angels in heaven couldn't make her doubt it, but no one else thought with her until a year had gone by, and then an old confidential clerk, who was trusted in everything, being caught in another theft, confessed to that which my sister's sweetheart had been accused of. The story he had told to his employers of being knocked down in the streets of New York, where he went that holiday afternoon, and being thought drunk, and put into a station house, and being ashamed to give his name next morning, and too sick to come home next day, was no doubt true. His employers advertised for him, but in vain. And mother owned to sending him away from the door when he came to see Olive. It is a sad story. Olive can't seem to like any one else, and the poor fellow was so fond of her. So that's the story of the quilt."

The woman stopped and gave a little cry, for the guest had flung himself upon his knees, and was kissing that patchwork quilt as lovers kiss their sweethearts' lips.

She gave another little cry in a moment, and knelt down beside him and put her hand upon his shoulder.

"Oh, dear! oh, dear!" she sobbed, crying hard herself. "Oh, dear! I do believe it is Harry Martin."

And it was Harry Martin, who had been to the far ends of the earth and had found gold, but not happiness, believing himself robbed forever of love and of fair repute, and who had returned to find both awaiting him through the means of that patchwork quilt, with its butterflies and flowering boughs and roses.

* * * * * *

"Lucy," said Olive to her sister a few months afterward, "now that we are going to housekeeping I want you to give me one thing."

"Anything on earth that I can," said Mrs. Jolliver. "I was thinking of a silver service."

"Oh, Lucy, dear," said Olive, beginning to cry for very happiness, "it's only the butterfly quilt that I want. The dear old quilt! Harry says we can't keep house without it, we both love it so."

"I've rolled it up for you already," said Mrs. Jolliver. "It seems to belong to you, Olive."

And so today Olive's last baby sits upon the brilliant quilt, and tries with his chubby fingers to pull therefrom the butterflies and roses.—Mary Kyle Dallas in New York Ledger.

ART OF BUILDING

As Exemplified by Three Handsome Structures Now Being Erected.

A COMBINED HOME AND SCHOOL.

England's Headquarters at the World's Fair.—Garden City's New Educational Enterprise.

Many men spend their lives in the pursuit of wealth, in order that they may make bequests that will cause their memory to be kept green by coming generations whom they sincerely desire to benefit. After death there is usually a protracted legal squabble, and sometimes the upsetting of the will, so that in a great many cases at least the exact wishes of the testator are not carried out, and instead of benefiting mankind his philanthropic intentions all too frequently serve no other purpose than to sow seeds of discord and incidentally to enrich a small army of lawyers.

THE WEBB HOME.

This view of the matter had probably occurred to Mr. William H. Webb, and he accordingly determined that he would insure the execution of his long cherished plans by carrying them out himself. And he has begun the work in a manner which should entitle him to the respectful consideration of other men of wealth whose intentions and desires lie in the direction of elevating humanity and alleviating its suffering. He now has well under way a building which will be known as Webb's Academy and Home for Shipbuilders. It is located on a beautiful plot of thirteen acres at Fordham Heights, New York city. He has set aside for this charity $1,000,000. Of this $400,000 will be expended in building and grounds. The remaining $600,000 will be utilized as a permanent endowment fund. The objects of the institution and the motive of the founder are clearly set forth in its charter, which says:

Free and gratuitous aid, relief and support to the aged, decrepit, invalid, indigent or unfortunate men, who within the precincts of the United States have been engaged in the craft of ship carpentry, building of marine engines or any part or section of the hulls of vessels or engines thereof, together with their lawful wives, will be furnished; furthermore, to furnish any worthy young man, a native or a citizen of the United States, who after a careful examination by the trustees shall have proved himself competent and of good character, with a free and gratuitous education in the art and science of marine architecture and engineering, both theoretical and practical, and also teach him the craft of ship carpentery, marine engine building and the allied trades, with free board and lodging, tools, engineering implements and materials while acquiring that education.

THE BRITISH BUILDING.

Mr. Webb is an old shipbuilder. He has turned out in his time many of the fleet wooden clipper ships which made the stars and stripes a familiar sight in nearly every port of the world. Having accumulated a fortune, and realizing that others have been less fortunate, to the extent of being now practically dependent upon charity, he has deemed it his duty, as it is his pleasure, to make some provision for the comfort of the luckless ones in their declining years. The educational feature of the institution was a happy inspiration.

Another building, differing in purpose, style of architecture and every essential particular from the Webb home, but scarcely less interesting, is the structure which Great Britain will have at the World's fair. The plans have recently been brought from England by Colonel G. R. Grover, of the Royal engineers. It will be an excellent specimen of an English half timbered residence of the century during which Columbus made his great voyage of discovery. While not at all beautiful on the outside, it will have an interior arrangement closely approaching perfection. The building will be constructed of red bricks, yellow terra cotta and massive timbers. The roof will be of red tile. Half timbered houses became fashionable in England during the reign of Henry VIII, between the years 1485 and 1509, when the use of brick was revived after a lapse of nearly ten centuries.

The cornerstone of what will be an interesting structure was laid a short time ago in Garden City, L. I. The new Cathedral School for Boys, as it is to be called, is a tribute to the memory of the late Mrs. A. T. Stewart, the widow of the dry goods multimillionaire. The style of architecture is exceedingly simple, but the building itself is unique in many respects. There is at least one feature which is worthy of imitation. The sleeping rooms of the pupils will be 11 by 8 feet each, and between every two bedrooms there will be a sitting room 15 by 12 feet in size.

The basement of the new school will be given over to a gymnasium and baths. The first floor will contain a library, parlor, public reception room, classrooms and several pupils' rooms and parlors. The second and third floors will be occupied entirely by bedrooms and adjoining sitting rooms for the students. The lecture hall, servants' apartments and study rooms will be on the top or fourth floor. The cornerstone of the new cathedral school of St. Mary bears the appropriate inscription: "Pro Christo et Literis Humanis, Anno Domini MDCCCXCII."

FOOLING THE CAMERA.

Painted Faces May Deceive the Lenses of the Photographers.

Some of our girls are learning how to be photographed beautifully and trickily. Have you observed and wondered, said one of the most celebrated of the camera men, how well the actresses manage to look when the eye of the camera is focused upon them? Well, I can tell you how to do as well as they do. First, choose an artistic photographer. No matter how much you know about what you want and what to wear, there are matters of view, and light and shade, for which you must depend absolutely upon him.

But he will not be able to advise you how to make up your face, and will probably object sweepingly to any such device. That is where he is mistaken. If he were wise he would know how to pose a girl, and then with a bit of white and a bit of black chalk make her lovely for that view. Several of the New York photographers do this now. The stock pose, into which photographers, on general principles, put victims over whom they don't intend to bother, is three-quarters, which is an abomination to most faces.

There is small chance for expression; the eye gets no show at all, and the contour of the cheek, which is seldom beautiful, except in children, is betrayed. You will find they have a rooted objection to full face positions. I have never been able to discover why. There is a tendency to raise one eyebrow higher than the other, or look cross eyed; but it is their business to look out for that and stop you if your features begin to wander around your face.

Now, in painting a face for photography the eyes can safely be made up a great deal. Put black under the eye, only don't let it be just one heavy black line. Shadow it out softly. Blacken the lashes as much as they will stand, only don't let them be lumpy. Increase the apparent length and sweep of the upper lid, by which the size of the eye is judged, with a line continuing the line of the lashes and a parallel one continuing the line of the crease that shows just above when the eye is open. Draw these only as long as can be done without their showing as lines.

An actress obtained a clever picture, in which the effect of very long lashes is given by lines, presumably shadows thrown by said lashes, painted above the eye, just under the eyebrows. Use red very carefully. Your lips probably need painting into an improvement upon their own shape. Do it softly and with very faint red. Red takes black. Look carefully and you will trace a hard line about the lips of many actresses' photographs. Sometimes you don't need to look carefully. If you want a dimple to show specially you can heighten its light and shade a little, but unless your photographer poses you so that the device does not betray itself the effect will be a failure.

Having thus accentuated your face don't disturb its arrangement by a smile or smirk or any other grimace of expression when the lens is opened on you. Otherwise art and nature will make a hopeless mess of your features. But if you have planned an expression in harmony with the make up, save it till the last moment. The operator is bound to grip the back of your neck with his monkey wrench, and if you hang on to your joyful smile all through that ordeal you will get something demoniac and wild to send to your friends.—New York Sun.

Ill Ventilated Churches.

Next to public conveyances the churches and theatres are the worst ventilated. I have in mind one bright June morning when I went to a church whose invitation to "Turn aside and rest awhile" had attracted me on a week day. The air of the congregation, devout and orderly, was congenial, the service every way attractive, but the air of the building, drawn from the subcellar mostly, was too much for a well worked brain to endure, and a splitting headache sent me out at close of lessons.

A walk in the fresh air relieved it, and I turned into a Fifth avenue church, hoping to get the benefit of the last half of a sermon. It is a church of great respectability and wealth, which prints its musical programme weekly, as for a Chickering hall concert. But whether the aroma which filled its aisles this Sunday was dead rat or dead Christian in its vaults, it was anything but the odor of sanctity. I did want to hear the closing numbers of its music, but I went out in a state of ocean passenger three hours out.

The obtuseness of the senses in excellent, stall fed, broadclothed pew owners with genuine old family catarrhal tendencies is something to marvel at. Churches ought to be open daily, if only to get the musty smell out—the odor a little boy described as "a prayer meeting smell," considering it peculiar to the place.—Shirley Dare.

An Electric Ghost.

A story which, whether true or not, is at all events "well found" is told in a New York paper. A contractor, under the stress of financial tightness, sold a house very much under its value. Puzzling his wits to recover his property, he hit on the idea of working on the superstitious fears of the new owner. Every night the purchaser heard wrappings and other strange noises, but the tenants were not disturbed. The noises had at last such an effect on the nerves of the frantic owner that he was in the act of dashing himself from the roof to the ground in a fit of insanity when some of the neighbors came on the scene and prevented him.

An examination of the building resulted in the finding of an electrical knocker, which had been hung over the roof and made available for operation on any desired point. This was the bogey which had driven the new owner out of his wits, and the contractor, on being confronted with the facts, confessed that he had adopted this method of frightening him into giving up the property.

Mrs. Frank Leslie's Idea of Work.

Work? Work is my god. Hard, unending, unrequited labor. I love it. Shall I tell you why? It is because it makes me forget myself, because it removes from me the dull, dead past with all its weight of sorrow and pain, and makes me strong again through its power to bless. I look on work as a great boon. Shall I tell you all in a word? Work—oblivion. Work—eternal self forgetfulness. Work—annihilation of selfishness, of time, space and eternity. And so I say, freely and gladly, Work is my god—blessed be drudgery!—Mrs. Leslie's Interview in Detroit Free Press.

The nerves of the human body derive their origin from the medulla oblongata and medulla spinalis; there are forty pairs of these nerves, nine originating from the medulla oblongata and thirty-one from the medulla spinalis. By "nerves" is meant a bundle of nervous fibers, which are innumerable, about 3,000 occupying an inch. It has been estimated that the human body contains at least 10,000,000 nervous fibers.

IN A QUICKSAND.

A Ponderous Elephant Swallowed by Treacherous Mud.

CALM IN THE MIDST OF DANGER.

Unavailing Sagacity of the Doomed Creature.—His Courage Never Deserted Him Until the Very Last.

"Did I ever see an elephant die?" said the keeper, repeating a reporter's question. "Well, I did and I didn't."

"How was that?" asked the reporter, feeling for his notebook.

"I did not see him actually die," replied the keeper, without the vestige of a smile. "He was living when I lost sight of him. He was swallowed alive."

"This is going to be a pretty stiff yarn, keeper," remarked the reporter, as a shade of disappointment crossed his face. "I guess I won't need the notebook. You saw him swallowed alive, eh? I always thought you were an antiquity, I never suspected you to be antediluvian. What did it, a megalosaurus?"

"Never heard of such a thing," said the keeper gruffly. "This was a quicksand."

"Oh, a quicksand! Go on, old man," responded the reporter, delighted, as he pulled out a pencil or two. "Tell us all about it."

"It was in India," said the old keeper, "where I learned a good deal about elephants, never thinking that it would come useful to me in after years. Elephants are common beasts of burden there, and on this day a heavily loaded one was crossing a shallow but broad stream by wading. The sagacious brute had refused to step on the badly constructed bridge which the natives had erected, but his instinct did not warn him of a dangerous quicksand which the water concealed, near the farther bank.

"I was attracted to the scene by the shouts of his owners, five Indian merchants, whose wares he carried from one bazaar to another. They did not know of the quicksand and could not understand why their elephant did not come out of the stream which he had almost crossed. When they learned the predicament he was in, their howls of grief and despair were earsplitting. I suggested that bundles of turf and branches be thrown to the elephant, and this was done. The old fellow, seemingly aware of his danger, took each bundle with his trunk and thrust it under water. Then with a mighty effort dragging up one foot out of the sucking sand, he would put it on the bundle of fagots and press it down. He got a lot of them under him in this way, with more skill and precision than you would think possible, but the soft sand took them all in and still let him down farther into its depths.

"His master procured a small boat and poled it out to him. Then they took all his load of goods off, put them in the boat and brought them ashore. This lessened his weight a good deal, but the sand was by that time up above his shoulders and soon his entire back was covered by the water. Only his head showed now, and still the old fellow was the only calm and collected individual in the crowd. I cannot help thinking of an elephant as a person; no one can who has been with them and witnessed their intelligence as much as I have.

"Collecting some floating boards which had been thrown out to him, he made a sort of raft of them with his trunk and rested his big head on them. It was no use, however. He was doomed and we knew it. Before long the water covered his mouth. Then he lifted his long trunk and curled it back over his forehead. The water filled his ears and he flapped them vigorously for a time. Soon it reached his eyelashes, and then his big burning eyes, just at the water's edge, took on a pitiable expression.

"They seemed to beseech aid and succor from those he had served so long and so faithfully, and his masters fairly groveled in the dust as they yelled to their gods and frothed at the mouth in their frantic Indian way of expressing sorrow. The tears came into my own eyes as I looked at the old fellow and knew there was no help for him.

"As the water covered his eyes his courage gave way at last, and he uttered a piercing scream of fright through his trunk and repeated it several times. It made my blood curdle, I tell you. Have you heard horses scream in a burning building? It is almost human. So was the old fellow's death cry. The end was close at hand. His long trunk still waved wildly above the water, but nothing else of him was visible. Its length grew less and less, and finally the water poured over the top of it.

"One more bubbling, choked, gasping scream threw the water out again into a high jet, but that effort was the last. The stream quickly filled up his only channel to the air above, and the old elephant was buried before he was dead. I could have watched a dozen natives swallowed up in the same way without feeling half as bad about it."—New York Tribune.

Cæsar's Ignoble End.

Julius Cæsar is by many considered the most remarkable man who ever lived, take him all in all. As a statesman, orator, writer and soldier, he continually aroused the admiration of his countrymen and astonished his enemies. He was a many sided man, and to whatever he turned his hand he succeeded in a pre-eminent degree. He overthrew Pompey, conquered Gaul and Britain, and, having finally made himself virtual dictator of the Roman republic, was offered a kingly crown. At this culminating moment he was ingloriously assassinated by some of those whom he looked upon as his warmest friends.—Yankee Blade.

A WONDERFUL PARROT.

Mlle. Jacquot, the Great Mimic, Prima Donna and Composer.

One of the best mimics in France, and a prima donna and composer of considerable ability, is Mlle. Jacquot. The great obstacle in Mlle. Jacquot's road to fame as a rival of Planquette, Strauss, Offenbach, Jakobowski, Meyerbeer, Czibulka and Balfe, is that unlike those celebrities she cannot put her improvisations on paper. Neither can she get the same air twice, exactly alike. The mademoiselle is forty-eight years old, but gives no indication of the fact that she is more than twenty. She was born in Africa, and is of a dusty gray color. She is equipped with a pair of very powerful wings and a fortissimo whistle. In fact Mlle. Jacquot is a parrot, the property of M. Nicaise, a member of the Anthropologic society, of Paris. He has owned her for nearly a quarter of a century.

The parrot can imitate any sound it hears, and when the day is bright and she is hung out in her cage at the front window for a sun bath, she is certain of a good audience in the street below, for her fame is known of all men (and street urchins) in the city. Mlle. Jacquot's star performance is her wonderfully realistic mimicry of a hog killing. This thrilling accomplishment she picked up while in the country, whither she had been sent for safe keeping when her master went off to the war to fight the Germans. This imitation Jacquot gives in such a truly artistic fashion that many strangers hearing it for the first time have been thoroughly startled by the piercing squeals and piteous grunts.

MLLE. JACQUOT.

Whenever M. Nicaise goes toward the window for the purpose of raising or lowering it the parrot perfectly imitates the sound which will ensue before her master has touched the sash. When he comes home in the evening Jacquot scents his approach at a considerable distance and notifies her mistress by calling, "Do Do!" at the top of her voice. She is very familiar with her mistress, whom she calls Marie. On one occasion the bird was in the sitting room near the fire when a coal fell out of the grate and ignited the carpet. Polly in a loud tone cried for "Marie," and thus undoubtedly prevented what might have been a serious blaze.

Mlle. Jacquot is fond of dancing, and whenever she is seized with a saltatorial fit she composes her own music, and, more remarkable still, although she never repeats an air twice, she invariably ends on the same key on which she began. The most pleasant feature of her performances is that she never sulks when asked to "show off." She is as proud of her accomplishments as a boy is of his first pair of boots. Jacquot does not like men and persistently refuses to be sociable with them, but to women she is the most approachable of birds. When her mistress punishes her for some misdemeanor she assumes a penitent look and moans in a way that is ludicrous in the extreme. Altogether she is undoubtedly the most wonderful parrot in the world, and certainly the most valuable, for it would take a small fortune to buy her from her present owners, who really regard her as "one of the family."

An Ancient Female Office Holder.

It seems that the emancipation of woman is an old story and not one of the triumphs of modern civilization. The noted scholar Halevy has complied from the cuneiform tablets discovered at El-Amura an account of an Egyptian governor of Jerusalem under Amenophis IV, 1,500 years before the Christian era. At that time Palestine was in a very disturbed state, overrun by the Babylonian hordes and misgoverned by the local satraps. At this early period Jerusalem was a populous city and contained a temple consecrated to the god Adar. The bureau of the royal archives was under the direction of a woman, and as that was a highly important charge the incumbency of a female indicates that the fair sex probably had a reasonable share of offices.

A Prominent Pennsylvanian.

Hon. Galusha A. Grow's connection with the national Republican convention has served to renew interest in a man for whose political future, in 1860, no prediction would have been considered too roseate. Although elected, after ten years of continuous service, speaker of the lower house of what was probably the most important congress which has ever sat in the United States, Mr. Grow was not renominated.

At the age of twenty-seven, when he succeeded the great Wilmot, author of the celebrated proviso which bears his name, he was regarded with much curiosity. He speedily convinced congress that he was not a green youth, but a man who had devoted considerable time to the study of the important questions of the day. He soon became a commanding figure on the floor, and when the Missouri compromise was repealed and he severed his connection with the Democratic party he almost immediately became the Republican leader, and in 1861 was elected speaker.

GALUSHA A. GROW.

Mr. Crow was born in Windham county, Conn., in 1824, but was raised in Pennsylvania, whither his mother, who had been left a widow while Galusha was still a small child, had removed. He is well off, having made considerable money in Texas railroad investments. It is said that in 1876 he was offered the Russian mission, but declined. He is unmarried and enjoys robust health.

EXECUTED AT SEA.

A Tragic Episode of the Early Days of the American Navy.

BARBAROUS STRETCH OF AUTHORITY

An Old Sailor's Recollections of the a Most Brutal Occurrence.—Judicial Murder of Three Boys.

"It is forty-eight years since I witnessed this tragedy on the ocean," continued the old sailor, who was spinning this yarn about an experience at sea. "You see," he ran on, "we were sailing from Liberia to the United States, and were keeping a sharp lookout for slave traders. Ours was a sort of training ship for midshipmen, not like those we have in these days, but one that was regarded as fit for educating young men in the practical details of navigation. I think there were little more than a hundred boys aboard on this voyage, and for some months we had enjoyed a pleasant time, without anything startling to relieve the monotony of a sailor's life.

"Our captain was not a popular man, and the crew often found fault with his orders, but no one ever dreamed that serious trouble was brewing until one afternoon late in November, when we were standing head in toward St. Thomas, in the Bermudas, about three days' sail away. All at once came the order from the captain:

"'All hands leave the quarter deck.'

"It was the general rule on shipboard that the gunners stood to their posts, even after the crew were ordered forward. So every man at the guns stood fast. In a second came the peremptory order:

"'All hands forward of the mainmast.'

THE ARREST OF THE BOY.

"As I moved off I noticed that all the officers of the vessel save one were congregated about the captain in the after part of the vessel. The absent midshipman remained at his post in the forecastle. A moment later another 'middy' was sent by the captain to tell this boy that he desired to speak with him. The two lads, neither one of them 20 years of age, walked aft together. The officers of the ship opened ranks to receive them, and immediately the commandant ordered the midshipman from the forecastle to be disarmed and put in irons. None of the ship's crew knew of the occurrence until later, when two of its number were arrested and double ironed. No one on the vessel save the officers knew the cause of these arrests.

"For a night and a day almost the silence of death hung over the man-of-war as it stood steadily on its course. The crew spoke to one another under their breath, and the officers walked the deck doubly armed, constantly watching us. The arbitrary authority of a naval officer at sea was to be invoked, and 120 souls on board, mostly boys fresh from the naval school, were to be awed by the scenes which were to follow.

When then the sentence of guilty was rendered to gratify the caprice of a vain officer the men were notified that they had ten minutes to live. There was no ceremony about the announcement and it was as brutally communicated as possible.

BRUTAL AUTHORITY.

"The young boy, 18 years of age, who was charged with being ambitious to raise the mutiny, capture the ship and turn it into a pirate craft and command it himself, never weakened, but his two companions asked for time to prepare for death. The lad asked to be released from chains long enough to write to his mother, but the captain refused, and then the boy dictated to the commander a letter to her, which the commandant never delivered.

"The first day of December, 1842, was a beautiful one. The tropical sun, especially in the afternoon, was tempered by a bracing breeze, and the ocean was as calm as a mill pond the first half of the day. The lad and one man were placed on the right side and the third on the left of the ship. The ropes were quickly adjusted—called whips in naval nomenclature—and all hands were summoned to the dread duty.

"It is the rule on shipboard that in an execution every living soul on board shall have hold of the whips when the condemned are swung off. Even the cabin boy and the cook are not exempt from this painful duty. This is exacted that no one shall be able to chide the other with having taken part in a death to which all were not a party. In this case the rule was enforced to the letter, because this was an execution of greater moment than any that had ever taken place in the American navy or has ever taken place up to this date. The officers were dressed in full uniform for the occasion, and the crew were clad as if for inspection.

"The ropes adjusted, the captain stood back and in a loud voice gave the command: 'Strike the bell eight! Stand by! Fire the gun! Walk away with the whips! Roll drums!'

SWINGING FROM THE YARDARM.

"As the last stroke of eight bells rang out upon the tropical air there was one surge of the whips and three bodies dangled from the yardarm and three men were strangled to death. A neck is never broken by such a method. I shall never forget the scene at this moment. The crew were speechless. So they stood and looked, as if bound to the spot. The awful spell was broken as we were piped down to dinner and started forward. The captain at this moment caught something of the spirit of the crew, and calling them back eased the strain somewhat by making a speech justifying the execution, and at the same time urging us to look upon the results of conspiracy and take warning by it. He then called for three cheers for the vindication of the flag, which were given without heart, and then the crew walked forward solemnly to their dinner, to discuss the execution as much as they dared.

"The bodies of the three men were allowed to dangle in the air, while all on shipboard ate and discussed the sad events of the day. The scene in the officers' cabin was especially striking. Around the table sat those who had condemned the three men to death, and at their head the officer who had ordered the execution. The details of the alleged mutiny were freely talked over, so one of the officers told me afterward. But it always seemed strange to me that a boy of 18 years of age, good hearted and full of mischief, should have scared the officers of a vessel carrying a hundred and twenty souls, most of whom he would have to throw overboard had he undertaken the task of capturing the ship and turning it into a piratical craft."—Philadelphia Times.

ANOTHER LOST BONANZA.

Plenty of Evidence in Arizona to Show Where Gold Was Once Found.

The legends of lost mines of fabulous wealth in Pima county are almost numberless, and it might be truthfully added, generally mythical. The old timers can tell of them by the hour, and a few persons have been shown glittering evidences in confirmation of the wonderful tales reluctantly recited with superstitious dread of the consequences of their perfidy by almost superannuated Indians and Mexicans.

That the precious metals were mined on a gigantic scale in the dim past the many remaining evidences already discovered fully verify, yet the investigation of those that chance has revealed has seldom proved financially successful. Old arrastres covered with the decay of centuries, and crude smelting furnaces that have almost returned to the dusty destiny of all matter, speak of industries once in active operation that history and even aboriginal tradition fail to mention.

Some of the traditions told sound like fairy tales, and one, however skeptical, cannot but become deeply interested in their recital. As a sample of the highly plausible, well authenticated and extremely seductive narratives, one related by Charles O. Brown, of this city, may be received with interest.

"Speaking of old mines," said Mr. Brown, "I have spent a good deal of time and money in hunting up clews, and one mine was actually found, and I can go to it any time. Out in the Silver Bell country I can take you to a mountain so full of tunnels and shafts that, if they were in good condition, you could travel through all day long and not reach the end.

"A number of old timers have visited it, and, judging from the vast work done there so long ago, they concluded that a great mine of some kind had existed there, which had likely been worked out. Many times has it been located, and though its walls, roof and floor were carefully scanned and sampled, the result, while showing some gold, was discouraging, assays showing from a trace up to several dollars per ton.

"Many years ago I talked with an old Papago Indian, with whom I was on very friendly terms, having often extended him little favors, about the gold and silver mines. In a burst of confidence he told me that a great many years ago, when he was a very small boy, the Indians at San Navier del Buc made weekly trips to a very rich gold mine. On Saturday night they returned with the products of their toil. The priest in charge of the mission kept a small table in front of the altar, covered with a white cloth, upon which the pious toilers placed their metallic offerings to the church.

"This table was often covered with golden nuggets, varying in size from a pea to one's fist, and it was a rich sight. After the usual service the priest would descend, and as he picked up each precious piece he would proclaim the name of the donor and afterward would call them forward to receive the special blessing of heaven. On the following Monday they would again take up their march in a northwesterly direction for the mines, and for a very long time this was repeated, until the priests were driven out of the country, when they abandoned mining entirely.

"The old Indian had one time gone with the miners, who followed a well beaten trail toward the Silver Bell country, and he saw them take out the gold. He agreed to show me the place, and out of curiosity I sent a man with him one day. They went out to the old mine I have spoken of in the Silver Bell country, and when they reached a certain gulch the Indian pointed to the top of the mountain and said he would find a shaft there, covered with cat claw bushes, out of which the most gold was taken. The man found everything just as the old Indian told him, but long disuse had filled up the shaft until it was nearly full.

"On returning, the old Indian could not be found. He had gone ahead and was not met for several days. He then said he did not dare to show the mine to the white people, and protested that he did not show it for fear the Great Spirit would take his life. He said the white man had found it, but he did not show it.

"I visited the mine afterward, but the work necessary to clean out the shaft was too great and too expensive to undertake, and it has never been touched."—Arizona Enterprise.

True Courtesy.

On one occasion Robert Browning's son had hired a room in a neighboring house, in order to exhibit his pictures there, and during the temporary absence of the artist, Mr. Browning was doing the honors to a room full of fashionable friends.

He was standing near the door when an unannounced visitor made her appearance, and of course he shook hands with her, greeting her as he had the other arrivals.

"Oh, I beg your pardon," she exclaimed, "but, please, sir, I'm the cook. Mr. Barrett asked me to come and see his pictures."

"And I am very glad to see you," returned Mr. Browning, with ready courtesy. "Take my arm, and I will show you round."—Temple Bar.

A Chinese Girl's Fall.

On Nov. 28, 1880, a schoolgirl named Ng A Soo fell from the roof of a four storied house, a distance of sixty or seventy feet. Her skull was fractured in several places and the right parietal eminence was deeply impressed. Enough to kill anybody, one would say, or at the best, to induce lifelong idiocy! Not a bit of it! In exactly six weeks Ng A Soo left the hospital, "seemingly" says the clinical report, "in no way the worse for her fractured skull."—London Hospital.

Occasionally the English viper will attempt to engulf too large an animal, and Mr. Bell found one on Poole heath the skin of whose neck had thus been bursted in several places.

WINNING A WIDOW.

EVERYBODY WAS AT THE WEDDING EXCEPT MISS BECKETT.

A Story of a Village Courtship from Indiana—The Wedding Excited a Deal of Interest Because the Groom Was an Undertaker, Who Had Buried Many.

Undertaker Samuel Pavey and Mrs. Sarah Milliken, who has been known in Aristotle, Ind., for twenty-five years as Achilles or Kill Milliken's widow, were married recently in the presence of everybody in this village except old Miss Beckett. Miss Beckett would have been present if she had not left her sickbed last week to call on Mrs. Milliken and inquire into the particulars of the engagement. After this imprudence she had a relapse and has been unable to leave her bed. She was propped up at the window all the afternoon, however, and saw everybody that went in or out of church.

Undertaker Pavey has buried all of the dead here for the past sixty years. He is now a tall, thin man, with close cropped white hair and smooth shaven face, and always dresses in black, as becomes an undertaker. Only the oldest citizens can remember when he looked any different from the way he looks now. His wife died forty years ago, and he has kept shy of all maidens and widows ever since. Years ago he was abandoned by the most persistent match makers as a hopeless case.

The widow of Kill Milliken is an estimable lady, a great maker of cakes for the church festivals and clever at crocheting worsted tidies, with a large number of which the chairs and the sofa in her front parlor are adorned. As there has been a good deal of curiosity about her engagement and marriage, she has consented to a public statement. She is a short, fat woman, with hair of a peculiar shade of yellow, which she got by using the hair dye which was advertised extensively in connection with her picture and letter of recommendation. She says that Mr. Pavey had never shown any signs of preference for her whatever, nor had she thought of him as the successor of Kill until ten days before the marriage.

About that time he knocked at her front door at half past 11 in the morning. It was a Wednesday and the Widow Milliken was deep in the dough, as that is baking day through this whole town. She looked out through the blinds of the window next the front door and saw who it was. As she had known Mr. Pavey so many years she just wiped the flour off her hands upon her apron and opened the door.

Mr. Pavey went into the parlor and sat down in the caneseat rocker with the green worsted tidy with blue ribbons through it. He set his tall hat carefully on the floor beside him and then said:

"Good morning, Sarah Milliken."

"Good morning, Mr. Pavey," said Mrs. Milliken. She said that she accented the Mr. so that Mr. Pavey might understand that she had noticed his not calling her Mrs. Milliken, as he was accustomed to do. Mrs. Milliken also says that she had a sort of premonition that something was coming.

"It can't be that the Gompers girl is dead?" she said anxiously.

"No," said Mr. Pavey. "But life is uncertain, Sarah Milliken."

"No one should know that better than you, Samuel Pavey," said the widow with one of her sly laughs.

But Mr. Pavey did not laugh as he went on:

"Sarah, you are getting along in years. You will soon be in need of my services."

"I haven't even sent for the doctor yet, and I won't need you till he's done with me," said the widow, bridling and pouting.

"Do you remember the first Mrs. Pavey?" said the undertaker, paying no attention to her and pursuing his own gloomy reflections.

"I was a little girl when she died," said Mrs. Milliken.

"Yes," said Mr. Pavey, "you had just married the late Mr. Milliken five years before. You remember that she had the best funeral this town ever saw, not excepting old Captain Lander's funeral, which cost five dollars, as I should know, if anybody. As I said, Sarah, you are getting old. If you marry me I will do as well by the second Mrs. Pavey as I did by the first."

"You always would have your joke, Sam," said the widow. "What will everybody say?"

"We are both getting old," said Mr. Pavey, still paying no attention to what the widow was saying. "Life is uncertain. There is no time to lose."

So Mrs. Milliken said, "All right, Samuel; whenever you say."

"Ten days is long enough. I'll see the pastor this afternoon."

Then they shook hands, and Mr. Pavey put on his hat and went away, looking quite gay and chipper as soon as the door closed on him, for he did not know that Mrs. Milliken was watching him through the blinds. Two minutes afterward she had called Mrs. Meek, her next door neighbor, to the back fence and had told her all about it. Ten minutes afterward by the clock on the court house Mrs. Meek, having left her bakery in charge of her daughter Lizzie, had on her bonnet and shawl and was bearing down the street, telling everybody she met.—Cor. A Rare Collection of Fabrics.

The collection of fabrics in the Drexel institute, Philadelphia, promises to become one of the finest in the country and of the highest importance to students. The series of Indian prints is remarkable and the Chinese embroideries comprise several notable specimens.

The Easier Way.

A boy of three and a half years, on hearing about a man who strained his back by lifting a barrel, said: "I should have thought he would have rolled it."—Cor. Babyhood.

Johnson's Peculiarities.

Johnson was a eulogist of the metropolis, and it was down Fleet street that he took his daily walk, which, owing to the series of tasks he made compulsory on himself, was a really curious performance. First, every post required to be touched as he passed it; next it was a point of honor to step exactly in the middle of each paving slab, and lastly, as he approached his destination, a series of graduated strides had to be employed in order to reach the door with one particular foot.—Hygiene.

HOW TO VOTE.

THE NEW BALLOT LAW AND HOW TO USE IT.

Text of the Law and Explanatory Cuts and Sample Ticket—The Law Said to Be Safe Against Repeaters and Vote Buyers—Read It Over and File the Paper Away for Reference.

The new Australian ballot law is now in force in this state, and every voter is interested in knowing how to comply with the law in casting his ballot.

A few municipal elections have been conducted under the new plan, and others are yet to be held before the final test of the law is to be made at the fall general election. To assist voters to a proper understanding of the way to do it, we print herewith the full text of the law and illustrations of the voting booths.

Cut No. 1 shows the boxes or compartments in which the voter prepares his ballot.

Cut No. 2 shows the position of the ballot clerks, voters in the stalls, and the officers of election checking the voters as they deposit the ballots in the box near the exit. Enter with the man to the right of the cut, and get a ballot from the gentleman standing at the end of the table, provided the young man at the desk finds your name properly registered in the great register open before him.

Then walk over to one of the open stalls and mark your ballot in accordance with your wishes, and pass in front of the group at the left, and announce your name to the judges of election. When the young man sitting at the desk finds your name properly registered, you are permitted to deposit the ballot in the box and pass out. That is all there is to it. Cut No. 3 shows the ground plan of Cut No. 2, with the positions of each election officer and voter indicated.

It has been claimed by some that the new law can be beaten, and that vote buying cannot be prevented by the experiment. The following editorial from the San Francisco Examiner seems to state the case about as fairly as it can be done:

"A correspondent of the Examiner warned the California electors of the method by which the Australian ballot system was beaten in Montana. It was a variation of the 'Tasmania dodge,' a voter being bribed to bring out a ballot by substituting a piece of blank paper for the official ballot that was given him on entering the booth. In the 'Tasmania dodge' the voter was supposed to vote the blank paper, in the Montana case to tear it up. The official ballot

"But a second check, still more valuable, prevents any illicit use of the ballot even if it is taken outside. When the voter enters the booth the ballot clerks mark the check number of his ballot against his name on the printed register. When he marks the ballot he folds it with the counterfoil or tag that bears the number of the ballot exposed, and delivers the ballot to the inspector. The inspector announces the name and number, the ballot clerks verify it from their record, and the inspector tears off the tag and drops the ballot in the box. If the ballot does not bear the same number as the one he received from the ballot clerks he cannot vote.

"The California ballot system cannot be 'beaten' in this manner except by the collusion of the election officers, challengers and watchers of both parties. It is hardly possible to secure so large a number of corrupt men together, or at all events men corrupted by the same side. Whatever vote buying is done under the system will have to be carried out under the 'assistance to illiterates' provision. This will be a possible but dangerous game to play. It will require the collusion of election officers, and will be readily detected by the watchers. The November election will show whether an amendment on this point will be necessary."

The sample ballot given is intended to show how to mark votes. If a straight ticket is voted, an X in the space at the right of the party for which the voter desires to cast his ballot is sufficient. But a split ticket requires an X opposite each name voted for. Only one office is on this ticket. All are arranged in the same manner.

BORN.

ANTON—At Lone Pine, October 19th, to Mr. and Mrs. John C. Anton, a son.

J. C. Anton of Lone Pine was in town last Monday.

Special meeting of Inyo Lodge 221, F. & A. M. to-night

Jack Wilson of Lone Pine spent yesterday and to-day in town.

S. P. McKnight of Bishop was in town a few days early in the week.

Mr. A. O. Collins came down from Warm Spring yesterday and is in town

Fred Holbert is feeding 250 head of beef cattle at Mr. Sanger's place at Alvord.

Miss Etta Naylor arrived at Independence last Monday to accept a position in the local telegraph office.

O. I. Mairs started for Mojave last Saturday to meet Mrs. Mairs who has been visiting at Benecia for some time past.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Bacon of Tulare county visited town early in the week on their way home. Mr. Bacon will return to Inyo soon.

The down train time has been changed to arrive a half hour earlier. The stage will now leave town for the station at half past two o'clock instead of three o'clock as before.

P. H. Mack Esq., arrived home on Monday's train from a short visit to San Francisco, and a canvassing trip through Alpine and Mono counties. He went to Bishop on Wednesday.

Last Sunday forenoon at 11:48 o'clock there was a sharp shock of earthquake felt in town. The temblor was preceded by a loud rumbling noise and shook things up considerably.

The most bitter, one-sided and persistent opponent of hydraulic mining in this State is the Sacramento Bee. This same paper is clamoring for the election to Congress of John F. Davis

Rev. H. J. Winsor and family desire to express their appreciation of the good-will manifested to them by the entire community last evening at the donation party, which was a great success and thoroughly enjoyed.

"I am in favor of free coinage of silver as soon as circumstances will warrant it." JOHN F. DAVIS.

"I am an earnest advocate of free coinage of silver without any further delay, and will work for it in and out of Congress, believing that it is for the interest of my constituents to do so." A. CAMINETTI.

If elected to Congress John F. Davis would follow the lead of ex-Speaker Reed on the silver question, or, in fact, on any other question. Mr. Reed was the leader of the opponents of free coinage of silver at the last session of Congress, and is now making speeches in the same strain.

In a legislative carreer of nine years in the State Legislature and in Congress, Mr. Caminetti has been a steady worker and an effective advocate for silver coinage. He is a native born Californian, knows the needs of the people as well as any man alive, cannot be bought, bullied or fooled into support of any schemes to enrich corporations at the expense of the people; and to let him be defeated in favor of a man whose election is advocated by the whole railroad gang and their tools would be gross folly.

If you believe in "protection and reciprocity" cast your vote for Harrison & Reid, and for every 10,000 paupers dumped on our shores during the past four years you will have 20,000 in the next four. The real "protection" the American laborer wants is what the Democratic party is pledged to do and will surely accomplish—that is, putting up the bars against indiscriminate and wholesale importations of European pauper labor by the too wealthy manufacturers who can afford to give their checks for $25,000 and upward to the Republican party managers who will continue to aid them in amassing their ill-gotten wealth.

Five Year's Work.

It is worth noting what Mr. Gustave Sanger has accomplished since he located at Alvord. When he went upon the place five years ago it was as dreary a piece of desert as is in the county. For miles around the country was all sage-brush and sand. The only improvement in sight was a small cabin and a ditch intended to carry water for 160 acres of land. Now it is very different. This season Mr. Sanger cut over twelve hundred tons of hay, nearly all alfalfa; of wheat he only planted what would be enough for his own use. He harvested a large amount of corn and oats. Potatoes, beets, carrots, turnips, cabbages and other roots and vegetables yielded heavy crops, and bins, pits and cellar are filled with these things. A fine young orchard of about four acres is already yielding fruit enough for home consumption. At least 150 head of calves were produced this year upon the place; an equal number were produced last year. Of colts about the same number were produced in each of the two seasons. Hogs enough are grown to supply all the hams, bacon and lard needed. A large number of chickens are are kept, and eggs are always plentiful. There is always abundance of milk and butter. During the busy season a good deal of help is employed. Therefore the home consumption of all those things is great. The water ditch had been improved from year to year as more land was brought under cultivation. At present a force of men are at work enlarging the ditch so that it will carry five thousand inches, the full quantity included in the location. Mr. Sanger expects that his hay crop next year will quite double the quantity cut this year. The average yield of alfalfa per acre for two cuttings is five tons. After the second cutting cattle and horses are turned in to pasture. Building improvements have been made as required. With rail connection to Los Angeles to stimulate improvement there would soon be hundreds of places like like Mr. Sanger's in the Valley.

Non Partizan Politics.

Senator Stewart of Nevada has been a leading Republican since the party was organized in 1856. When he found that the course pursued by his party in Congress meant ruin for his constituents, he did all he could to lead his fellow-members into wiser and more just legislation. But finding all his efforts in vain he preferred the welfare of his constituents to blind and stupid partizan politics that only serve the greed of the selfish capitalists who are rapidly and surely draining the life blood of the Nation. Without regard to party names the men of Nevada who must earn bread for their children by mining silver, are united, Democrats and Republicans, to return Mr. Stewert to the United States Senate. One of the most efficient and trusted fellow workers with Mr. Stewart is Mr. Caminetti. Every voter who is interested in free silver coinage and can give a vote for either one of these faithful men is blind to his own interest if he fails to do so.

Partizan Politics

The people of Nevada elected H. F. Bartine to Congress believing that he would work in the interest of free silver coinage. Mr. Bartine is a Republican and followed the lead of Mr. Reed in Congress on all questions, silver included. The miners prefer their own interest to partizan politics, and now they are to a man supporting F. G. Newlands, a strong advocate of free silver coinage, in opposition to Mr. Bartine. If elected to Congress Mr. Davis would be just such a docile partizan as Mr. Bartine

Donation Party

The donation party given at the church last for the benefit of the pastor, Mr Winsor, was a success, as shown by the quantity of household supplies deposited in the church entry. The church was well filled with people, the Independence Brass Band attended, and all seemed bent on having a pleasant social evening. An impromptu program was given consisting of songs by the choir, a recitation by Miss Jessie Smith, a short address by Mr. Winsor, song, "The Busy Bee," by Mr. Rasmussen and selections by the band. The ladies then served a lunch of good things prepared for the occasion, the choir sang another glee, the benediction was pronounced, and every one felt that a very pleasant evening had been brought to a close.

Boy Shot

An Indian boy about nine years old is in town under the care of Dr. Blair. A few days ago this boy went with another a few years older to hunt quail. They had but one gun, and the older boy was carrying it. The injured lad was a short distance in front of the other one. By some means the gun was discharged, and the whole charge of shot lodged in the body and arms of the boy. He is very badly wounded, and though much of the shot has been got out here, there is a great chance that the little fellow may die. The father and mother nurse the lad tenderly. They are evidently industrious and well-to do Indians.

Information Wanted.

The committee appointed by Mr. Caminetti to report on the proposed reservation and road to Mt Whitney will be glad to have any suggestions or information from any one having knowledge of facts that may be useful. Communications sent to W. Crapo, W. L. Hunter or C. Mulholland will have careful consideration.

More Emphatic than Ever.

Housekeepers who have been induced to try some new brand of baking powder in place of the Royal, "just for a change," become more emphatic than ever in their praise of the Royal.

The mail frequently brings over a thousand letters a day commending the great qualities of the Royal Baking Powder from patrons in every part of the world, many of whom have used it for over a quarter of a century without a single failure. It never loses strength. The last teaspoonful in a can is as good as the first.

The office ought to seek the man,
Alas! it pays small heed to
This rather brain-fatiguing plan,
It finds it doesn't need to.
